WYOMING is now a state, making forty-four.

MICHIGAN fruit crop is reported at about one half as good as usual.

PIERRE, S. D., is excited over the finding of rich lead mines near there.

ALGER, of Michigan, has been formally announced as a candidate for president in 1892.

CRAWFORDSVILLE claims it had a shower of small fishes and angle worms, one day last week.

IT IS believed in certain quarters that Spain is now willing to sell us Cuba for about 200 millions.

GENERAL CLINTON B. FISKE, the late candidate of the prohibitionists for president, died last Wednesday.

INDIANA'S state treasury is said to be about empty. Reasonable enough. Four years of republican state officers guarding it.

NIAGARA Falls will be utilized. Work has commenced that will enable them to use a part of the great water power to run electric motor power in Buffalo.

MEN in the leading binder twine factories, get on an average 90 cents a day. This is one of the industries that are protected so the workmen can get good wages.

THE negroes of North Carolina will hold a convention to prepare for leaving the republican party. They say they have been snubbed and given only menial offices.

WHEAT crop of Michigan is estimated at 18 millions, nearly all being in the southern counties. It will be about thirteen bushels per acre. Last year the crop was 23 millions.

THE postal subsidy bill provides that the government shall pay ocean steamers from $1 to $6 per mile for carrying mails. At the highest rate named, it would be about $35,000 for a single round trip to Europe.

THE same or similar corrupt practices are rapidly springing up now at Washington that flourished under former republican administrations. All sorts of jobs seem to have the sanction of high officials.

THE tonnage subsidy bill has passed the senate. It pays 15 cents a ton on the capacity of the ship on the first 500 miles traveled, 15 cents on the second 500 miles, and 30 cents for each 1000 miles thereafter.

COMPLAINTS about the incorrect census returns still come from every quarter. There seems to be a two fold trouble; incompetent enumerators on one hand and towns that think they are cities, when they are not.

YOUNG JIM BLAINE, who deserted his wife, was put out of the house of representatives last week. He was like any other citizen, without any right to be on the floor. His cheek took him in, but Speaker Reed ordered him out.

SENATOR FARWELL wants a few thousand dollars appropriated for an experiment to see if we can get a rainstorm by the explosion of powder or of dynamite. It would be a very nice thing if we could succeed in getting the rain when we need it.

TRACES of ancient canals around the Nile cataracts, have been discovered. It is believed these can be restored so as to let vessels into the river above, and so open up once more, the trade of the Soudan. It will be valuable to the English.

HENRY M. STANLEY, the explorer, was married in Westminster Abbey, Saturday. The costliest gift he received was an uncut diamond, presented by Andrew Carnegie, the highly-protected American iron master. So we all help to pay this one gift.

GENERAL JOHN C. FREMONT died at his home in New York City, Sunday afternoon. Only one son was present. His wife was in Los Angeles and could not reach him in time. The other son was also away. Gen. Fremont was the first republican candidate for president, making the race in 1856.

CYCLONES swept over various points in Minnesota and Wisconsin, Saturday. Many lives were lost. The worst loss of life was at Lake Pepin, a big swell in the Mississippi where an excursion steamer was sent to the bottom. There were nearly 160 on board, and very few were saved. The loss in life is now put at 150.

THE democrats in McKinley's, Ohio district have nominated for Congress, John G. Warrick, he was elected lieutenant-governor on the Hoadley ticket in 1883.

ABOUT the only difference a tariff on wheat would make for farmers is to increase the cost to them of the seed wheat they import from Canada and other countries.

THE treasury department reports a large increase in the consumption of beer, as shown by the stamps used. No report of the wine used by the president's family, as yet.

ROSWELL P. FLOWER, of New York, is favoring such a change in the constitution as will permit the people to elect their own postmasters and perhaps other officers heretofore appointed. It will be a sensible law.

IMPORTERS and manufacturers are objecting to McKinley's tariff bill, that increases the tax on wool and many other articles. Now if, as republican papers tell us, the tariff makes the article cheaper, why should they object?

ABOUT half a dozen subsidy bills are before Congress now. There are to be subsidies on sugar, on vessels, on carrying mails, etc. Suppose we extend this. Let the farmers be paid 10 cents for each bushel of potatoes, 20 for wheat, 15 for corn, and so on through the list. Let us all get rich taxing one another, and not tax the many to help the few.

WE are not exporting as much wheat as formerly, for our heavy tariff duties make other nations refuse to buy of us. Hence our market is restricted and prices keep low. Five-sevenths of what we send abroad, is raised on the farm, but this great interest is left at a disadvantage, in order that a few manufacturers may make bigger profits.

MANY New York Merchants came before the senate last week to oppose the McKinley bill. One said he was a protection republican, but did not want the tariff any higher. He even admitted that the foreign goods handled by his house, did not come in competition with any home article, as that special kind was not made here. Thus, he had to admit the fallacy of the claim that a tariff was to protect home industry.

GREAT BRITIAN will take her census in April 1891, as she always does this the next year after we take ours. It is believed her possessions all over the world will show 340 millions of which 39 millions will be on the home islands and 272 millions in India. She has acquired a number of countries since the last census, among them being Bechuanaland, North Burmah, East Africa, Zululand, parts of Borneo, Zambezi, and several minor states.

NEW YORK CITY enumerators made the census of the city show about 1,700,000. But when they figured it up at Washington, it showed only about 1,500,000. Republican officials don't seem able to use figures correctly. It also appears that about 70,000 of the city's people could not be reached, many of the wealthy being in the country or traveling abroad, and thousands of poor people gone into the country to get work during the summer.

CHICAGO had an unusual accident last Friday. A big steamer in the river was being unloaded, when there was a terrific explosion that tore her hull and decks and scattered wreckage and men in all directions. It was at first thought her boilers had exploded. But such was not the case. It is now known the explosion was caused by gas formed from the leaking of some barrels of kerosene. Over 40 lives were lost and many injured. The shock damaged buildings for several blocks around, and some at a distance were hurt by falling material.

WE are pleased to see that a number of our republican exchanges notice Judge McClellan's speech, though none of them seem inclined to tackle it. The Angola Republican from its "superior intellectual sphere," however, asks, 'Who wrote it?" We can assure his high mightiness, that no one in the district is better equipped for writing just such an unanswerable speech, than the man who did write it, Judge McClellan, himself. Certainly no one will claim that the editor of the Republican did it.

IT IS funny to see how the Civil Service Chronicle goes for Harrison about his false promises in regard to carrying out the law and rules in the civil service. Then it makes a comparison between Cleveland's honest ways and Harrison's dishonest ways. It all sounds well and is true. But the Chronicle and its managers deserted Cleveland and supported Harrison during the campaign, when they certainly knew as much of both men, as they do now. If the Chronicle ever doubted that Harrison was the worst kind of a spoilsman, it is the only institution in Indianapolis that ever felt that way.

THE unwisdom, not to say the silliness of a very few democratic and all republican papers, to magnify the political significance of Gov. Hill's recent visit to Indiana, must be apparent to every right minded democrat who cares more for the good of his party and the success of its principles, than he does for any mere personal interest. There is a long stretch of time before we really need a candidate for the presidency, and we have an abundance of excellent timber. So we need not hurry. Nor need the selection be affected one way or the other by the abuse or misrepresentation of any prominent democrat, no matter whether New York or Indiana is his home. We trust our brethren of the democratic press, will exercise their usual good judgment, bide their time, and we know they will all support the nominee, when they find out who he really is.

THE Silver Bill has been passed and signed by the president. It makes several changes from the present law. The secretary of the treasury can purchase as high as 4½ million ounces silver bullion a month, if the price does not exceed $1 for 27½ grains. In payment he is to give silver certificates. Two million ounces shall be coined each month until July 1, 1891, after which time only so much is to be coined as is needed to redeem the treasury silver certificates that may be presented for redemption. There is great deal of difference of opinion existing as to this measure, on the part of both democrats and republicans, though the most of the latter favor it, and the majority of democrats oppose it. Many democrats and several republican members wanted free coinage.

BLAINE, as Secretary of State, is not that howling success that his admirers claimed he would be. Just before he took the office, some unimportant things happened that Secretary Bayard disposed of in a reasonable-statesman-like-way, that did not suit the Dispatch folks then at the helm, who cried in an agony of spirit, "Oh, for one day of Blaine!" Well, we have had several days of Blaine, and nearly as many backdowns on the part of the supposed fire-eating statesman. His latest is in the Behring sea seal fisheries. He had given orders to seize every British vessel found taking seals. The Canadian fishing boats now go out armed, and England has notified Blaine, that if vessels are seized in Behring sea, there will be trouble. And Blaine backs down.

THE LAGRANGE STANDARD, re-asserts the silly statement it made last year, that if there had been no tariff on potatoes, farmers would not have been able to market a bushel of potatoes last year. It is surprising that in this land of free schools, newspapers and bibles, a man could be found so hopelessly ignorant. The Standard excuses itself by saying that at the time named, the market of Chicago was glutted with potatoes, and that if there had not been an import duty or tariff of 15 cents on each bushel brought into this country "Scotch potatoes would have been brought over on subsidized English ships" and would have driven our own potatoes from the market. It seems almost ridiculous to have to explain a condition of things as simple as this, but the Standard and its farmer dupe are evidently in earnest. Let us see. If the market of Chicago was glutted, as it may of been in fact, is it not likely they would still be able to compete with the dreaded Scotch potatoes that were raised on high priced land, were of an undesirable quality, had to be loaded on ships, brought 3000 miles across the sea, be unloaded, pay 15 cents duty on each bushel, and be again handled and shipped to the neighboring towns in which they were sold? Of course they could compete successfully, as usual. This competetion always exists on the east coast of the United States and probably always will. It was especially strong last year, as nearly a million bushels were imported and sold there during 1889. The boasted tariff did not keep them out, and that frightened farmer may look to some other cause for his ability "to market a single bushel of potatoes." The east coast will no doubt always be supplied with some farm products from abroad, and all the difference the duty will make, will be to add that much to the price the people there will have to pay. The potato market seldom or never seeks to supply the coast by potatoes drawn from the west. No man who is now raising potatoes, can remember the time when there was no duty on them. And yet his harvests have come and gone and he has sold his crop or failed to sell it, without any regard to the tariff, and till lately many have not known there was such a thing as a duty on potatoes. It is absurd to argue that under such circumstances a man is ruined or saved by a duty that effects so little. It would, however, be in order right here to remind republican editors, that they are telling how the foreigner pays all the tariff duty and that the final effect of any duty is to lower the prices. Let us apply this thin-spun logic to the case in point: The bushel of potatoes is sent over here by the Scotch farmer, who pays the handling, the ocean freight and the 15 cents tariff, the expense of landing here, and then sells the potatoes, at a lower price, than they would have commanded had it not been for the tariff. But, they were worth last year, say, 25 cents. Now what would the Scotch farmer make on his potatoes, if he lowers the market price, say to 20 cents? It is evident that when the editor claimed that a tariff raises the price, he had forgotten his instructions from headquarters, which are to tell his readers, that a protective tariff lowers the price. The right foot and the left foot of a republican editor don't seem to be acquainted.

The Wonderful Tower.

Notice to Contractors.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Mrs. Foster returned from Colon, Mich., Monday.

S. Beck, of Hudson, visited in Waterloo last Saturday.

Wm. Patterson is grading the north side of his pleasant home.

T. W. Rish, of Auburn, moved his family into Waterloo Monday.

Judge McBride, of Elkhart, was in town Thursday, returning Friday.

Last week Friday Frank Davenport, of Auburn, was over to our town.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crane, of Sedan, were in Waterloo last Thursday.

J. C. Cunningham, of Reading, Mich., was in town Thursday, of last week.

Master Paul Davenport, of Auburn, is in Waterloo for a visit of a few days.

Geo. Duncan has moved into the Judge McBride house with John Campbell.

Our old townsman, Mr. Armstrong, of Jackson, Mich., was in town Wednesday.

Rev. Rhetts, H. Bartholomew and Alfred went to Cedar Lake, last week Friday.

Miss Ollie Kiplinger and her little sister Cora are visiting friends at Stryker, Ohio.

Rev. J. N. Wilson spent Sunday in Waterloo, returning Monday to his home in Auburn.

Mrs. Clutter, of Ft Wayne, visited Waterloo last week. She is much pleased with her new home.

We understand a number of persons are training horses over at the fair ground, to get ready for the fair.

Mrs. McFarland, of Kansas, is here at this time, visiting her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Patterson, and other friends.

A few nights ago, burglars broke into Rev. Klotz's store, taking cigars and tobacco and perhaps other goods.

J. B. Taylor is preparing to move to Kendallville soon. We hear a family from Auburn has engaged his house.

E. Y. Williamson has been very sick for a week or so, but is now some better, with every hope that he will fully recover.

Rev. C. Eberly and wife, of Ohio, have been in town visiting friends. They attended the surprise party of Mr. and Mrs. Strow.

Mr. Wolf, who resides in the east part of town, died one day last week. He has, we learn, been sick for some time with consumption.

There was a birthday surprise party Sunday, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Strow, in the country. We have not learned the particulars.

Where has the summer gone? Only about six weeks yet when we may look out for frosts, and in two months tender plants must be housed.

Last Friday, Miss Myrtie Ball stopped a short time in Waterloo, on her way to Petoskey, Mich., where she has gone, to spend her summer vacation.

Mrs. Samuel Edge and Mrs. P. Fisher while out riding a few evenings ago, were so unfortunate as to have their buggy upset. No one was injured.

Miss Josie Metevier, of Bluffton, is in town visiting her friends. Eddie Metevier does not yet regain his health. The family are much pleased with their new home in Bluffton.

There are one hundred and fifty persons in town who are boarding. Many of these are working on the railroad. Numbers also who work on the railroad are married and keep house in town.

Monday, A. N. Wilson and wife returned from Ohio where they have been visiting friends. He and his wife, who was with him, got quite a joke on their son and his wife, who happened to be absent when Mr. and Mrs. W. arrived The latter set to work and got supper all ready, and when the son and his wife returned, they were surprised to find everything ready. Of course, the little joke was enjoyed by all.

BUTLER.

New buildings will soon fill the gap made by the late fire.

The recent warm weather seems to have induced considerable sickness.

Mrs. Oviatt Campbell is living with Mr. Campbell's mother, Mrs. John Wilson.

Mrs. Ann E. Helwig was very sick last week, but at this writing is some better.

William Nelson, formerly host of the Commercial house, has moved to Hamilton and opened a "wet" house.

A. G. Jones, our new postmaster, will materially increase the facilities of the office by adding several call and lock boxes.

The losses by the recent fires have all been adjusted, excepting R. M. Haskins' which will probably be disposed of this week.

J. A. Campbell was summoned to Akron, Ohio, last Sunday night, on account of the serious illness of his sister, who lives at that place.

Mrs. Ella (Tomlinson) Elden has returned from her wedding trip and again taken up her prosey place as secretary of the M. E. Sunday school.

The harvest in this vicinity is about gathered, and is a very fair one. Hay is unusually good, oats promise to be fair, and corn shows up rather poorly for this time of the year.

St. Joe had a lively little blaze last Sunday, burning three barns, well filled. all were insured, however. One of them belonged to Mr. Dilley, being insured in the J. A. Campbell agency.

The writer visited the family of J. J. Imhoof recently and found them in improved health. Miss Sarah is much better and Charles is able to work much of the time. Aunt Betsey is still herself, overflowing with welcome and hospitality.

NEWVILLE.

Aunt Julia Hex is still very poorly.

Blessed are they that are lame, halt and ragged without any flour. Abner.

The blessing of God rain on the just and unjust—but we do not get any. Cheesemaker.

It seems that a great many are sick. All for the want of rain, it has rained all around Newville.

Blessed are they that think they know everything, and find out they don't know anything. Arford Clique.

Mrs. John Wyatt is not expected to live from one day to another. Physicians claim she has Bright's desease.

Blessed are all the constables, who arrest a man on the Sabbath day, carry him over to the justice and bring him back barefooted. Hatch.

Blessed are they that get loaded down with to much budge, and while in a precarious condition shoot off up in Stafford and break their necks. Walter B.

Oh how terrible, a man missing from our town, anyone finding said man will be liberally rewarded. He is about six feet, red-headed, red mustache, freckled, hitches a little in his right hind leg, wore when last seen clothes all daubed with mortar. He has been mixing mortar for the new school house. Anyone finding such a one will be rewarded by a grass widow living north of town.

CORUNNA.

People are busy gathering grain.

Rev. J. W. Miller is smiling wonderfully over his crop of wheat.

I. N. Shippy is suffering from a strained knee, which is under the doctor's care.

The farmers of this vicinity are feeling much better over the recent rains and growing crops.

A man that sits on his reaper and halloos to his wife to bring him a drink, would make a good assessor for the republicans.

We were surprised to see Lynn Calkin stepping high and fast. He says a ten pound boy makes the whistle on his engine blow the tidings of a young engineer.

The little son of Samuel Lindsey was kicked by a colt on the head some time ago, and was unconscious for five days But by the skillful care of Dr. Bowen is so that he can be about some.

Corunna is a lively little town. It isn't every town that can organize a band and advance as rapidly as they do. With the old boys as leaders they will soon stand to the front again.

There was quite an excitement here lately. A farmer promised a lady money for the rent of a house which his hired hand lives in, and when she came after it, they both insult her. Such men want to look out a little, for there is a law for such things.

CONCORD.

Remember the picnic July 26.

Ed Boyle was at Auburn last Monday.

Frank Stafford was sun-struck last week.

C. Heller and wife were at Auburn last Saturday.

R. D. Gillson returned from Detroit last Thursday.

Rosa McClintock returned home from Churubusco Friday.

G. W. Draggoo was at Auburn last Monday, on business.

Mrs. F. Buchanan and son Harry were at Auburn last Friday.

R. B. Clark and F. Buckman were at Ft. Wayne last Saturday.

The social was largely attended, notwithstanding the stormy indications. Net profits almost $20.00.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard, of Fort Wayne, and Mrs. Davis, of St. Joe, were the guests of G. W. Draggoo, last Friday.

Auburn's Fair Ground.

By the kindness of Secretary Cal. Husselman, we took a look all over the grounds of the new fair yesterday. It would surprise most people to see the size and quality of the establishments now going up and the other improvements now being rapidly pushed to completion. In the first place, the road from the Eckhart factory, north to the grounds is being graded up in excellent shape, and made over seventy feet wide. At the grounds proper, we find a treasurer's office built at the point where tickets for entrance will have to be secured. Here too, will be done much of the work of entering articles, and at the early stage of the fair much other business will be done here. There will also be an office for the secretary, up on the grounds. The great attraction of the grounds just now is the wide strip of natural trees on the south side affording most welcome shade for these hot days. The ground here is cleared up so that people and teams can pass through in any direction they choose. There is even an ancient woods road, that the pioneers once used to wind their way to town, the future metropolis of the county. In the open grounds, by far the most conspicuous building is the great exposition hall. This is well built and strong, well finished up in four colors of paint, is 200 feet long and 40 feet wide, except the cross at the middle, which makes it 64 feet wide at that point. The cross is two stories high, the second story being reached by two broad flights of stairs. Above this part is a high tower and flag-staff, adding greatly to the appearance of the building and the grounds. The entire floor of this great exposition building will be in the form of a cross and be independent of the building itself. All around the entire structure, and flanking the floor, will be a raised space between the floor and the side of the building. This is also floored, and will be the space devoted to exhibits. It will be a little higher than the floor on which visitors pass along to view the exhibits. It will be seen that at least 600 feet in length will be available for exhibits, besides that in the second story of the cross, where we suppose the fine arts will be placed. The entire structure has no equal we presume, in any ordinary fair ground in the state. It is imposing and convenient. The grand stand 36 by 100, has first story up, and is being pushed on rapidly. The first, or ground floor rooms, will be used for check rooms, and rented out for the sale of various articles. The second floor will have the seats of the grand stand proper, rising from front to back, and the space 30 by 100 at the back part of this, and under the seats, will be the dining hall. The seating capacity of the grand stand is 800. The judge's stand is just opposite, across the track.

The track is finished up in fine shape, and is being rolled and scraped by a new sort of road machine, the invention of the secretary, and which does its work up to a turn. On the north side of the grounds are the cattle stalls, 100 in number, all nearly complete. In the north-east corner are the sheep and hog buildings. Each is 36 by 80 feet, and has two passage ways from end to end. The pens, 40 in number in each building and 6 by 8 feet are on each side of the passage, and will have the necessary doors and cross sections to make the handling of the animals easy. The rooms are open at the upper half of the sides making ventilation perfect, while the roofs are of the best material, insuring shelter from storm or sunshine. Near by is a space for showing stock and for packing away crates. Along the east side are 100 good horse stables, fitted with doors and ever convenience. These are for exhibitors. The speed horses will be in an immense barn running west from near the south end of the line of horse stables, and convenient to the track, so there need be no delay or trouble in bringing them out for races. This barn will have two rows of stables, all opening outside, giving fifty good box stalls. Near this will be the show ring for horses. South of the expo building, and not far away, will be machinery hall, and east of that, the poultry hall. A wide drive, or boulevard will lead from the main driveway entrance up to and around the expo building returning to the gates for exit, making it very convenient for the entry and exit of all kinds of vehicles. All near the entrance and ticket office is shaded by trees, both inside and out, while at the west of the track are several little groups of trees, most of them of a recent growth. In the middle of the ground, there is of course no shade, but the management will this fall put out groups of new trees at such places as experience will show them, they will be most needed. The managers and stockholders are to be congratulated for the energetic manner in which the vast work has been pushed. And a great part of the credit should be given to Mr. Husselman who has given the work almost his entire attention. To him is due much of the planning and details, especially of the buildings, and in this last, he is ably assisted by Sam Buss and a host of skilled employes. There is still much to be done, but we believe the way they are pushing things, the last stroke will be done before the fair opens.

DITCH LETTING.

The undersigned Commissioner, charged with the execution of the above work, hereby gives notice that he has divided said work into stations of one hundred (100) feet each, commencing at the source and numbering down stream. Also, that he will, at his office in Farmers' Bank Building, in Auburn, DeKalb Co., Indiana, on at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, proceed to let the contract by stations to the lowest and best bidder, for the construction of said ditch, according to the orders of said court, establishing said ditch, which contract includes the furnishing of all material and the labor of each station. Said work to be completed on or before the first day of November, 1890. The successful bidder or bidders shall enter into contract, and give bond with sufficient surety for the performance of said contract. The Commissioner reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

THOS. H. SPROTT, Commissioner.

The Camp Fire Companion.

The new paper, that has been noticed a week or so in these columns, was issued this week promptly on time. The first number was sent out July 15, as it is to be a monthly. "The Camp Fire Companion" is an eight page paper, six columns to the page, being the same size as the Dispatch. If we are to judge by this, the first number, it will be well worth its price—75 cents a year. It has an unusual amount of reading matter, and that, too, of a character, which we feel certain will be appreciated by the reading public, and especially by the orders for which it is primarily intended. The G. A. R. W., R. C. and the S. of V., will find it a convenient medium for the exchange of thought and for the recording of all events of especial interest to them. The general reader will find much that is attractive and valuable, and a look at the matter it contains will prove its pages hold nothing harmful. The young men who have this enterprise in hand are steady, industrious and capable, and we feel they should be encouraged. The COURIER wishes them success, and watches the outgoing of the first number of the Camp Fire Campanion, with a friendly interest, and a hope that the highest ambition of its projectors may be fully attained.

BY ORDER OF THE COMMITEE.

Could Not Get Shaved.

Ev. Watson brought a fellow up town the other day, and took him around to Charley Pommert's for a shave, but as Charley did not care to have his $150 chairs broken down, he took him into Geo. Grund's barber shop and introduced him, but George refused to shave him for there was too much hair there for 10 cents. Watson then took him down Main street, but we have not heard whether Youngling or Stahl took the job or not. Billy Baird could have done up the job to the Queen's taste.

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

WORTH CONSIDERING!

DR. J. S. PEMBERTON, OF ATLANTA, GA.

Is a celebrated dealer in Proprietary medicines of his own manufacture. He said: "I had a most severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which brought me down upon my bed and entirely incapacitated me for business. The disease appeared to have a lien on my system, and all I could do did not dislodge it. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was recommended to me, and I took it. In a day after beginning its use I began to improve, and in five or six days I was entirely free from pain and able to resume my business. I told Mr. Hunnicutt at that time, that his cure is the best medicine the world has ever offered for rheumatism." The Doctor refused $2500 to say as much for another remedy. This he said free and voluntary.

HUNNICUTT'S RHEUMATIC CURE

is a superb Female Tonic and blood purifier, rendering the skin soft and beautiful, removing blotches, pimples, etc., increasing the appetite and invigorating the system. Send for book of particulars, FREE. Address,

A "fossil forest" has been discovered in Scotland. Thirty or forty fossil trunks have already been laid bare, most of which are gray freestone. One of the trunks is at least two feet in diameter.

A Young Man Cured.

Mr. John W. Webster, of Atlanta, Ga., says: I was confined to my bed with rheumatism for a month, part of the time I was unable to move myself, nor could I be moved by any one without severe pain. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was reccommended to my father. He bought me one bottle, and when I had taken about half of it I was sound and well and am still so, and heartily recommend Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure. For sale by druggists at $1 per bottle. The normal school in Auburn begins July 21. No pains will be spared by Mr. Harrison and Mr. Coe to give every student full value for the time and money expended. Both are able instructors and their work is well known. Every young man or woman who can spare the time should attend this school. Those who desire to fit themselves as teachers, should be especially interested. If any find themselves behind the class in some branch, here is the chance to get caught up so as to be able to keep up next year. For information call on Mr. H. E. Coe, of this place.

I was in need of a friend, but realizing the full meaning of the word friendship, it was a task for me to choose out of the multitude. The same thing holds good when we are sick. We know we are in need of medicine, but find it hard work to choose from the mass. Do not jump hastily at anything that is offered you. The compounds you take oftentimes relieve the pain but injure the system in such a manner that you only find it out when it is too late. Loose's Extract of Red Clover is nature speaking to you through one of its servants. If you suffer from rheumatism, scrofula, eruptions, running sores, any and all blood disorders indigestion, sick headache and constipation or sour stomach, nature says to you, take Red Clover. Our Fluid Extract contains absolutely nothing but Red Clover and will not injure a baby. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Miss Allie Moree, has returned to her home in Noble county, near Ripley, where she will remain this summer. We are pleased to add her name to the list of those who read the COURIER at that point, and hope they will all have a pleasant summer.

Let everyone who feels an interest in improving the moral, social and intellectual advantages of our people, and especially of our young people, read the notice issued to-day by those who are promoting the "Reading Room" enterprise. Every citizen ought to help.

Word comes from a reliable source, that two of Auburn's young men were found last week in Jackson township, driving up to a farm house, fast asleep, and a considerable the sleepier for an over-supply of beer. Their team was cared for and they were "laid in their little bed" on the hay, till they were sufficiently recovered to go on their way. Such conduct will not help the business in which they were bound.

Postoffice receipts are on the increase. The greatest per cent. in increase is shown by Washington, New Orleans and Rochester, respectively. Washington City leads with 32 per cent. owing we presume to the vast army of republican office seekers writing to Benny and Wanny. Of the general increase, a part may be accounted for by the remarkable increase in circulation of the old reliable Auburn COURIER.

We inadvertently made some mistakes last week, in reporting the big parade. This was, as we said then, to be expected. We should have credited the display of house moving to Newton Sowle, who has followed that business here for several years past. It was his display, and when the parade stopped, he took the building east over the bridge, and the next day located it on a lot in the Baxter & Mcclellan addition. We also made a mistake as to the boy entitled to first prize in the sack race? Charlie Foltz, son of Ex Surveyor Foltz, of Garrett, was awarded the first prize, though we are told that owing to some dispute, another lad was given a part of the money.

Columbia City has increased her population 772 since 1880.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Kinney of Butler, Ind., were the guests of S. S. Potter and wife over Sunday.

Worth Coats is assisting to put up the new bridges. He is a hustler, no matter what he works at.

A. A. Penland started out threshing this week, and so, we presume did the other threshing machine men.

T. H. Leasure and wife of Mt. Ayr, Iowa, came back last Saturday for a visit with the old Auburn friends.

G. W. Kirkpatrick has been appointed administrator of his mother's estate, as will be seen by a notice elsewhere.

Mrs. C. H. Jackson and son returned to Angola Saturday after a week pleasantly spent with the many old friends here.

Mrs. Lawrence, who has been sick for some time, is so far recovered that she was able to attend service at the Baptist church Sunday.

Mrs. I. M. Johnson returned last Thursday, from her recent visit with her daughter, Mrs Morrison, at Chicago. The latter came back with her, and will remain here a few weeks.

Mrs. James Sherlock underwent the ordinance of baptism, Sunday evening. Quite a crowd of people assembled to witness the ceremonies, which were administered by Rev. I. M. Thomas.

Mrs. Gorgus, of Defiance, Ohio, was here last week, entertained by Sheriff Plum and wife. Mrs. Gorgus is matron of the Orphans' Home at that place, a post she has filled acceptably since the institution first started.

Angola Herald: T. R. Marshall, of Columbia City, this state was in town Wednesday looking up the title to Pleasant Island, Hamilton Lake, which he is contemplating buying and fitting up as a first-class summer resort.

The Kiblinger building has been treated to a fresh coat of paint, on all parts that could be painted such as the casing, pillars etc. The building has been up just ten years, and so well had the work been done, that it did not yet show signs of age. Steele & Son did the work on both occasions.

Charles Eckhart and wife will take a trip to Petoskey in a few days, and remain there two or three weeks. Mr. Eckhart has lately been on the road, almost continuously traveling in the interest of the Eckhart Carriage Co., which is now selling its goods all over the country. He feels he should now take a little rest.

We wish the census of our city could be postponed a few weeks. We could show a larger increase of population. These remarks were caused by an event that happened in the family of Mr. Diffendaffer last Wednesday, on West Seventh street, and the gentleman was not at home either. It was a boy.

Last Friday evening while Birdie Spitler was out riding, about twenty-two of the little boys and girls gathered at his home to celebrate his eleventh birthday. He was quite surprised, and received a number of presents. The young folks enjoyed a pleasant evening and went home wishing him many pleasent birthdays.

The great Kiblinger Carriage Works, though employing about 100 men, are behind with their orders and find it difficult to catch up. In some of the departments, the men begin at five in the morning and work till nine in the evening. Good work and fair prices, are what does it. And such establishments are what do so much good to build up a town.

Kendallville need not weep, when it reads that the windjammer of the Garrett Clipper did not like their races. He also took offense because the marshal made him come to time. The marshal called him "chucky." Well, he usually is "chucky" when he shows his head uptown in Auburn. The marshal should be complimented for catching on so quick. We presume he has seen "chucky" people before.

A letter from a friend in the country, speaks of a woman, who had to follow two men half around a wheat field to get a few dollars house rent they owed, and had repeatedly promised. He says, the point of this is that one of the men is a republican, and the other a prohibitionist, and one at least is seeking office. We advise all the people up that way to vote for the democratic candidates, and so be sure to be right.

The "children's day" exercises at the Church of God Sunday evening, were a complete success. A great deal of credit is due those who had the program in hand, for the untiring energy exhibited by them during the past three weeks in preparing it for execution. The little folks did admirably. The house was crowded to its capacity, and, but for the excessively warm weather, all seemed to enjoy the occasion wonderfully.

Wednesday of last week some Detroit parties, who evidently had a wager up, sent two baskets, containing ten each, of carrier pigeons, or "homing pigeons," as many now call them, to Charlie Weaver, with full directions how to care for them, and to set them free the next day. So, they were fed that evening, but given nothing the next morning. The baskets were opened at 8:30 a. m., and the birds at once scattered in every direction. But they soon came back, and flew about for some time, not seeming to be in a hurry to leave Auburn. They evidently liked our pretty town, with its lovely shade trees. At last two of them started east, and afterwards the rest of them gradually disappeared, the last one being seen about three quarters of an hour after they were liberated. At 12:30 a dispatch came to Mr. Zent, at the Wabash station, that the birds had all got home. It is singular how these birds will find their way home, which they invariably do, even when kept several weeks in a darkened room.

The population of Albion is 1,300.

The nickel social of the M. E. church will be entertained by Mrs. Albert Robbins next Friday afternoon. A large attendance is desired. A very cordial invitation is extended to all.

Prof. H. B. Brown of the Valparaiso Normal writes us, that school opened for the summer term with a big attendance, and that it will beat any summer term known there before.

NOTICE: All members of the missionary society called "Willing Workers" are requested to meet at the church Friday afternoon, July 18, at 1:30 p. m. Every member should be present, as we will prepare for an entertainment. Bring your money.

Chicago Herald: Vice-President Morton is going to spend a few days at Bar Harbor. He will enjoy the delightful sea breezes and the lovely sea views, and the name of the place will pleasantly remind him of his famous buffet—the bar harbored by the Shoreham.

Supt. Merica moved his old residence away this week to give place for a new one. The old foundations were so utterly destroyed during the heavy rains last spring, that the building could not be occupied in safety. Newton Sowle had the contract to do the moving.

Chicago Herald: It is said that the Harrison family are already much improved in health by their stay at the summer cottage. The pure air and sea breezes give tone and vigor to the body, and the thought that the cottage never cost them a cent gives joy and contentment to the mind.

Brown Clark, a former Waterloo boy, now a resident of St. Joseph, Mo., was here a few hours last week. It will interest many acquaintances of the family to learn, that all are prospering. Charley is traveling for a Davenport, Iowa, wholesale house, while Thad. and Lizzie are on a farm. All are married and prospering.

MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating clergyman, Elder Barton, in Richland township, July 8, 1890, Mr. Barton Tryon of Noble county to Miss Libbie Reed of DeKalb county. Also, by the same at the residence of the bride's parents, July 10, 1890, David E. Hoover and Roselda Haynes, both of this county.

Chicago Herald: The business of the late John Roach has just been sold to an English syndicate for several million dollars. Roach, it will be remembered, was that unfortunate shipbuilder and government contractor whose financial "ruin" by the Cleveland administration used to be so tearfully lamented by the republican organs.

There was another sad accident at Garrett last week. On Friday a man named Sanders, who had been working with A. L. Hollopeter, was run over by an engine, and instantly killed. The accident happened on one of the north tracks opposite the passenger house, at about ten in the evening. He was a man of about fifty-five years and at times addicted to drink, but we did not learn whether he had been drinking on that evening or not.

Our young legal friend John W. Mathews' has closed his partnership with Mr. M[illegible]y, and will continue the business alone. He has purchased Mr. Moody's library and office furniture, and will occupy the same office alone, except, that B. M. Hastings, the insurance man, will have a part of the room. Mr. Mathews is a young man of ability and integrity, and is well equipped for the successful practice of his profession. He is a graduate of the famed law school of Michigan, the University at Ann Arbor. We believe he will make his profession a success, and that business given him will be properly cared for.

The liberal-spirited editor of the Waterloo Press, kicks because a postoffice box in his town costs 50 cents a quarter, while in Lagrange they can be had for 40 cents, of the same kind. We advise him to either hire a team and go up to Lagrange and buy one of the cheap boxes, or else move over to Lagrange where things are cheap. If he can't do either of these, then the best thing to do, would be to write an article advising his readers to stand by everything in their own town patronize home institutions and use only home productions. In the meantime, Postmaster McBride could get a store box and place it on the counter for the Press to use at 25 cents a quarter.

Secretary Husselman has posted a few of the fine large posters secured by him for our fair and our people are beginning to realize that we will have one of the finest fair grounds in the state, and that the forthcoming fair will be a grand success. Everybody is talking fair. The race track has been worked with the new track scraper and is in splendid condition. Well experienced turfmen who have seen it, pronounce it first-class in every feature. The natural lay of the land made it possible for the engineers to lay the track perfectly level and the grading has been done according to the most approved rules. This, with the perfect manner of leveling and working will make this track one of the best in the country. The executive committe is pushing everything forward in a manner that shows that they are in earnest and that the fair will be a success in every department.

We welcome a Fairfield letter again this week.

Fairfield sent the first new wheat to market last Saturday.

There was "song service" at the M. E. church Sunday evening. The singing was excellent.

Mr. Smith delivered a most excellent discourse Sunday, at the Baptist church, and a very attentive audience enjoyed it.

Charles Bartels and wife spent Saturday and Sunday with friends at Spencerville. They report a fine rain while they were there.

Mrs. Wm. Parks was taken suddenly ill from heart trouble Tuesday afternoon. She is living with her daughter Mrs. P. W. Silver.

We see with pleasure, that Mr. Meese has been particularly successful with the Favorite Washer this year. It is a labor saving machine.

Remember the Gospel Temperance meeting in the court yard next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. See the program elsewhere in this paper.

The big gas regulator is now inclosed in a new brick wall, in place of the old wooden affair. The wall is eight inches thick and of very hard bricks.

We are glad to lay before our readers once more a letter from the lively little town of CORUNNA. That's what we want from every locality in the county.

C. A. Mead and wife go up to Lake James to-day to take a week or so of rest and visit relatives near there. We hope they may have a pleasant time.

Ezra Foltz and his son Frank are both employed in the Kiblinger factory. Mr. F., is a first-class painter and Frank is taking up the trade, doing at present the rough work.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained by Mrs. L. A. Culbertson next Friday afternoon. All are earnestly requested to come and bring their thimbles.

The workmen are now digging down for the new bridge on Ninth street. It will give room for a longer bridge than the old one, as this extends about ten feet further each way.

Henry Fulks and his little daughter were here Monday. He says he never knew a better June and July to get work done. No time has been lost, and work is pretty well caught up.

We had quite a talk with Sam. Pepple last week about his experience in Mexico. It is very interesting. He thinks Mexico would be a very good country, if the Mexicans were all out of it.

'Squire Ralston can get up the long flight of stairs leading to the COURIER office, with less trouble, we presume than any other man of his age in DeKalb county. A temperate life and straight democracy, will insure "a sound mind in a sound body" every time.

The Young Ladies' Mission Circle will give a parlor entertainment at the home of Miss Della Weaver, next Wednesday evening. The program consists of music and literary exercises, after which ice cream will be served. Mite 10 cents. All are cordially invited to attend MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating clergyman, Rev. W. L. Meese, in Auburn July 10, 1890, Charles K, Cochran to Miss Cass Morr, both of this county. The COURIER sends its best wishes for the happiness of the bride and groom who are among our worthiest young people.

MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating justice, S. W. Ralston, in Auburn, July 15, 1890, Mr. Charles E. Comesky to Miss Dora J. Myers. Mr. Comesky is a son of our friend Charles Comesky, and his wife is a daughter of our no less esteemed friend Henry T. Myers, all being residents of Jackson township, in this county. Both are worthy young people and the COURIER sends its heartiest congratulations.

One of the old settlers of Jackson township died Monday, July 14, and was buried next day, July 15. Mrs. Mary Bishop, relict of Willis Bishop, who had resided in the southeast part of that township since 1836. They came from Richland county, Ohio. Mr. Bishop died Sept. 22, 1875, and Mrs. Bishop resided with her son, James, on the old homestead till her death. Her age was 92 years and 8 months Thus passes away another of the pioneer band.

Auburn is becoming somewhat noted for its gradually increasing number of fair horse-back riders, and our ladies are getting to be quite proficient in the art. It is a pretty sight to view the beautiful steeds prancing up and down Main street, while the merry laughter of their fair riders delights the beholder and reminds one of "ye olden times." The practice is invigorating and brings a healthy flush to the cheeks of those who engage in it.

The following have purchased Balls' Favorite Washer of W. L. Meese, during the month of June, 1890: Joseph Rectenwald, Holmes Link, Geo. Ruffner, Mrs. W. H. McGiffin, Mrs. Wm. Snyder, Jacob Stamets, Mrs. W. I. Work, Mrs. David Rineholt, Eugene Carper, Calvin Grube, Albert Spurgeon, Byron A. Cooper, A. B. Walsworth, Harrison Long, Joseph Cochran, Elmer Haines, Henry Prosser, Charles Layman, John Pepple, E. F. Metcalf, W. H. H. Cornell, John Burns, John Miser, Mrs. Geo. Hoodlemyer, Mrs. John Hough, John Gardner, W. H. Speer.

The Auburn correspondent of the St. Joe News, had a well merited compliment last week for one of Auburn's business firms. It says: "Some idea of the labor performed by Perry Blodgett and his son James, in sprinkling the streets of Auburn, may be gained by knowing that during one of the hottest days toward the last of June, they hauled and sprinkled more than fifteen hundred barrels of water. Their service contributes largely to the health and comfort of town residents and it is no little relief to those who travel to be exempted during their stay in town, from the annoyance of filthy and poisonous dust."

Dry weather still continues.

John Stahl is here at present visiting his people and old friends.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Swander, a worthy couple of our Richland friends, were here yesterday.

J. B. Hoover is a good deal better. He was able to walk around a little yesterday morning. Good for him.

Miss Callie Williams, who has been sick so long, remains about the same. She is able to ride out a little.

Mrs. C. P. Urie is visiting T. J. Cuppy's family at South Whitley. Com, himself has returned to Burr Oak, their home.

Another lot of men were discharged this week at Garrett, amounting to a hundred or two. We have not heard the cause.

Mr. and Mrs. Post and little Wardie, their second boy, are up at Hillsdale and Baw Beese lake this week. They have relatives there.

We publish a most welcome letter from Rev. H. A. Sawyers, this week. All our people, as well as those at Waterloo, will be glad to hear from them.

Read our article about the fair this week, and get ready to make an exhibit. If you can't make an exhibit, come and see the exhibits made by others.

Ninth street bridge is all torn up, but let us hope the work will be pushed, so the bridge can be used for the fair. The seventh street bridge with its single roadway and long, difficult approaches, will hardly be sufficient to accommodate the big crowd that may be looked for if the weather is good. Hurry up the bridge.

C. O. Merica is here at present, and will canvas our town for a few days, for the Encyclopedia Brittanica, an excellent copy of that great work, but at a more reasonable price than offered before. We presume he will see all our people, many of whom used to know him well. He has just finished his junior year at Depauw University.

With the Press claiming to give the most reading matter, and the Dispatch calling itself the "leading republican paper, with the best morals, best grammar, cleanest proofs etc.," there don't seem to be much unoccupied ground for the more modest papers of the county. So, we will only add that our own paper, the good old reliable COURIER, the favorite of the people—the paper they will have to the exclusion of all others—is still modestly leading the procession, with the air of one conscious of superiority—of being born to lead—and still has an encouraging word for such of its competitors as are not too far behind to hear. And the same old $1,50 a year holds good, whether we get any rain this summer, or not.

Letter from Mr. Sawyers.

CAMERON, Mo., July 14, 1890.

ED. COURIER, and Friends of Auburn—I will now write a few lines, that you may know that we reached our western destination safe and sound. We arrived at Maryville, Mo., the Saturday after we left Auburn. Our trip was not as unpleasant as we thought it would be. The nights were cool and the days not uncomfortable. Mrs. S. was somewhat seasick most of the way, but our little fellows stood the trip bravely and in fact rather seemed to enjoy it. Lucile was at home with everybody and everything. There were great crowds of people in the union depot at St. Louis and she enjoyed it hugely, but it was a task for me to keep her from getting lost in the crowd. While there, she got one of her feet fast in a hole in the floor of the depot and we had quite a time in getting it loose. Mrs. S. and the children are with her people at Maryville, and are well except that Lucile has the whooping-cough. I left them last Thursday, and came on to Cameron, my new field of labor. My work starts off nicely, and I rather think there are good things in store for us here. I am also hopeful for Auburn, and expect to hear good things from my old church. I am glad you had a pleasant Fourth. We thought of Auburn, and would like to have been with you. We passed many places where they were celebrating, and in the evening witnessed fireworks in St. Louis and at various points in Missouri, that we passed through in the earlier part of the night. It is very warm and dry here. Rain is needed badly.

Regards to all as ever,

HENRY A. SAWYERS,

Pastor Presbyterian church.

THERE are five thousand women employed in the Government departments at Washington.

THE first steamboat on the Mississippi River was the New Orleans, built at Pittsburg in 1811 by Nicholas J. Roosevelt, from plans furnished by Robert Fulton.

SOME statistician has figured out that for the annual nourishment of 15,000,000 cows and 12,000,000 horses there is needed 30,000,000 tons of hay, 90,000,000 bushels of cornmeal, the same of oatmeal, 275,000,000 bushels of oats, 2,000,000 bushels of bran and 30,000,000 bushels of corn, at a cost of $450,000,000.

TWO YOUNG men in Iowa dressed up as ghosts and made a call at the house of a man who had always said that he believed he should drop dead at the sight of a spook. Queerly enough however, the effect was quite contrary, and he pitched into the boys and hammered them almost to death before he discovered that they were flesh and blood.

THE most celebrated modern library is the Bibliotheque Imperiale of Paris. It was commenced in the middle of the fourteenth century with ten volumes, and has been augmented by subsequent kings to the enormous number of 1,100,000 printed volumes, 150,000 manuscrips, 300,000 maps, 300,000 pamphlets, 130,000 engravings and 150,000 numismatic specimens.

A HISTORIAN who is compiling the letters, messages, speeches, etc., of President Lincoln for publication has finished a search of the records of the executive office of Ohio. But one autograph letter was found. It is dated April 23, 1864, and accepts the offers of the Governors of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin to furnish 85,000 troops for 100 days' service.

THE most aristocratic society of women in this country is the recently formed "Colonial Dames of America," composed of women who are descendants in their own persons of some citizen who established his residents in America prior to 1776, and rendered worthy service in the building up of our country. The objects of the society are social, patriotic and historical.

A STONE coffin in a tomb in Canterbury Cathedral on being opened was found to contain the body of an ancient archbishop, fully vested. It is thought to be that of Cardinal Stephen Langton, who sided with the barons in extorting Magna Charta fom King John. Although buried six centuries ago, the features were still perfect and the vestments quite sound.

WAKEMAN HOLBERTON, of New York, has completed a book that consists of a single copy that never will be duplicated. It is one of 101 quarto pages of imitation parchment, with every word an illustration of the story of the author's experiences with rod and gun on lake and in field and camp, done with his pen or brush. It was prepared by Mr. Holberton for his children.

IT is calculated that for $5,000 Wordsworth's old home, "Dove Cottage," could be acquired and put in perfect order, and a vigorous effort has been made in England to procure subscriptions for this purpose. The committee lately organized propose to make of the place a permanent Wordsworth Memorial, managing and maintaining it in the manner carried out in the Shakspeare trust at Stratford.

A FAMOUS physician says that bread should never be eaten with fish, because the presence of the former during mastication often prevents the detection of bones in the food until one is fairly lodged in the throat. Bread is never served with fish at his own table, nor does he allow the members of his family ever to eat them together. In eight cases out of ten death from the lodgment of bones in the throat, he delares, the accident has been made possible by the presence of bread in the mouth while fish was eaten.

WHILE boring for water near Bowling Green, Ky., Ebenezer Cathcart struck a well of fragrant oil. It is so clear as to be nearly transparent, of a beautiful pale pink color, and, while entirely odorless when cold, if heated emits a most delicious odor, resembling somewhat attar of roses. An experiment was tried with a small quantity to test its burning properties, when it was found to burn slowly but steadily, giving a soft, clear flame, shedding a faint rose-colored light, and filling the air with a penetrating fragrance.

LONDON Industries says that "a very common impression is that Hong Kong is only a mercantile emporium or center for the distribution of merchandise all over China and neighboring countries. It is, however developing into an industrial center of considerable importance. It has now three large sugar refineries, which have practically monopolized the trade of refined sugar in China and Japan. There are factories for icemaking and ropemaking; there is also a company which has a large establishment for supplying bricks and cement."

MISS KELLY, of New Westminster, B. C., imagined that she had broken her leg by a sudden movement of her limb. Doctors were called in and could discover no break, but decided to open an abscess which had developed near the supposed break. On an incision being made, a large-sized darning needle was found, the point of which penetrated the bone. The needle was removed and the young lady is rapidly recovering. She has been lame since childhood, and it is supposed the needle entered the foot then and gradually worked up to where it was found.

IN the happy days to come, electricity will break up the present factory system and enable the home worker once more to compete on living terms with great aggregations of capital. Great steam engines will undoubtedly become generally the sources of power in large cities, and will send out the electric wire in every corner of the town, helping the sewing woman at her machine, the weaver at his pattern loom, the mechanic at his engine lathe, giving every house the mechanical aids needed in the kitchen, the laundry, the elevator, and at the same time giving light, and possibly heat, in liberal quantity and intensity.

I HAVE known men to carry about unmeaning relics in my time, but Joe Gasper, a member of the Indianapolis Council, has a watch-charm which is enough to give some people the horrors, says a Vandalia conductor. Several years ago he had two of his toes amputated, and he preserved them in alcohol. The bottle was accidentally broken, and Joe threw the toes into a box in his garret. Not long since he ran across the toes and found they were mummified completely. Though greatly shrunken, their forms were still perfect. He had them mounted in gold in unique designs, and now wears them as pendants to his watch chain, and claims that the strange charm has brought him good luck.

JUST before starting out for a drive in Forest Park, Mr. Valentine Setting, a St. Louis jeweler, induced his wife to put his savings, $4,605, in her stocking. This sum was the accumulation of years, and he had little faith in banks, and feared to leave it in the house during his absence. During the ride, the money felt uncomfortable in Mrs. Setting's stocking, and she took out the package and placed it at the bottom of a paper bag containing oranges, and which she carried in her hands. As they passed through the park, the couple ate the oranges, and when the last one was gone, threw the bag away, losing sight of the fact that it contained all the money they had in the world. They did not discover their loss until late in the evening, and all attempts to find the package proved unavailing.

HOW LONG will a human body remain in the earth before it decays until it cannot be distinguished from the surrounding clays is a question as yet undecided by the scientists. Much depends upon the character of the soil and the different elements of which it is composed. In countries abounding in limestone, or, again, in regions thoroughly saturated with alkaline waters, human flesh will retain a natural color and firmness for an indefinite period of time. The bogs of Ireland have yielded up bodies fresh and natural as life that had been buried in their slimy depths for centuries. It is said to be an historical fact that the bodies of three Roman soldiers were found in a peat bog on the Emerald Isle, in the year 1569 A. D., fresh and life-like, although they had been buried almost sixteen centuries.

THE Sumterville (Fla.) Times tells a remarkable story in connection with phosphate excitement. It says that several persons have been drowned in the Withlacooche River while diving for hidden treasures. A colored man named Abrams is the last victim, and his case is a very peculiar one. A party was sounding the bottom of the Withlacooche for phosphate, and when an extraordinary bone or tooth was discovered Abrams would dive down and bring it up. At last he saw a very large bone and dived for it, but remained at the bottom. Waiting a few moments and seeing his body at the bottom, grappling hooks were obtained by his comrades and his body was brought to the surface. As he came up a huge horn or tusk was seen sticking out of his head. Upon examination it was found that, in diving, he had struck head first a huge elephant's tusk that was standing on the river's bed in an upright position. It had pierced his brain, causing instant death. The tusk was over four feet long.

Making a Reduction.

"Strawberries, ma'am?" queried the huckster, as she stood in the door of her house in Jersey City.

"How much?" she cautiously inquired.

"Twelve cents a quart, ma'am, or two quarts for twenty-five cents."

"Oh! Well, I'll take two quarts."

"Exactly, ma'am."

He measured out the berries, got his quarter, and drove off, while she disappeared in the house. She came out again after a couple of minutes, however, looked up and down the street, and not being able to see him anywhere she shook her fist in the direction he took, and exclaimed:

"I'll know him by the wart on his nose, and I'll get even with him if it takes a year!"—New York Sun.

THE LODGE INFAMY.

REPUBLICANS PROPOSE A REVOLUTIONARY MEASURE.

A Bold Step in the Direction of Centralization—The End of Popular Government and a Proclamation of Imperialism—It Is Hostile to the Liberties of the People—A Departure from the Old and Tried Ways of the Republic—Violation of the Constitution and a Partisan Intrigue—Able Argument in the House Against the Scheme by Judge Chipman of Michigan.

It is doubtful whether the present discussion is a practical one. We have a bill under consideration, it is true, but we may at the last minute have a substitute thrust upon us more hostile to free institutions in all its provisions than it is. The majority have reserved the right to do that. They cling to the policy of making every measure an ambush, every report of the Committee on Rules a surprise. I do not know, no man save one close to the throne knows, what is in store for us, what new mine may be sprung upon the liberties of the people. Sir, the bill before us, the subject of that bill, certainly ought to be discussed in the spirit of the purest patriotism. It ought not to be approached in a partisan spirit. The institutions of our country are not fetiches from which to threaten or cajole selfish rewards for ourselves and bad fortune for our political opponents. There are certain grounds of political action which ought to be common to all the people. The element of popular rights, like the elements of the Christian religion, should bear the same meaning to all men. Where these rights are concerned there should be but one. It is as clear as sunlight that no party is true to liberty which seeks to intrench itself in power by seizing the machinery through which the will of the people is expressed. No party actuated by honest motives will even attempt to do that. No man who has either the pride of intellect or the virtue of patriotism will dare go into history as the inventor or the aider of so great an infamy. No one on the floor here to-day will gainsay this. Yet a great change is proposed in our institutions. I will not call it revolutionary, because that word applied to an honest cause has no terror for Americans. Fanatics and knaves alike use it a sibboleth of their faith or a halo to their villainy.

But, sir, it is a great change, a departure from the old ways and the tried ways of the republic. It is a bold step toward consolidation; it is consolidation, centralization in its most positive form. It is the end of popular government. It is the final, authoritative utterance of the doctrine that people are unfit to govern themselves in the old-fashioned way through their local officers; that the township and county authorities, the executive and Legislatures of States shall be curbed and bitted and ridden by the irresponsible appointees of the most despotic and irresponsible officers of the government. It is a proclamation of imperialism. Why, sir, if these returning boards and supervisors derived their power from some source near the people and in which they have confidence, we might tolerate them because the power to make would be the power to unmake. But, sir, how will you reach the judges? Who can check a judicial officer whom the law authorizes to be a politician and whose party demands that he shall be a partisan. Sir, there are but two despotisms in this country to-day, the speakership of the House and the federal judiciary—the first omnipotent because the incumbent is expected ex-officio to be the leader of a party, and the last because of the power which may lay its hand on every man's person and property, and because of the respect which flatters the incumbent and shuts from his ear the just criticism of his conduct. I repeat, sir, how will we control the judges? What guaranty is there in this bill that they will be honest and unpartisan in the exercise of their appointive power? A constant temptation is set before them. Visions of political advancement will haunt their waking and sleeping hours. The great political prizes of the country will seem constantly within their reach. Judges have heretofore, without the aid of this great power, aspired even to the Presidency of the Republic. They are men like unto other men. You propose to put a great temptation before them. Sir, the functions conferred upon them by the bill are not judicial functions. They are essentially political, essentially partisan. They will drag the judiciary down instead of exalting them. The inclinations of judges in great public crises will be subjects of solicitude and they will be expected to stand with their party when "emergencies arise." It is certain that these duties are not judicial. They do not come within any purpose for which courts are instituted or for which we are under the Constitution permitted to institute them. I protest that the spirit of the Constitution is violated when functions of the executive nature are imposed on the judges. It is a confusion of two distinct departments of the Government, a distinct departure from the theory of the division of powers.

But there is another violation of the Constitution in the bill. The measure it proposes is not meant to apply universally or to be the absolute rule in the conduct of elections. You do not say that in every election district in the United States this machinery shall be set in motion. The voices of fifty or a hundred men, according to the locality, are required to extend the blessings of pure elections to the constituencies. Why is this? What secret of partisan intrigue is hidden under this provision? Why shall Congress abdicate its power to establish a rule to govern all elections and delegate it to a handful of men here and there through the country? What manner of men are they who may exercise this power of overturning the election laws in some of the States, while the laws of other States remain in force? What monstrous spectacle is this which will keep in force at the same time two different sets of election laws, one for Massachusetts, another for South Carolina? What manner of men are they who may do this great work? Of what moral standard shall they be, of what intelligence, of what patriotism? Will they come from the slums of cities? Will they be the mean paupers of ambitious leaders? Will they seek pure elections or partisan advantage? Will they be the champions of free representations or the instruments of a party which requires this machinery to retain domination of this House?

I know that appeals to the Constitution are irksome to some gentlemen on this floor. They believe in "meeting emergencies" when they arise, and the restraints of the Constitution fret their noble spirits; but, sir, that instrument, tried as it has been by the storm of battle, assailed by the lust of money and the lust of power, still stands in the path, the bulwark of the people against oppression. It prohibits you to do this thing. By its terms the election laws of all the States are the normal standard, not to be departed from except on the gravest necessity. Its spirit and interest demand that when you act you shall establish a general rule applicable uniformly to all the country, a rule evolved, not from party exigencies or local hatreds, but from the best interests of all the people. You cannot say—and if you constitutionally can you ought not to say—that one law shall prevail in one district and another in the next, that a State shall have two different rules of election procedure present within its border, one Federal and the other local, or within the same Congressional districts, and that different States may have different regulations. This sporadic kind of legislation renders partiality to sections and places easy. It makes the oppression of other sections and places easy. It savors too much of taking care of the salvation of the saints and providing for the damnation of the political opponent. The Constitution prescribes, above all, that whatever is done shall be done by Congress, and not by companies of fifties and companies of hundreds; that here and there only by your voices shall a uniform rule be proclaimed, which shall prevail in every precinct of every country and every district in every State of the Union. You must apply your law everywhere alike. The rural constituencies of the North must bear under it with Democratic cities of the North and the people of the South. That is the only law you have power to make. You cannot delegate your power. Nor can you aid this bill by saying that the rule is universal, that the fifties and the hundreds may apply to put it in operation everywhere. The fifties and the hundreds are unknown powers to the Constitution. The legislative power of this country is not hidden in the vest pockets of a few dissatisfied citizens or of political tools. It is your power, the power of the people speaking through Congress in the same tones everywhere, and imposing rules which no section is favored to escape and with which no section can be crushed to political death. Sir, your law is unconstitutional, and no man in this House dare try to make it constitutional by applying it to every part of the country.

I observe, sir, that the author of this bill shrinks from altering the registration law of the States by establishing a national law in its stead. I wonder at this forbearance. You endeavor to strike out with the dash of a pen the entire election machinery of the States. Why not take the next step of constitutional invasion and establish an added qualification to the right to vote? Why hesitate? You overturn the State election boards, you give power to appointees of irresponsible judicial officers to override the decisions of inspectors elected by the people. Why did you not complete the work by abolishing the State system of registration? You can never be safe until you do that. I know that this bill provides for espionage in the registration boards of the States, but why preserve even the form of respecting the standard of qualification set up by the States?

You will find that you cannot subjugate the Democratic cities of the North. They will continue to be Democratic, and the first fruit of the enforcement of this law will be greater majorities against you. I notice, sir, that in this bill you have a special eye on those cities. I notice, too, that you provide for domiciliary visits, that the homes of the citizen may be invaded by the men who are empowered to overturn the people's laws. I notice, too, that there is a peculiar venom in the bill against the naturalized citizens, that they are treated as suspects, and may be dogged by spies and harassed when they try to exercise their right to vote. You have all the machinery to annoy the citizen, to terrify, cajole, to corrupt him. You have at the public expense political minutemen to keep watch and ward of your partisan fortunes, an army of spies and informers under political leadership encamped at the hearthstones of the people. But, sir, you cannot, even by this engineering, subjugate this people. The tide has turned against your party, and even this audacious bill cannot stay it.

This bill means centralization of all power in the Federal Government, because it strips the people of their old security that they shall have fair representatives in this House. Is centralization good for any citizen? Will it bless the black man while it curses the white man? Can you do anything by this kind of legislation save to relight the fires of race prejudice? Those fires are burning low, and only yesterday seemed to be dying out, but you propose again to thrust the race question into political prominence and to make the negro the pawn on the board of your party necessities. Is this well for him? Will it raise him in either the social or political scale to keep him constantly the bone of contention between party strifes? What, too, let me ask, is to be gained by your proposed treatment of naturalized citizens? Under the law they are part of us, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, as much members of the national family as we are. Why treat them as objects of suspicion? Have they not been brave in war, law abiding in peace? Have not their brain and brawn been as beneficent to the country as yours? Why shall spies and eavesdroppers hang at their heels? Why shall the unclean progeny of your bill fatten on them and watch them as if they are dangerous to the public welfare? If there is need of Congressional interference to purify elections you begin at the wrong place. The great power of corruption to-day is money, the immense sums which control conventions and so poison the elective franchise at its fountain head, money contributed for the mysterious purposes known as "campaign expenses," and rewarded by the great and small offices of the Government. That is the imminent evil, that is the power which debauches, which reaches to high places and which is certain to reach your returning boards and to fill this House with its minions. Why not pronounce it a felony to contribute immense sums to defray "campaign expenses?" Why not tell the truth and declare the man who uses his purse to elevate himself to office or to gain a partisan advantage an enemy of the people and a traitor to free institutions? Here, sir, is a fertile field for the vigor of virtue and the zeal of reform. The plutocrat is the foe of popular rights, the champion of centralization. His interests are not the interests of the people. His ways are not their ways. He demands new ways, the ways of federal life appointees, dominating the old ways of elected election officers, the ways of one-man power, armed to overthrow popular rights, the ways of monopoly, of class legislation, of money despotism. If you are patriots, if you burn with zeal to bless your country, strike at him. Make his chief political virtue, the expenditure of money to influence elections, the greatest of civic crimes.

Sir, we do not need this proposed law. The people know we do not need it. Every honest town officer, every inspector of an election precinct in the country, knows that we do not need it. Our States are all prosperous, content sits at every hearthstone. There is no demand from the people for your fifties and hundreds, your life-long supervisors, your hosts of spies and informers, your political judges, your despotic returning boards. The ways of our fathers have been the ways of prosperity and freedom to us. We will not bow down to your strange gods. We will cling to the true faith of local control of our ballots and of our rights.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

The Buffalo Courier says that some time ago Senator James K. Jones asked C. R. P. Breckinridge, of the House Ways and Means Committee, to prepare for W. L. Terry, of Little Rock, a statement of the amount of tariff duties on a bill of goods bought by a representative farmer. In reply Mr. Breckinridge furnished an exhibit based on actual transactions between R. M. Knox, a merchant of Pine Bluff, Ark., and D. W. Branch, a farmer who bought the goods. Mr. Breckinridge explains that "this is calculated upon the basis of copy from the books of Mr. Knox and upon the rate of taxes actually paid upon competing articles at the ports as provided by law." The bill as it appears in Mr. Knox's books is subjoined:

The Key West and other domestic manufacturers of cigars from Havana tobacco are very much awake to the ruin of their business which would be worked by the McKinley tariff. The duty on their imported material it is proposed to increase from 35 cents to $2 per pound, which will amount to an increase of $39.00 on the quantity required for making a thousand cigars, or 4 cents on each cigar. Meantime, the customs duty on the imported cigars is to be increased only $30 per thousand, or 3 cents each. The increase of duty will be therefore one-third more on the domestic manufacture than on the imported. So much for the "home industry" under Mr. McKinley. The customer's part will be to pay 15 cents for a 10-cent cigar.

In the fiscal year 1889 we sold Great Britian $380,000,000 worth of our products, mostly agricultural. It is the object of the English protectionists to destroy this export trade, or as much of it as possible. Should they succeed our farmers would be mainly confined to the home market for the sale of their surplus and would have to reduce their production accordingly. For we could not find a market at home to take the place of the British market. Supposing that we stopped buying of Great Britain, as well as selling to her, we should reduce our imports by only $178,000,000, while our loss of patronage would amount to $380,000,000. Our net loss, therefore, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal, would exceed $200,000,000. This is the consummation toward which British protectionists are laboring.

In view of the foregoing facts there does not seem to be a great deal of intelligence back of the encouragement which American protectionists occasionally give to their British brethren. Both are laboring to "check imports" into their respective countries, and the consequence of the success of both would be the destruction of commerce between the two nations. But as Great Britain is a better customer to us than we are to her, the advantage of such a result would seem to be largely on her side—at least, if we admit the protectionist contention that the true policy of a country is to sell as much as possible abroad and buy altogether at home.

The British protectionists are numerically so weak that it may be a long time before they will be able to secure the adoption of retaliatory duties against this country. But the idea is growing abroad, and has already taken shape in Mexico and France within the past few months. Other countries are discussing the propriety of a similar course upon the passage of the new tariff bill. It may as well be understood at once that we can not pursue our policy of "checking imports" without provoking retaliation and injuring our export trade.

The merchant tailors of the United States are up in arms against the Republican party on account of a clause in the McKinley tariff bill which admits into United States ports free of duty $500 worth of clothing.

In St. Louis there is an organization of merchant tailors known as the Drapers and Tailors' Exchange, of which B. F. Myers, of the Myers-Luhre Tailoring Company, is President. Mr. Myers was seen by a Republic reporter and asked for some information on the subject of the grievances against the Republican party among the members of the tailors' exchange. He said that the merchant tailors all over the country had memorialized Congress not to pass that section of the McKinley bill, but that they had passed it in the House, notwithstanding the protest of the tailors. The law will be highly detrimental to the interests of merchant tailoring in the United States, and in the tailors' petition to Congress not to pass it attention is called to the fact that it virtually admits duty free $500 of value of wearing apparel by each person arriving within the United States, and further, that each such individual importation by adult male passengers would represent at least fifteen suits of foreign-made clothes, representing a value in the United States of at least $1,000; and further, that 25,000 adult male residents of the United States depart for and return from Europe annually; and further, that the average tourist's trip abroad is once every third year, and that the $1,000 worth of clothing will supply such tourist with ample clothing during the said period of three years and further, that the money value limit in the McKinley bill would induce those residents of the United States visiting Europe who do not now purchase foreign-made clothing to do so.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

IN the Senate, on the 8th inst., the conference report on the silver bill was taken up and Mr. Vest gave the reasons why he should vote against it. After Mr. Vest had finished Mr. Coke followed in the same strain. He proposed to vote against the conference bill because he preferred the law as it stands to one which he believed provided definitely for the cessation of the further coinage of silver. Mr. Sherman defended the conference report. Mr. Teller and Mr. Stewart followed and the debate continued to three o'clock, when the bill went over without action, the Senate passing from that subject to the memorial exercises in memory of the late Representative S. S. Cox, of New York. After addresses by Senators Voorhees, Sherman, Vest, Dixon, and Evarts, the Senate adjourned. In the House, the Senate amendments to the House bill for the admission of the State of Wyoming were concurred in. On motion of Mr. Carr (Wyo. T.) the Senate amendments were concurred in to the House bill for the disposal of abandoned military reservations in Wyoming. Mr. Cannon (Ill.), from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution providing that immediately after the adoption of the resolution it shall be in order for the Committee on Judiciary to call up for consideration the "original package" bill and afterward the bankruptcy bill—this order to continue from day to day for four days successively. Saturday the 12th inst., was made private bill day. Mr. Payson raised the question of consideration in favor of the land-grant forfeiture bill. The House refused—yeas, 80; nays, 97—to consider the resolution from the Committee on Rules. Adjournment then took place.

WHEN the Senate met on the 9th inst. Mr. Ingalls announced that as presiding officer he had signed the bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State. The bill now goes to the President for his signature. The silver bill was discussed until 6 o'clock, when Mr. Morgan, rising, obtained the floor, and an adjournment was taken. The House passed a resolution calling on the State Department for information on the negotiations between the Government of Great Britain and the United States on the Behring Sea question. The conference report from the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was then discussed, until the House, finding itself without a quorum, adjourned. Senators on both sides stated most emphatically that no arrangement had been made looking to the postponement of the federal election bill and the speedy disposal of the tariff bill with a view to an early adjournment of Congress. Senator Hiscock expressed the opinion that the session would not close before Oct. 1.

IN the Senate, on the 10th inst., Mr. Stewart offered a resolution (which was agreed to) calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to the selection of sites for reservoirs by the Director of the Geological Survey. The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the silver bill, and was addressed by Mr. Morgan in opposition to the report. Mr. Morgan spoke for three hours and was followed by Mr. Call, who also argued against the conference bill. Mr. Plumb next took the floor and defended the conference report. After further debate the vote was taken and the conference report was agreed to—yeas, 39; nays, 26. The Senate then adjourned. In the House dilatory tactics were indulged in on the part of the Democrats, and several hours were spent before approval of the journal could be had. The conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was adopted—yeas, 114; nays, 66. Mr. Funston (Kan.) submitted and the House passed the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill. The House then went into committee of the whole, Mr. Peters (Kan.) in the chair, on the land-grant forfeiture bill. A short debate took place, and, pending further discussion, the committee arose and the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 11th inst., Mr. Teller introduced a joint resolution declaring it to be the determined policy of the United States Government to use both gold and silver as full legal tender money; instructing the President to invite the Governments of the Latin Union countries and of such other nations as he may deem advisable to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bimetallic money and securing fixity of relative value between those metals. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill to establish a United States land court and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in New Mexico, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, and Colorado, such claims being by virtue of Spanish or Mexican rights. In the House Mr. Perkins, of Kansas, presented the conference report on the bill granting the right of way across the Mille Lacs Indian reservation to the Little Falls, Mille Lacs and Lake Superior Railroad, which was adopted.

IN the Senate a remonstrance of the Board of Trade of Jackson, Tenn., against the Federal election bill was presented by Mr. Harris, on the 12th inst. The Senate resumed consideration of the two shipping bills and was addressed by Mr. Vest. The tonnage subsidy bill was then passed—yeas, 29; nays, 18. The only exceptions to a strict party vote were that Mr. Payne voted with the Republicans for the bill and Messrs. Edmunds and Plumb with the Democrats against it. The vote was then taken on the postal subsidy bill and it was passed—yeas, 28; nays, 16. The Senate confirmed the following nominations: Col Alexander McD. McCook, Sixth Infantry to Brigadier-General; B. Bowser, to be United States Consul at Sierra Leone. Postmasters: Charles I. Rathbone, Fremont, Mich.; David D. Herriodd, Lenox, Iowa; John B. Hunter, Webster City, Iowa; Otis S. Lyman, La Grange, Ill.; Frank M. Charlesworth, South Kaukauna, Wis.; William W. Hayzer, Guthrie Center, Iowa; George M. Fowler, Wauwatosa, Wis., and Henry Gieber, Clintonville, Wis. The compromise silver bill went through the House this afternoon, as through the Senate, by a strict party vote—122 Republicans for and 90 Democrats against. Representative Morse of Massachusetts presented a petition of the National Division of the Sons of Temperance adopted at its forty-sixth annual session in favor of the "original package" bill. The House Committee on Appropriations reported an urgent bill making a gross appropriation of $635,200 to defray the expense of employing 463 additional clerks in the pension bureau, 163 in the record and pension division of the War Department, and ten in the Second Auditor's office. The object of increasing the force is to provide for the speedy adjudication of claims to be filed under the dependent pension act. The clerks are to be employed July 21 next.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach and Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

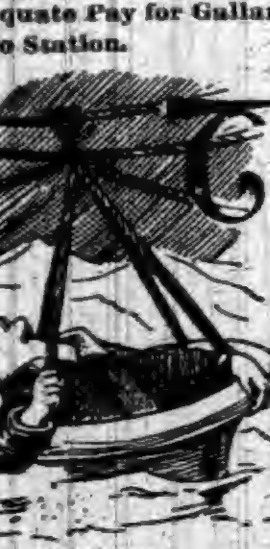
LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

THE PLAN UPON WHICH IT IS ORGANIZED AND OPERATED.

Its Great Service to Those Who Go Down to the Sea in Ships—Description of the Machinery and Appliances Employed—The Life-Car, Boatswain's-Chair, and Breeches-Buoy—A Student Crew—Inadequate Pay for Gallant Men—The Chicago Station.



A LIFE-CAR.

THE perils of "those who go down to the sea in ships, and do business upon great waters," have been proverbial since the days of Job.

In these days, when vessel building seems to have reached absolute perfection; when "iron is made to swim," in the form of mighty ships capable of carrying the entire tonnage of an ancient fleet; with hundreds of appliances for the prevention of disaster and for rescue in time of shipwreck, which were not even dreamed of a century ago; with all that human experience has taught and human ingenuity devised to lessen the perils of the sea, thousands of vessels are annually lost and multitudes of lives sacrificed to the relentless fury of the deep.

Though the bottoms of broad oceans are dotted with moldering heaps of Norway pine and English oak, once floating in the form of majestic ships, it is upon lonely reefs and desolate, rocky coasts that the greatest number of disasters occur.

From time immemorial, at many points along the Atlantic coast, hardy fishermen from rocky headlands have watched the stormy sea for signs of a ship in distress. Their solicitude was not generally prompted by a desire to succor their imperiled fellow creatures, but rather to profit by securing valuable property from the impending wreck.

At present a more vigilant watch is kept, very largely by fishermen. Unlike their ancestors, the wreckers, these men are constantly keeping watch and ward to the end that they may effect the rescue of the crews and passengers of ship-wrecked and distressed vessels, coming through false reckoning or stress of weather, upon the coast.

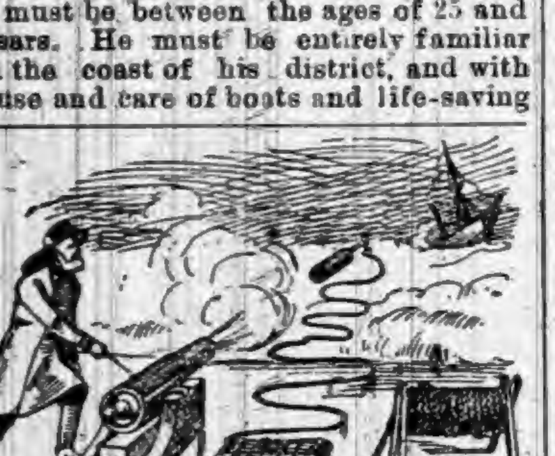
This service went into operation in 1871, and is an adjunct of the Treasury Department. The Superintendent, who is located in Washington, is S. I. Kimball.

The service extends to about 10,000 miles of sea and lake coast, and is divided into twelve districts, each under the control of a district superintendent, who must be between the ages of 25 and 55 years. He must be entirely familiar with the coast of his district, and with the use and care of boats and life-saving appliances. He acts as disbursing officer, paying off the crews quarterly. The salaries of the district superintendents vary from $1,000 to $1,800 per year.



SHOOTING THE LINE.

There are 218 stations in commission—166 on the Atlantic coast, 7 on the Pacific, 44 on the great lakes, and 1 at the falls of the Ohio at Louisville.

Each of these (with the exception of ten on the coast of Florida called "houses of refuge") is manned by a keeper and crew of from six to eight surfmen. In the aggregate about 1,400 men are employed.

The Chicago or Lake Michigan district contains twenty-three stations. Those on the west shore are: At Michigan City, South Chicago, Chicago, Evanston, Racine, Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Two Rivers, and Sturgeon Bay. The Chicago station is a very important one, and will be the one specially described.

Keepers, to whom in common parlance the title of "Captain" is given, must be between the ages of 21 and 45, entirely able-bodied, good sailors, well skilled in all the duties of their positions, and experts in matters of salvage.

They are charged with the responsibility of selecting crews, of which they act as captains, and whom they lead on all occasions of rescue. They are intrusted with the custody and care of all Government property at the stations, keeping daily journals and making monthly reports to the department. Keepers are also inspectors of customs, and look after all dutiable goods on board distressed vessels. The law constitutes them the guardians of all wrecked property until relieved by the owners or their agents. The Secretary of the Treasury fixes their compensation at not more than $800 per annum. Only two are paid this amount, the others receiving only $700.

The surfmen are enlisted like soldiers, after a rigid examination, for a term of one year, and generally re-enlisted as long as they perform their duties properly. They repair to their posts on the ocean coasts about the 1st of September, where they remain until the 1st of May, or later, as the weather may determine. At the lake stations they go on duty in April and remain until the close of navigation, in November or December.

The pay of the surfmen is fixed by law at not more than fifty dollars per month, and all of them do not even receive this. They, of course, sleep at the station, but no extra allowance is made for them. They are obliged to procure, at their own expense, a handsome uniform, and pay for their board, which at Chicago costs them $15 per month. Besides, they are only paid for the time of actual service, from six to eight months, and in the lake districts are turned adrift in the beginning of winter, the very worst time to secure employment. They are allowed for injuries while disabled from accidents, but receive nothing in the way of a pension from the Government. The keepers receive $700 per year, but as they remain in charge of the station during the entire year are in reality but little better paid. Efforts to induce Congress to grant them pensions upon honorable retirement from the service by reason of age or disability, and to provide for the widows and orphans of such as have lost their lives in the discharge of their duty have been made, but unsuccessfully thus far. The life-saving crews are men of good character, and being engaged in hazardous and humane work, ought to be better paid and properly pensioned.

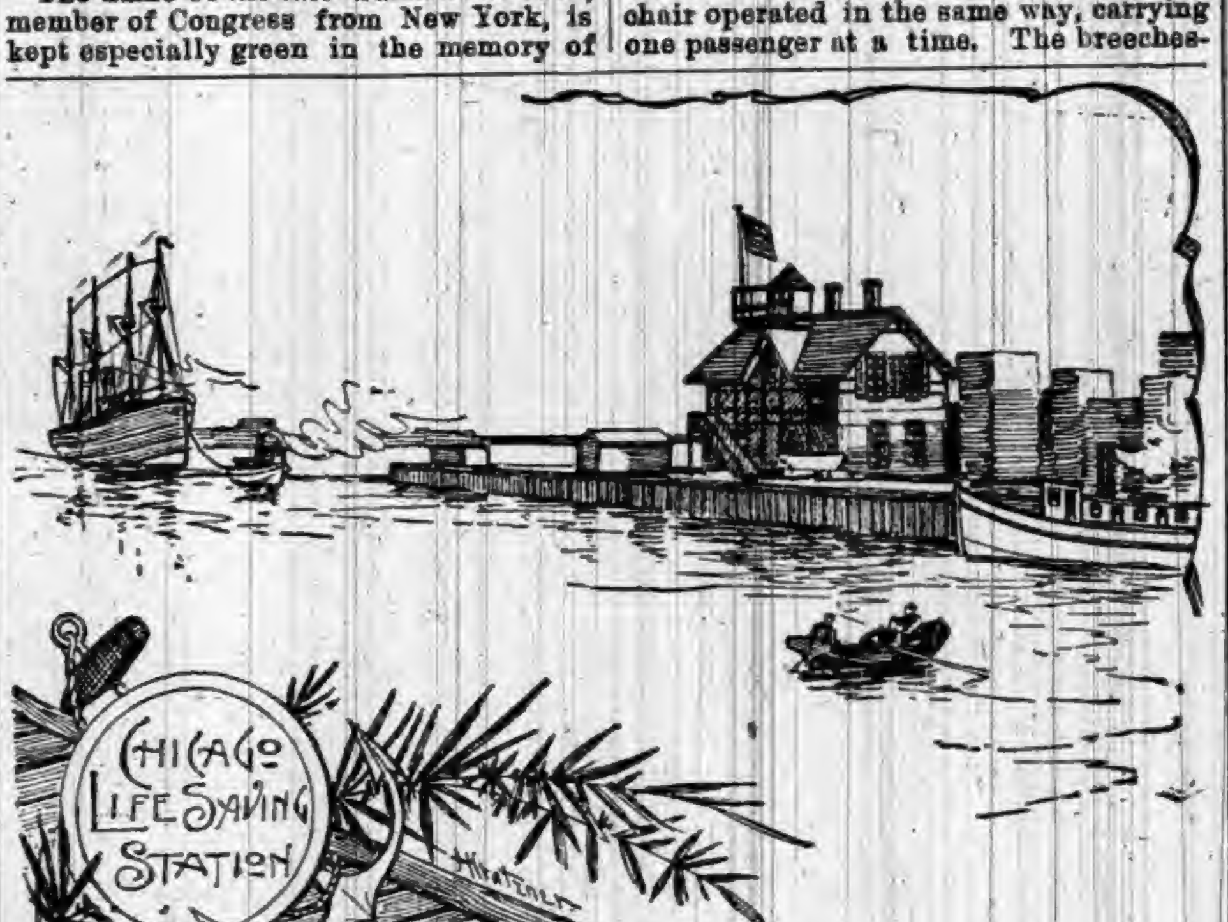
SCENE AT THE CRIB.

The name of the late Samuel S. Cox, member of Congress from New York, is kept especially green in the memory of all members of the service. He did more for them in Congress than any man now living, a circumstance which they seem in no danger of forgetting.

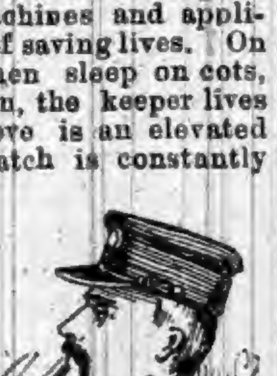


THE CHICAGO STATION.

The duty of the surfmen consists of daily practice and drill, caring for the station and all boats and other property, and keeping watch from an elevated lookout. On the Atlantic coast they patrol the shore at night, meeting and exchanging checks with the guard from the next station. This is a duty never neglected, and in cold and stormy weather is an exceedingly trying task, which has frequently resulted in the death of patrolmen. On the lakes no patrol is made except in "thick weather," and then only to a limited distance of from two to five miles, to a "key-post," where the patrolman registers his visit. In the event of his discovering a wreck or ship in distress he burns a large red light, of which he carries a supply, to notify the lookout at the station.

But the crowning duty of surfmen is in cases of rescue. Then it is that these skilled and careful, yet daring, men "take their lives in their hands" and go forth to save imperiled fellow creatures. This cannot be understood without a description of the various appliances employed for that purpose. This will be made by a reference to the Chicago station, from which the artist has made his designs, and which is a fair representative of the lake stations.

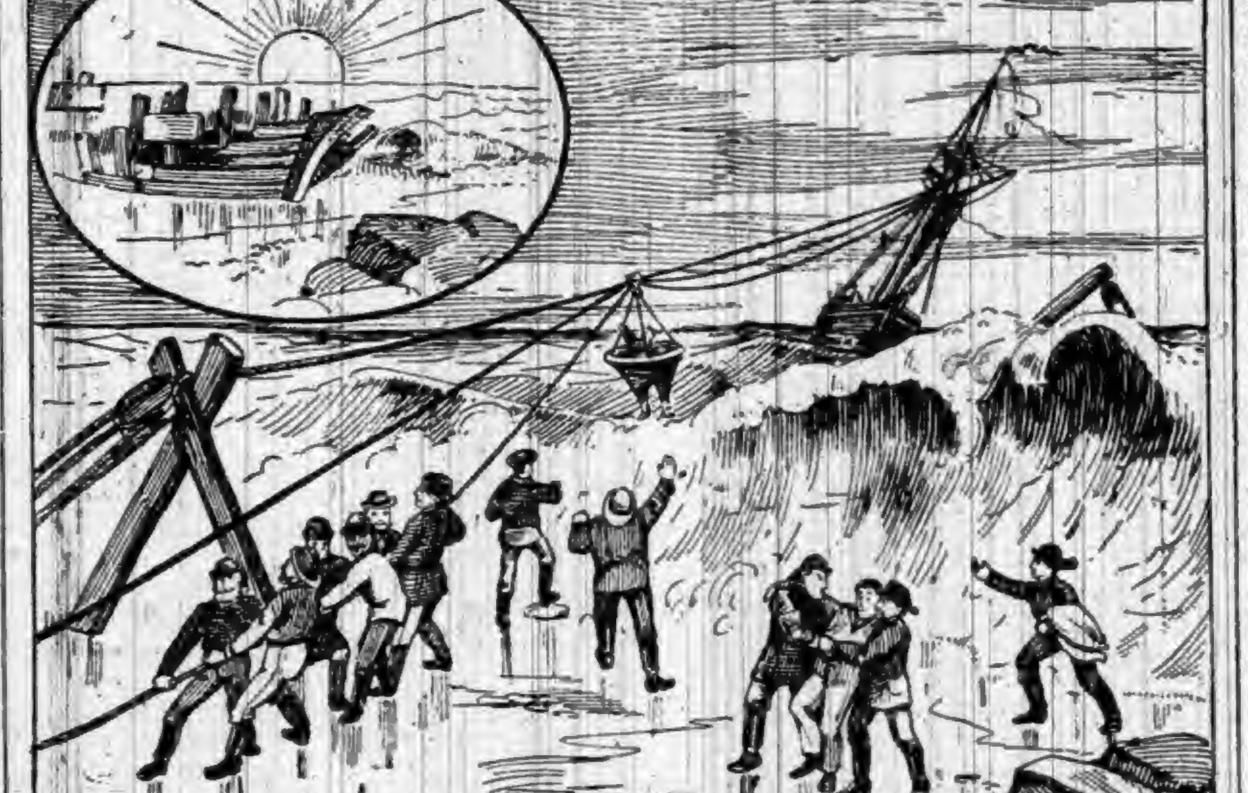
The Chicago station is situated on the lake at the mouth of the river. It consists of a two-storied frame building. The lower floor is devoted to the storage of boats and various machines and appliances used in the art of saving lives. On the upper floor the men sleep on cots, and in the rear portion, the keeper lives with his family. Above is an elevated look-out, where a watch is constantly maintained.



CAPT. ST. PETER.

The keeper of the station is Capt. Deles St. Peter. The Captain has been fourteen years at this station, and for twelve years has been its keeper. He has seen much of dangerous service during his life, having served in the army during the war. He can tell many thrilling stories of daring rescues and frightful calamities.

His crew consists of six men, well-built young fellows, all of whom seem to have a mania for reading when not engaged in the discharge of their duties. Each is allowed twelve hours' leave of absence every week, or twenty-four every two weeks.



LANDING A SHIPWRECKED CREW.

The life-boat is a magnificent contrivance. It is 27 feet in length, 7½ feet in width. At each end it has circular elevated air chambers filled with cork. The keel is of iron and weighs 1,400 pounds. The object of the elevated chambers and heavy keel, is to bring the center of gravity below the surface when filled with water. By this arrangement, if the boat should chance to capsize, it will at once right itself, since it would require great force to keep the chambers submerged and the keel elevated. Besides this advantage the life-boat empties itself. This is accomplished by means of six check-valves. These valves serve to close as many metal tubes which run from the bottom of the boat through the hold to its open space. They open only one way, and permit the water to flow downward but not upward. They act automatically and will empty the boat in a very short time.

It is built of oak, and planked without with two layers of Honduras mahogany. Its weight is 5,000 pounds. It rests on rollers in a standing position, and can be launched in a moment's time. It is pulled with oars, but is also provided with sails, to be used when necessary and available. It will carry its crew and eighteen men besides, and has more than once been filled to its capacity.

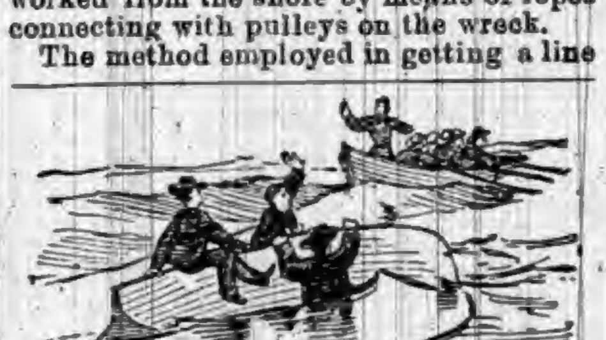
There is a surf-boat of the same size, but it is not a self-righter and bailer. It is provided with broad-tired wheels, and can be drawn along the beach to the point where it it is desired to launch it. A crew of seven men can pull this boat six miles an hour, if not against a heavy wind.

When a wreck can be reached by the life-boat, it is employed, and her passengers and crew rowed to the shore. Sometimes, however, owing to the extreme violence of the storm, the disabled ship cannot be reached. In such emergencies recourse is had to the life-car, boatswain's-chair or breeches-buoy.

The life-car is the invention of Captain James Francis, who is still living in New York at the advanced age of ninety years. It has been computed that since he devised it in 1844 over one thousand lives have been saved by its use. In recognition of his great services Congress granted him a medal worth, it is said, over $5,000.

This car is in appearance a small boat. It has rings on its upper side by which it is suspended to a rope reaching from the wreck to the shore. People on the ship enter it and are drawn ashore, and the operation is repeated until all are rescued. The boatswain's chair is simply a chair operated in the same way, carrying one passenger at a time. The breeches-buoy consists of a large circular ring, filled with cork, and in itself an admirable life-preserver. To this ring a wide pair of strong canvas breeches are firmly attached. Into these the person to be rescued thrusts his legs, and is run ashore on the rope, with little danger of being dislodged, no matter how furious the storm. All these appliances are worked from the shore by means of ropes connecting with pulleys on the wreck.

The method employed in getting a line from the shore to the wreck is as follows: A small cannon with a bore of two and one-half inches is employed. It is charged with from four to eight ounces of powder, and carries a long iron missile weighing nineteen pounds. To one end of this is attached a slender cord, so folded that it will pay out rapidly and without tangling. This is fired at the ship with a view to hitting the rigging to the end the end that the crew may secure it and pull a heavier rope on board. When this is done it is attached to a mast, the pulleys placed in position, and the car, chair, or buoy, as the case may be, started on its life-saving journey. On the shore end, where no natural elevation exists, a plank contrivance is used to raise the rope above the ground so that the vehicle can be operated. A line can thus be thrown to a ship at a distance as great as 350 yards.

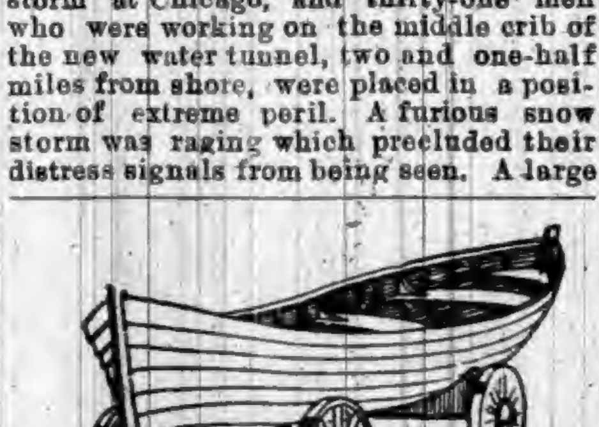


SURF-BOAT RESCUING CAPSIZED PARTY.

Three years ago the schooner America became disabled at Evanston and the life-saving crew, who are students of the Northwestern University located near by, brought the crew ashore on a rope to a bluff seventy-five feet above the level of the lake.

Many daring and notable rescues have been effected by the Chicago crew. In 1884 there was a disaster at the crib, or inlet to the water works at Hyde Park. Captain St. Peter and crew went to their assistance and succeeded in saving four, though ten lives were lost. One, a boy of sixteen named Claus Clausen, drifted on a plank to South Chicago and was picked up. He is at present a member of the Chicago crew.

On March 28, 1890, there was a terrific storm at Chicago, and thirty-one men who were working on the middle crib of the new water tunnel, two and one-half miles from shore, were placed in a position of extreme peril. A furious snow storm was raging which precluded their distress signals from being seen. A large tug boat, which had been out in the lake to dump distillery slops, reported the matter to Capt. St. Peter. His crew had not yet reported for duty, so he collected six daring fishermen and started for the crib. With the greatest difficulty, and at the expense of enormous labor, fourteen of the almost frozen men were safely rescued, and the contractors' tug boat afterward carried off the rest.



SURF-BOAT ON WHEELS.

As a rule, the principal duties of the Chicago crew are confined to the harbor. Here, every season, a great number of small yachts and row-boats are overturned, and the Captain and his vigilant crew are to be credited with the saving of many lives.

Owing to the inadequate compensation allowed the surf-men, the keepers have trouble in securing and retaining efficient men, and in the interests, not only of humanity but fair dealing, Congress should take action in the premises and provide better for the present and future welfare of the men upon whose heroic actions depend the rescue of so many imperiled lives.

DWIGHT BALDWIN.

CHICAGO, Ill.

Darkness Had No Terrors for Them.

Miss Giddimiss was angry. Mr. Gettethere had actually attempted to kiss her and had known her only twenty-four hours.

"How dare you?" she exclaimed. "Why, I have known gentlemen for years who never presumed even to press my hand."

"Ah!" returned Mr. Gettethere, "but they could not have been so susceptible to beauty as I."

The compliment was like a stream of water on the blaze. Miss Giddimiss came very near smiling.

"I fear you are too susceptible," she said. "I cannot trust myself with you. You know mamma and papa are both out this evening, and since you have been so bold I'm really afraid of you. You won't insist on staying if I ask you to go, will you, Mr. Gettethere?"

"I certainly would not be so rude," he returned.

"I knew you would not," Miss Giddimiss added; "and so I am going to ask you—— Do you know that lamp is slowly but surely going out? Those stupid servants must have forgot to fill it."

Thus she interrupted herself.

"You were going to ask me——?" suggested Mr. Gettethere.

"Oh, yes. It would never do for us to be left here together in the dark. I was going to ask you to say good-night to me."

"But I may stop until the last drop of oil is burned, may I not?"

Miss Giddimiss hesitated.

"Well," she said, with a half smile, "if you promise to behave yourself, I will permit it. I'm sure it won't be for long. How warm the room has grown!"

"May I raise a window?"

"Thank you. I wish you would.

The lamp, which was a high one, stood between one of the windows and the door. It was this window that Mr. Gettethere raised.

No sooner was it up than a strong draught swept across the apartment and carried the lamplight with it. The room was enveloped in darkness.

Miss Giddimiss sprang to her feet.

"Oh, Mr. Gettethere!" she exclaimed, "have you a match? Do re-light it. I am sure there is some oil left."

Mr. Gettethere had no match, but he, too, was sure there was some oil left. Until that oil was exhausted he had been granted the privilege of remaining.

Accordingly, he sat down beside Miss Giddimiss and informed her that he rather enjoyed a dark room.

* * * * * *

Two hours later there was a sound of a key in the front door.

"Oh, Jack! Jack!"

It was Miss Giddimiss who spoke, and though she whispered the words, Mr. Gettethere realized that she was very much alarmed.

"Light the lamp! Light the lamp!" she repeated, nervously. "It is papa and mamma returning. If we are found in the dark we are lost."

"But you know I have no matches," returned Mr. Gettethere.

"Oh, how stupid you are! There are dozens in that little vase on the bottom shelf of the cabinet."—Town Topics.

Once Used as a Text-Book.

The New York Times contains an article upon old text-books used in that city. Among the most curious of these was a volume upon "Physicking," which was probably intended to fulfill for that time the function of the modern "First Aid to Injured" manuals. It was published about 1750. It contains prescriptions for various common diseases, which the student committed to memory for future use. The following have been selected directly from the old book: "Cough," it says, "can be cured in the Beginning with riding moderately on Horseback and only taking some Ground Ivy Tea, sweetened with Syrup of Horehound. If it be violent it will be proper to bleed eight ounces." In case of "fever of any kind it is always best to blister near the Place wherein the Pain lies and by a good bleeding." "Consumption," says the wise author, "is a Distemper slow and pure. Bleed two or three ounces every three Days; also apply strong Poultices under the arms in order to draw the Mischief that way. For inward medicine let him chew Sassafras Root. His diet should be an abundance of Turnips, Raisins and Licquorice. His drink should be Strong Beer." "For Griping in the Stomack drink a Gallon of warm Whey, and if possible a gallon of warm Water." "The Dry Gripes is the cruelest kind of Cholick, but are now (blessed be God) grown much rarer than formerly. Take three Spoonfuls of bears' oil or a Decoction of Peach Leaves. If these remedies should fail you must needs submit to a Tobacco Blister. The best way to prevent dry-gripes is not to meddle with Rum mixed with sugar or lime juice." The following is given as a sure means of bringing a person out of an epileptic fit: "Burn often under the nose chicken feathers, or else leather or rubber, or even the hoofs of any animal." "After every attack of fever and ague bleed eight ounces and take a purge of Indian physick." Here is consolation for a rheumatic: "Bleed ten ounces from the wrist. Next day take a vomit of Indian physick. After this boil a shin of beef in a gallon of water. Put in a pound of garlick and stew to three pints. Take a quarter of a pint morning and evening for three days, when (by the grace of God) you will find relief." According to the Medical Record, many of the suggestions above given are, after all, not so far removed from what our modern therapeutics teaches.

A LITTLE railway just opened between Lynton and Lynmouth, in England, has the steepest incline in the world—a uniform gradient of 1 in 1½. The line is only 900 feet long, and was built to give passage over a cliff nearly 500 feet high separating the two places. Water is brought from a distance of a mile to the summit of the cliff, and is drawn from the reservoir to move the cars, two of which are connected together by a wire cable and sufficient water-load applied to the descending one to drag the other up the incline.

Reopening a Thoroughfare.

In order to guard against results utterly subversive of health, it is absolutely essential that the grand thoroughfare or avenue of the system, the bowels, should be reopened as speedily as possible when they become obstructed. If they are not, the bile is misdirected into the blood; the liver becomes torpid; viscid bilious matter gets into the stomach and produces indigestion; headaches ensue, and other symptoms are produced, which a prolongation of the exciting cause only tends to aggravate. The aperient properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters constitute a most useful agent in overcoming constriction of the bowels and promoting a regular habit of body. It is infinitely superior to the drastic cathartics frequently used for the purpose, since it does not, like them, act violently, but produces a natural, painless effect, which does not impair the tone of the evacuatory organs, which it invigorates instead of weakening. The stomach and liver, also—indeed, the entire system—are strengthened and regulated by it.

ALL ABOUT THE WABASH.

Some of the Causes that Make it so Anxious to Get a Line of its own into Chicago.

The Chicago Herald of last Thursday has a long article on this subject, which will interest our readers and throw some light on what is going on in the inner circles of the Wabash and other roads. The article reads:

"Before Judge Tuley, the Wabash railroad is fighting to keep its trains on the tracks of the Chicago & Western Indiana road. On Judge Tuley's decision depends the power of the Wabash to operate its line from Chicago to Detroit and on the Wabash line from Chicago to Detroit being kept open, depends the Canadian Pacific's ability to do business between Chicago and the East, as the Canadian Pacific proper terminates at Detroit, and it uses the Wabash tracks under a traffic contract which could not be secured from the other Detroit lines, as they are sharp competitors of the Canadian company. When the Western Indiana was built into Chicago in 1879, the Chicago & Grand Trunk, Louisville, New Albany & Chicago, Chicago & Eastern Illinois, Chicago & Atlantic and Wabash companies combined to secure an entrance to the city over the new road. These roads were tapped by the Western Indiana at various points, Chicago & Atlantic at Hammond, Ind., and the Wabash at Auburn Junction, about eight miles south of the city. Matters ran smoothly for several years, until in 1882 the five companies made a new agreement, each taking $1,000,000 worth of Western Indiana stock and assuming joint control of that road. New leases were made out, and were amended in 1886 and again in 1889. It is on the interpretation of the Wabash lease by the court, the entire case depends.

In 1887 the Wabash made an arrangement with the Chicago & Atlantic for the use of that company's lines from Hammond, Ind., to Laketon, in the same state, where they cross the Wabash line from Detroit to St. Louis. This gave the Wabash a direct line from Hammond, Ind., to Detroit, but there was a dozen or so miles of Western Indiana track between Hammond and Auburn Junction, which had to be used in order to bring the line to Chicago. The Wabash claimed the right under its lease to use all the lines of the Western Indiana on paying mileage and proceeded to run its trains through, from Chicago to Detroit. This claim is disputed by the Western Indiana, which notified the Wabash that after Dec. 31, 1889, it would not be allowed to run trains between Auburn Junction and Hammond, its lease only providing for the use of the tracks between Auburn Junction and Chicago. An injunction was secured by the Wabash, preventing the Western Indiana from interfering with the running of its trains, pending a hearing of the case. The case against the Wabash is really instigated by the Chicago and Grand Trunk, a line between Chicago and Detroit, owned by the Grand Trunk Railway, of Canada. The Grand Trunk's most important and aggressive competitor is the Canadian Pacific, whose tracks parallel the former everywhere in Canada. Chicago is the only point reached by the Grand Trunk, where the Canadian Pacific has no line, and the former views with alarm the Wabash-Canadian Pacific alliance, which brings the latter into Chicago.

Should this suit go against the Wabash, that road will be compelled to seek a new entrance to Chicago for its Detroit line, and as no road entering the city from the east will lease trackage to a road which will handle the Canadian Pacific's Chicago affairs, it will cause considerable trouble, and may result in the Canadian Pacific's building an independent line from Detroit to Chicago, costly as that would be. It is estimated that for a new line to build into Chicago on its own tracks would cost from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000.

The Wabash Looking for new Terminals.

[Chicago Herald, July 11.]

It is stated that the Wabash is negotiating for an entrance for its Chicago and Detroit line into the new Grand Central Passenger Station. This of course will not be necessary unless the court should order the Wabash Detroit trains off from the Western Indiana tracks. Such a deal could easily be made, as the tracks of the old Chicago & Calumet Terminal Company, which was acquired by the Northern Pacific interest, cross the Wabash main line. While it is positively stated that such negotiations are in progress, they are only as a safeguard, for the Wabash is confident that it will win its case with the Western Indiana.

County Jails.

Alexander Johnson, secretary of the State Board of Charities, has made a report to the Governor, of his visits to jails, etc., over the state. We clip what he says of the jail here and its condition and management.

DEKALB COUNTY VISITED JULY 13, 1889.

A neat little jail on a model plan. Large, light and airy stone cells, with solid doors toward the entrance corridor, and grating toward the sheriff's observation corridor. Apparently designed to allow isolation of prisoners. Two stories with separate entrances; good women's department. Each department has a bath tub and water closet. The sheriff was using the observation corridor door for admission and discharge, the proper door for that purpose had never been used. The jail was scrupulously clean when visited, and presented evidence of being kept so constantly. With the simple addition of a ventilated cupboard in each cell for night-bucket, this jail might be used according to the most modern system of jail management. There was only one prisoner present when the jail was visited.

MILLIONS UPON MILLIONS

OF HIDDEN WEALTH AWAITING A LUCKY DISCOVERY.

The Wonderful and Gigantic Mining Works of a Vanished People—The Immense Mineral Wealth of Michigan—An Exhibition of Rare Interest and of Great Value to the Country—It May Be Worth a Fortune to You to See It.

Among the unsolved mysteries of the American continent not even the strange remains of the mighty works of the Ancient Mound Builders are so extraordinary or so puzzling to archæologists as the ancient mines discovered in various sections of the country, but most frequently and on the most gigantic scale in the state of Michigan. When the first white men visited this continent they found that the Indian races of Mexico and Peru included workers in gold and silver. These metal working arts were confined to a small class of peculiar artizans, closely related to the priesthood. The art of working copper, though not of smelting it, was also partially practiced in Mexico. But copper was not mined in Mexico, and the small pieces of native copper used then came from regions unknown to the Mexican people

Both in North and South America were found gold and silver mines that were worked. Cinnebar (quicksilver) mines were also worked; but not for the metal, whose reduction was not understood, but for the ore only, which was used for paint. An extensive was discovered in North Carolina. Inasmuch as mica was unknown among the Indians, and the mine workings exhibited signs of vast antiquity, conjecture is lost in imagining the race and the civilization that excavated these mysterious works. There are unquestionable evidences also of slight workings of some of our lead mines.

The most immense prehistoric mining works of America are the ancient copper mines of Michigan. So immense was the work done by the long vanished ancient race of miners that it is doubtful if a hundred years of mining by the white race, with all the skill and machinery of the nineteenth century will excavate more tons of rock or leave upon the face of the earth vaster traces. All the evidences lead to the conclusion that these ancient and unknown miners must have been at work in the Michigan copper mines not merely hundreds, but thousands of years. Not only are their left, but their abandoned works—over which the debris and vegetation of lost centuries has grown—yield upon examination many of their rude ancient tools, and plain indications of most of their mining processes. Some mysteries remain, as their lost art of tempering copper like steel, which is attested by a few specimens only, showing that it was probably rarely practiced by a few experts.

Michigan is remarkable, however, not only for the vast extent of its ancient copper mines, but also because there exist traces of a greater variety of ancient mining than is known elsewhere. Michigan mines produce iron, copper, silver, gold and mica. Until recently the silver and gold mines were not discovered; but, to the astonishment of archæologists, faint but significant traces have been found indicating that these difficultly discovered veins were known and explored in by some prehistoric people. There are also signs of ancient workings of mica.

It has been and still is generally supposed that the prehistoric people of America knew nothing of iron. Certainly the Indians did not. No where else in either North or South America is there a trace of the use of iron; but several ancient mounds of Michigan have revealed from their lowest recesses traces that indicate, if they do not prove, the burial of iron, either as weapons or ornament, so many ages ago that only the peculiarly marked color in the soil tells unmistakably of the work of man, and microscopic and chemical research reveals traces of iron. With these indications as pointers and certain appearances occasionally observed in the iron mining regions, indicating surface removals to a slight extend from various bodies of outcropping ore by some ancient and unknown agency, there is an increasing conjecture that the prehistoric miners of Michigan were just discovering the art of working iron, and had probably been developing it for some time, when occurred (whatever it was) that overwhelmed their civilization, drove them away, and finally abolished their arts if not their race.

At the Detroit International Exposition, which will open August 25 and close September 5 this year, is expected to be exhibited a large and rare collection of the ores and mining products of Michigan, mining machinery, curious archæological collections of ancient mining tools and implements, constituting an exhibit of the rarest interest, alike to the student, to the curious, and the business men seeking or already interested in mining stocks or property. There has never before been a showing upon any large or well ordered scale of or of the strange works of that remote and unknown past and people whose history and fate are the despair of archæological science and the unsolvable mystery of prehistoric conjecture.

One great advantage of this display will be its instruction to the general public. Very few men know valuable ores when they see them. Here they will see all kinds, properly labeled, and learn to distinguish them. Many a man, no doubt, on his farm or land, and never suspects its existence, from not knowing valuable mineral ores when he sees them. Some of the richest ores are difficult to find, even by miners. Think how many years all sorts of mining explorers have been prodding almost every square rod of Michigan; and yet it was only lately that the silver, gold and corundrum mines of Michigan were discovered, because the experts who were looking for copper and iron did not know the other ores. And still there are no doubt hundreds of new mines yet to be discovered. The general people do not even know the signs of ordinary minerals, and still less many other more evasive natural treasures, some of which may exist in their vicinity. To some the object lessons of this exhibition may prove the beginning of happy fortunes. To all it will be interesting; and it will be of great value in advertising the splendid possibilities and vast natural wealth of the state.

WALKS EVERY DAY OVER A BIG FORTUNE

Educational Theories.

The writers upon educational philosophy have conferred a lasting benefit. It is with no feeling of disrespect to these writers that a few strictures are made with reference to the wholesale way in which the mass of undisciplined minds are expected to grasp the philosophy that is the growth of centuries and that is based upon the most subtile and difficult of subjects.

The abstract is difficult even when it may be aided by a varying fund of illustrations drawn from the concrete. The science of pedagogy rests upon psychology. The fundamental ideas in psychology are known only through consciousness. They can have no meaning to the learner save as the terms employed reveal to him the powers and processes of his own mind. The meaning of these terms can be reached only by stating the conditions under which the powers of the mind which they represent are brought into activity.

This is a difficult task for the most skillful teacher, even when he uses the terms precisely and with a single meaning throughout the discussion. The task becomes hopeless when speculative differences in the use of terms and discriminations between the various schools of psychology are introduced.

That it is difficult for the average teacher to secure anything like exactness in the use of metaphysical terms is a matter of common experience. The great body of our common school teachers have but slight mental discipline of the kind that makes it possible for them to understand much of the so-called philosophy of education.

In the higher courses of study this subject is not reached until a fair knowledge of algebra, geometry, trigonometry and analytical geometry has knitted their mental fibers into closer, more symmetrical and exact relations. Their language studies have extended their vocabulary beyond the narrow bounds of childhood and the home circle. A new word is no longer an armed man to be overcome by main strength and awkwardness, but it is a beautiful flower to be plucked for adornment, or a soomth pebble to be put into the David's sling of logic and slung at the Goliah of ignorance. In other terms, every new word is but a sidelight thrown upon a soul process and reflected in the mirror of consciousness. The natural sciences, too, have done their part in furnishing new and varying conceptions. The imagination has been trained in the school of inductive philosophy. Mathematics has been applied. A fund of illustration is stored in the memory and now the mind is ready for the abstruse and difficult study of psychology.

With all this preparation the simplest and most fundamental principles of the subject should be most thoroughly drilled into the mind of the learner. Lectures upon different schools and speculative principles will only confuse.

How vastly different is the common school teacher whose range in mathematics seldom goes beyond an elementary treatise in arithmetic; who in language knows the parts of speech only and can diagram only the simpler sentences in a treatise over which he has been taken many times; who in the natural sciences struggles and flounders with some of the tritest statements in natural philosophy, physiology or astronomy.

And yet the literature of the teacher is overburdened with books addressed to this intellectual child, but couched in the language of speculative philosophy. Sometimes, indeed, an author, in his endeavor to get down, as he would call it, talks baby style and disgusts where he would instruct.

The lines of educational activity will change. Teaching as a science in works must give way to teaching as an art. More stress will be put upon "how" to teach than upon the "why" of the "how". This grows out of the necessities of the case. "Teaching, both as to matter and method, must be adapted to the capability of the taught." The above is a wise maxim. It has been most persistently violated by the majority of writers and lecturers on the science of teaching. The slightest inquiry into the state of knowledge obtaining among the great body of the common school teachers on the subject of psychology would reveal the fact that ninety in a hundred have read the works on psychology and listened to the lectures as bewildered as he who repeats the circle when lost in the woods.

L. W. F.

Stanley's recent explorations in central Africa have added very valuable knowledge to the science of geography, botany and kindred subjects. But the most interesting facts are those with reference to the inhabitants of this new region.

The supreme court decision in the original package cases is said to show that its members who were supposed to be centralizers turned states rights men, while the state sovereignty side of the bench went for centralization of power.

All forces tend to perpetuate the conditions which they create. The conditions may be good or bad. If they are to be changed, other and opposing forces must be brought to bear upon them.

Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott writes, in the Christian Union, in favor of opening libraries, museums and art galleries on Sunday.

The farther we get from any great event, either in time or space, the easier it is to understand it in all of its relations.

Words do not convey ideas; they only awaken them.

Objective Teaching.

No student, old or young, can get any adequate conception of the size, arrangement or function of the different parts of the heart unless he has seen it dissected. Its auricles and ventricles, valves and blood vessels are only names that do not and can not awaken corresponding ideas in the mind of the learner till he has seen and handled them. By sheer word memory recitations may be gone through, but a side question will reveal the ignorance of the learner.

This is true with regard to all the various bodily organizations. A clear understanding of the elementary principles in physiology necessitates the presence of the objects. Charts and maps cannot fully take their place.

Objective teaching is not confined to the primary, or rather it should not be. In all grades of work in all schools it has its place and is unceasingly being used by the best teachers. It may be overdone, and no doubt is, especially in lower grades of union schools. When teachers keep children monotonously counting sticks or making mud pies after the stage of book study has been reached, it deserves the name of rut-drilling instead of object teaching. It is very difficult to make an object lesson interesting and at the same time valuable. Simply to see an object whole or in parts is not necessarily to see the significance of the object as related to its kind or to see the function of each part as related to another. We should not only observe carefully, but with discriminating judgment. Intense looking does not deserve the name of observation proper. We may strain the eyes to no purpose. They may be wide open and see not. The teacher should have definitely in mind the thought to be enforced by the use of the object. He should know it in all its parts. He should so direct the pupil that the relation of the object to the subject in hand cannot escape him. Much of the so-called object teaching results in vacant staring.

Our Common Schools.

To many of us the common school has seemed like nature's agents; essential, natural and universal. Familiarity with customs, societies and institutions from childhood begets a sort of confidence in them and their necessary existence that can be shaken only by an intellectual, moral or spiritual earthquake. There are forces at work in this country that are directly opposed to the common school system, not only as to the way in which it is conducted, but to the principles that gave it birth.

Each year these forces are becoming more aggressive. In some states the lines are sharply drawn. In others the leaven is at work. Every man who has faith in these schools as being essential to the welfare of our common country ought to study the question carefully and keep abreast of the movement against them.

Every question of principle in this country is eventually settled at the ballot box. We shall all have to vote yet on the question of maintaining the common schools. This great northwest, in its birth dedicated to freedom and education, ought to be safe on that question. The masses are right; but only a limited number are aware that the fight is already on in parts of the country; that the issue has been forced by the opponents of the schools; and that many of the most prominent opponents openly attack the schools as educators in vice.

To the astronomer, June and July are in many respects the most interesting months in the year. At this time all the planets except Mercury and Neptune, the nearest and farthest of our system, are plainly visible. At 9 o'clock p. m., Saturn shines as a bright star in the west about one-third the distance from the horizon to the zenith, within one and a half degrees of the fixed star Regulus, from which it may be distinguished by the fact that Regulus twinkles while Saturn does not. Venus shines with a pale, white light and may be seen in the southwest, halfway from horizon to zenith and six degrees northeast of the bright star Spica. Mars gleams with a red light in the south, while, most brilliant and beautiful of all, Jupiter takes his place at 10 o'clock in the southeast as lord of the starry hosts.

Ben Franklin was dining with small party of distinguished gentlemen, when one of them said: "Here are three nationalities represented; I am French, and my friend there is English, and Mr. Franklin is an American. Let each one propose a toast." It was agreed to, and the Englishman's turn came first. He arose, and, in the tone of a Briton bold, said: "Here's to Great Britain, the sun that gave light to all nations of the earth." The Frenchman was rather taken back at this, but he proposed: "Here's to France, the moon whose magic rays move the tides of the world." Ben then rose, with an air of quaint modesty, and said: "Here's to George Washington, the Joshua of America, who commanded the sun and moon to stand still."

Education for all the people. Let it be our watchword. It is the bulwark of our liberties and our only sure defense against vice, ignorance and bad government. Let it be diffused throughout our people and many of the intricate problems of statecraft will be solved.

Parents ought to study the problem of proper reading matter for their children. It certainly requires as much judgment to clothe the soul as it does the body.

Where is Angola?

Angola is 40miles north of Fort Wayne, 20 miles north of Auburn, Ind., 15 miles north of Waterloo, Ind., 27 miles south of Hillsdale, Mich. We are easy of access. The town and College grounds are lighted by electricity.

Testimonials.

ANGOLA, IND., Nov. 29, 1889.

It affords me great pleasure to give a testimonial as to the high order and merit of the Tri-State Normal College. Though a young institution it is a marvel of growth. It is non-sectarian, but does not educate the head alone to the exclusion of the heart. It has a very accomplished and energetic faculty ever ready to give due attention to all who seek instruction in their halls. A thorough college spirit prevails, kept continually alive by a large concourse of students of a high intellectual order, which is the best testimony any educational institution can have.

J. A. BEATTY,
Pastor M. E. Church.

The quality of work done in the Tri-State Normal College is of an order above the average, making self-reliant young men and women and more than all else stimulating that spirit of personal investigation so necessary in the true student. Another feature of this school is the chapel exercises. They are a fountain of good and wholesome impulses of incalculable value to all of those present. Farther than this I only say come and test it for yourself.

F. P. ARTHUR,

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

There is a very curious stone about which very little is ever heard. It is called the "Alexandrite," in honor of Alexander of Russia, who was very fond of them. In the daytime they resemble an emerald, except that they are somewhat darker, but at night they are a deep purplish red.

It can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it, effecting a speedy and permanent cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been cured who have taken the Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and today believe they quit drinking of their own free will. No harmful effect results from its administration. Cures guaranteed. Send for circular and full particulars. Address in confidence, GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race street, Cincinnati, O

Mr. Murray, of the Pittsburg mine near Grass Valley, split open a large log. He found a muzzle-loading shotgun that appeared to be all right, but when he tried to pull it from the hole the stock all crumbled to pieces. RACERS OF THE SKY.

THE MOST ANCIENT AND MOST PRINCELY SPORT IN THE WORLD.

How Homing Pigeons Are Trained to Race Against Each Other—A Famous Trainer Explains His Methods—A Surprising Exhibition of Intelligence and Faithfulness That Everyone Should See.

Probably the most ancient sport in the world is racing various birds, especially falcons and pigeons, in the air. Among the earliest Scriptures is the statement that Noah sent a dove out of the ark, which returned with an olive branch in its beak. This shows that the reliability of the homing pigeon, or dove, to return to its home was known and used by man in the earliest history of the world. Doves were used by kings and princes to carry messages, and also to race, ages ago. It is surmised that carrier pigeons carried to the appalled priests of the Egyptian temples the first news of the overwhelming of Pharaoh's host in the Red Sea.

Pigeon racing in modern time is

whence are derived the most perfect breeds, called Antwerps, or homing pigeons. Great sums of money are wagered upon their speed. At the Detroit International Fair and Exposition (Aug. 26 to Sept. 5, inclusive) there will be the largest show of these beautiful birds ever collected in America, and several fine races by champion birds at distances varying from 50 to 400 miles. How these birds are trained to race is a puzzle to the general public. They come to the start with muscles as hard as steel, plumage glossier than silk, and looking, all over, like showing that regular exercise must have been used to put them into condition. A horse can be galloped, whether he will or not, and so harden his muscles and improve his wind. But how can a bird be made to fly regularly an hour or two every day? Mr. George W. Burnham, the famous Indianapolis breeder and trainer, tells how it is done. He is now training a basket full of birds for the great Exposition race from Detroit to Indianapolis, 248 miles. At the Exposition he will exhibit 40 birds, and show and explain all his methods of breeding, traveling and training. He says:

"A homing pigeon is one of the most intelligent creatures in the whole animal kingdom. They train themselves, after they once catch on to the idea, which they do with wonderful quickness; and they are as faithful in doing their hour or hour and a half of hard exercise every day, all alone by themselves away up and off in the air, as a horse is with a rider and whip to compel him to do his daily miles on the track."

"But how do you manage it?"

"First we select for the race such birds as have proved not only fast and strong, but reliably industrious in preliminary flights. Some birds will loiter as soon as they get out of sight, or stop and alight in trees or elsewhere. Such birds are no good, and are killed off, if they cannot be broken. After the right birds are selected, they are locked in separate apartments of the loft, away from their mates, and of from an hour to an hour and a half strong flight every day. The loft is divided off by wire screens, with one general exit door, permitting only one bird to pass out or in at a time. But the doors of the apartments can be opened either all together or each separately by the attendant pulling cords or wires. The perch at the main exit door has a spring which rings an electric bell every time a bird passes in or out, and a self recorder of the number of birds passing. Regularly every morning and afternoon, at exactly the same hour and minute by the clock, a little bell rings rapidly in the loft for a few seconds. This is the call to exercise. A few minutes before the time you will see every bird in training getting restless and eager. They keep track of the time more closely than men could in their places. The instant their doors are open they are out like a shot, and as impatient as possible to get out of the main door. When the bell rings again and the exit door opens they fairly tumble over each other trying to see which shall be first to get started. As each goes out the electric bell rings and he is recorded. Each flies at once up into the air and goes to flying his hour of exercise all over the surrounding country as if his life depended upon getting somewhere. An attendant watches outside, and if any bird lingers an instant, or alights anywhere in sight, or returns before the hour is up, he is with a wad of paper or other harmless missile from a blow gun and compelled to take wing. This is rarely necessary, and a bird that shirks in this way a few times is counted out as no good.

"While the birds are out exercising their apartments are cleaned with the utmost nicety, fresh sand and gravel are strewn and the troughs and baths are filled with fresh food and water. At the end of the exercise hour a bell is rung. Then you should see the birds come! They drop down out of the sky. They come at full speed from far away off out of sight. They tumble over each other in the air to see which shall get in again first. The door opens and they enter, one by one, each being recorded with a bell ring.

"Every few days they are

TAKEN IN BASKETS OUT FOR TRIAL FLIGHTS.

The first flight may be 20 miles. The next flight is 15 to 20 miles farther; the next 30 miles farther; then 50 or 60 miles farther. The time and condition and conduct of each bird at their flight is carefully noted, and his treatment corresponds with his needs. Out of the trial birds the best are selected for the final race. The best means the ones who do the whole distance quickest. This means the most industrious and reliable birds. One may go 20 or 30 miles like a shot, but let up on 100 miles, or stop for too much rest on 200 miles or over. Others may not cover 20 miles so quickly, but are safe to bet on regular industry for a long distance. Each bird has to be studied by itself. It's the particular bird's character that tells in the betting on a race, even more than power and speed.

"Character means more than industry, too. The intelligent bird that never gets lost in a fog, that flies high or low to get favorable currents of air, that avoids all the dangers of hawks and of being shot by miscreant gunners; the faithful bird that crystal water or a nice grain field or any other temptation cannot seduce to linger, and that can be depended upon every time alike; the plucky bird that never gets scared out of course; the wise and ambitious bird, that seems to know you are betting on him, and keeps an eye out for his competitors, and to get in first—all these traits count and have to be carefully studied.

"But it's the greatest sport in the world, and the pleasantest business," concluded the enthusiastic fancier. "You never heard of any one once taking hold of pigeon breeding and training who ever got tired of it. Its going to be the greatest show ever seen by the American people, and don't you forget it."

WABASH IS A WINNER.

Judge Tuley's Decision Keeps the Western Indiana Tracks Open, and the Canadian Pacific Enters Chicago.

(Chicago Daily Herald, July 16.)

There was rejoicing at the headquarters of the Wabash railroad yesterday afternoon and down in the office of the Canadian Pacific. All of this hilarity was caused by Judge Tuley, who handed down a decision confirming the right of the Wabash to use the Chicago & Western Indiana tracks as an entrance into the Dearborn Station for its Detroit line trains. Judge Tuley went further than this and dismissed the crossbill of the Western Indiana to restrain the Wabash from entering into any agreement with the Canadian Pacific for the use of the Western Indiana tracks. The entire fight against the Wabash was instigated by the Chicago & Grand Trunk, which is, in company with the Wabash, one of the joints owners of the Chicago & Western Indiana terminals, and is also a proprietary line of the Grand Trunk railway of Canada, which desires to avoid Canadian Pacific competition at Chicago. The Wabash had entered into very close relations with the Canadian Pacific and was hauling the latter's traffic between Detroit and Chicago. Judge Tuley held that the Wabash could take freight from Detroit to Chicago by way of Bement, entering Chicago over its St. Louis line without violating the terms under which the road participates as a joint partner and owner in the use of the Chicago & Western Indiana terminals, hence there could be no good ground for complaint if the Wabash brought its business from Detroit to Chicago over a more direct route. The court said it would not put a construction on a contract which would operate in restraint of commerce or prevent competition among common carriers if any other reasonable construction could be made. There was no expressed limitation as to the portion or kind of traffic to be carried, and it was only by implication that such a limitation could be deduced from the lease. It was contended that, looking at the circumstances, the status of matters and of the parties at the time of the execution of the supplemental lease under which the Wabash road uses the Western Indiana tracks, it would appear that the parties intended to enable the tenant roads on the Western Indiana tracks to take freight from any industries and manufacturing establishment situated on either the Dalton or Hammond lines of the Western Indiana. This meant that the Wabash could bring its freight from Detroit or elsewhere on the Chicago Division. There was certainly nothing which required all traffic to pass Auburn on the Dalton branch. If that were the intention it would have been put in the lease. Shrewd lawyers were paid big fees to draw up such papers. The meaning of section 14 of the lease was clear and unambiguous. It declared that the lessee should have the right at any time to use any part of the common lines and property of the lessor not included in that lease or the prior one. Clearly it never intended to prohibit the use of the facilities for Detroit or the eastern traffic. The evidence tended to show that section 14 was originally drawn to enable the Grand Trunk to reach Chicago via Hammond instead of by way of a point just east of Auburn, a much more circuitous route than by way of Hammond, and that it was made general in its terms so as to place all of the tenant roads using the Western Indiana tracks on the same footing. The Western Indiana proposes to carry the case up to the higher courts, but in the meantime the Canadian Pacific and Wabash are preparing to put on a joint service of through vestibuled trains between Chicago, Toronto, Montreal and New England points.

About the Wool Tariff.

(Laporte Argus.)

Several times since the wool season opened, we have asked the republican high tariff organ of this city to explain how the farmers are benefited by a protective tariff on wool, and in connection with the question, we have repeatedly called the attention of the organ to the fact that protected wool is only selling for from 17 to 20 cts. a pound. If protection helps the wool raising farmers, why is the price of wool so much lower than it was under free trade? The Herald has made no attempt to reply to these timely and interesting questions, but instead, it called on us to explain how free trade in wool would help the farmers. We promptly gave the explanation, and the organ, still forgetting to explain the 20c protected wool, replied by saying our "statements are old." What if they are? They are facts. The multiplication table is old, but it is true. We would be glad to get so much as an "old" explanation of the 20c protected wool and the benefit to farmers. What we said about wool has since been well confirmed by the extract we published from the wool circular by G. W. Bond, the well known Boston merchant and wool expert. He is a republican protectionist, but he admits that twenty-five years of high duties have not increased the price of home wool, and concedes the probable truth of free trade arguments. Perhaps Mr. Bond's statements are "old" to the Herald. The Chicago Tribune takes practically the same ground that we did. It is regarded as pretty good republican authority, and maybe its statements will not be so "old" as ours. In its issue of July 8th, it shows up the dishonest conduct of the "Blooded Ram Raisers' Syndicate" composed of Messrs. Delano, Harpster and Lawrence, and known as the "National Wool-Growers' Association." It says: "Duty free South American wools would supplement, not supplant American wools. According to the latest estimates it takes 600,000,000 pounds of wool yearly to make all the woolen goods consumed in this country. The total wool crop of the United States does not exceed 300,000,000 pounds. Therefore, people must go unclothed, or wool in its raw or manufactured shape must be imported. It is better it should be brought in raw, for the reason, if no other, that it would encourage American manufactures and furnish home employment. When a man talks of the United States raising the entire 600,000,000 pounds of wool it needs, he talks nonsense. Different kinds of wool are needed for different kinds of goods. Carpet wools are not raised in this country, and it is not profitable to raise them. They have to be imported, and if they are not, the goods made out of them will be. Free raw wool would increase the imports of that article, but it would check the importation of woolens, which means that there would be more work for the American workingman and a better demand for the wool of the American farmer, to mix with the imported article. Nor would the admission free of duty of South American wools result in the entire product of those countries, or anything like it coming here. The greater portion of the wool of the Argentine Republic would go to England then, as it does now. But if the duty were taken off, the American manufacturer could compete on equal terms with his European rival, for what portion of the Argentine wool he needed. He would want it for the coarser goods only. That such would be the case is shown by the present imports. During the fiscal year, 1888—9, there was brought in from the Argentine Republic $860,000 worth of carpet wools. For every pound of the coarser wools a certain quantity of American wool was used. Had the imports been much larger the price of American wool would have kept up better. It must be remembered also that if the United States takes the duty off the wool of the Argentine Republic, that State, pleased that it does not have to depend on European purchasers alone to dispose of its products, will throw open its markets to American surpluses, the butter and cheese of the farmer and the machinery of the manufacturer, so that these will share directly in the benefits of free wool. All will share in them indirectly, because all will be able to get more and better woolen clothing for less money."

The Shortstop.

The shortstop needs the same coaching as the third base man in the way of urging him to jump in front of the ball, and start quickly. The combination method of play, which was mentioned in a previous article as an excellent one to bring out all the possible advantages of playing the two positions of shortstop and third base, requires plenty of practice. Particularly must the two players thoroughly understand each other. A very good way to begin practice upon this method is to station the third-base man where he can, by an effort, just cover the ground to his base, and to tell him to "take everything he can get, out in the diamond." The shortstop is then placed well back of the base-line as far as he can be and yet be sure of throwing to first in time to catch the ordinary runner on a hard hit. He must be instructed to "come in on" the ball as soon as it is hit and he knows its direction. Irwin was one of the first of the professionals to develop this "deep field" play by a shortstop, and I remember how very strange it appeared to the collegians to see this little fellow station himself almost half way out to left field; but before the game was ended he had shown himself fully able to cover all the space he had taken. A shortstop has to make one peculiar class of plays in which he should endeavor to become thoroughly expert, and that is taking short flies that go just outside the infield, but are too low for the outfielders to get under. There are also occasional flies near the foulline, ten or a dozen yards behind third base which an agile shortstop may take. No player has ever been more expert in this line of play than John Ward, the now noted champion of the rights of the players. Many a short fly that the scorers were just putting down as a base-hit has found a resting-place in his outstretched hands, simply because he has made a practice of starting instantly, and of never believing any fly too far away for him to get. "Backing up" is a special feature of the shortstop's duties. Any ball fielded from the other side of the diamond to the third-base or second-base man should find the shortstop behind the man who is to take it. He should be particularly on the alert to back up the third-base man, when the ball is thrown to that point by the catcher, in order to put out an adventurous runner. This precaution is necessary because any wild throw of the catcher's which the base-man fails to get will surely admit of the runner's going home unless the shortstop secures the ball.—From "Bat, Ball and Diamond," by Walter Camp, in St. Nicholas for July.

A special from Van Wert, O., dated the 22 inst., says: Early this evening Sam Roadhouse confessed to the Coroner, Sheriff and others that were in the room, that he killed Engineer Vandevender. He says that at Franklin, before starting out on the trip, Vandevender came at him with the words, "G— d— you, I'm going to do you up." He got away from him and did not have more words until after the train had passed Ohio City, seven miles south of here when he came at him, saying, "Now G— d— you, I'm going to do you up." At this moment Roadhouse secured a copper hammer and laid it under his cushion, knowing that if he, Vandevender, attacked him he would be no match for him, as Vandevender was a powerful man. Just about this time Vandevender made a pass at him, striking him twice. Roadhouse then took the hammer in both hands and struck the engineer with all his strength upon the forehead, knocking him down. The engineer arose and again came at him, when Roadhouse struck him again, felling him to the floor unconscious. Roadhouse, thinking him dead, looked out to see where they were. The train was just entering the town. He picked up the insensible form of the engineer and placed him upon his seat, and then decided to feign unconsciousness and let the train run until it stopped, fearing that if he told of the affray he would be lynched by Vandevender's friends. So well did he carry this out that his game was not discovered until the next day. After the train had passed over the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago crossing Vandevender showed signs of regaining consciousness, when Roadhouse struck him again, which quieted him forever. After being taken to the hotel, Roadhouse was taken care of by the doctors and he was stripped to see how badly he was hurt, but no marks of violence were to be seen upon his person, although he pretended to be suffering intense agony. He says he has not slept a wink since the terrible affair, and this mental strain was too much, and he made up his mind to confess and take his chances, especially so after being urged by friends that if guilty it would go much easier with him if he would confess. After his confession his mental suffering ceased and he was taken from the hotel to the jail, where he now occupies a cell, safe from any attempt that may be made to lynch him. There is much talk of this, but there is no danger. Public opinion is about evenly divided, as it is known that Engineer Vandevender was a terrible man when aroused, and many claim the firemen had to act as he did to save his own life. Roadhouse was raised at Greenville, Ohio, and has always borne a good reputation and is not of a quarrelsome disposition.

A Fire-Cracker Fiend.

While a crowd of men were lounging about the grocery store of Horn & Carroll at Red Key, Ind., Henry Maynard set off a fire cracker. A spark flew into a keg of powder and a terrific explosion ensued. The roof of the frame building fell in and the next minute the horror of fire was added. A crowd of the villagers soon extinguished the flames and rescued the imprisoned men. Out of a crowd of about twenty in the store at the time of the explosion, seven were seriously injured. The injured are: J. G. Carroll, fatally crushed; David Welt, throat cut by flying glass, will probably die; John Lake, James Taylor and several others were slightly hurt and the store building is a total wreck.

Smash-Up on the Monon.

The northbound Monon vestibule-train, struck a cow lying on the track seven miles north of Delphi, Ind. The engine and three cars left the track, the engine landing in a wheat field outside of the right of way. Engineer Strope, of Lafayette, the oldest engineer on the road, was scalded to death. Fireman McDonald was thrown through the top of the cab into the field, forty feet from the track, and escaped with a few bruises. The wreck was soon cleared up and trains were running in a few hours.

Sandwich Islands Prosperous.

Consul General Severance, in a dispatch from Honolulu to the State Department, says: As the result of the recent extension of the treaty of reciprocity between the United States and this kingdom renewed activity in the various departments of business throughout the islands has been manifested, resulting in an increase of agricultural products and stimulating the commercial relations with the United States, making the year 1889 one of marked prosperity.

White Caps Must Pay Their Victim.

Marion Kendall, of Lebanon, Ind., brought suit for damages against two of a band of White Caps, who beat him into insensibility for assaulting a young girl, and the Supreme Court has handed down a decision affirming the verdict of a lower court granting him $5,000.

Blew Up.

By the explosion of a threshing machine boiler on the farm of James Morrow, six miles east of Princeton, Ind., Andrew Cretsinger and Charles White were killed, Andrew Mohan, fatally, and Hugh Morrow, dangerously injured.

The Northern Indiana Fair

Will be held at Fort Wayne, Ind., September 16, 17, 18, and 19, 1890. Six thousand dollars will be given in premiums and purses.

STARVED TO DEATH.

Terrible Experience of a Band of Miners.

Topeka (Kan.) special: Information was received here of the death of Mr. A. Ingram, a well-known citizen of Topeka, while prospecting for gold in Alaska. He joined an exploring party last May which was going to the interior of Alaska. After traveling nearly two weeks they ran out of provisions and were compelled to abandon their boat and start afoot, depending on their rifles for getting food. Game was scarce and starvation stared the party in the face. They became weak for want of food, and Ingram began to fail. His companions helped him along, though he begged to be allowed to die. After about two weeks Ingram was found unable to arise one morning, and was left by his sorrowing comrades. About twenty miles further on the party discovered an Indian camp at the head of the Tahkena River, with an abundant supply of provisions, and the next day returned to where they had left Ingram, only to find him cold in death. Brush was piled on the remains and the party returned to camp. The second day Young died from exhaustion and was left by the wayside. The two remaining travelers reached camp and discovered that they were on the wrong trail. They rested up and then building a raft returned down Tahkena to where they had abandoned their boat. Having provided themselves with food at the cache, they abandoned the raft at the mouth of the Yukon and ascended the river to Mud Lake, where a canoe was secured from the Indians and with which they reached Healey's in about twenty days. From there they proceeded to Juneau and took a steamer to Seattle.

DEMONS

A special from Van Wert, Ohio, says: At the depot the other night a crowd of people, aside from the railroad employes, awaited the arrival of the north-bound night express on the Cincinnati, Jackson and Michigan Railroad. She hove in sight on time, but instead of pulling up at the depot, the train dashed through the town at the rate of twenty-five or thirty miles an hour, until it crashed into a switch engine at work in the yards. A terrific collision followed, and the iron monsters were locked in each other's embrace quicker than a flash, while the passengers and express messengers were endeavoring to find themselves. Of course, assistance came to the injured passengers at once and they were cared for, while a search of the passenger engine revealed Engineer Vandevander dead and his fireman mortally injured. One of the passenger brakemen had a foot crushed, but the engineer and fireman of the yard engine saved their lives by jumping. Inquiry into the cause of the trouble revealed the fact that at Enterprise, a village seven miles south of Van Wert, two or three men leaped on the engine as it was starting and engaged the engineer and fireman in conversation. The idea is that the highwaymen commanded them to stop the train for the purpose of robbery, but the railroaders refused and a bloody fight followed. The strangers secured a pick and hammer, and with these weapons beat the engineer and fireman almost to death. The run to Van Wert was so brief that the would-be robbers could not accomplish their purpose, so they leaped from the locomotive, leaving the train to the mercy of an open throttle with its load of human freight. The hammer and pick were found on the engine covered with blood and prints of the blows were discernable on the bodies of the brave railroaders. This town is thoroughly aroused and posses of citizens are scouring the country. If the murderers are caught they will be lynched to the first tree.

The terrible tragedy on the Mackinaw Railroad, at Van Wert, Ohio, is still shrouded in mystery. Engineer Madison Vandevender is dead, and Fireman Roadhouse is still in a critical condition. A man who was supposed to be Mock, the man accused of the deed, was arrested by Constable Doggett, at Monroeville, Ind. The Sheriff at Van Wert went after him but on investigation found him to be Jacob Pyle, who resides at Fort Wayne. Pyle was one of the men who carried Vandevender to his home, and on going to Monroeville, appeared so nervous from the shock that suspicion rested upon him. The man Mock, who is thought to have committed the horrible crime, is still at large, and cannot be located. The theory that the affair was a fight between the engineer and fireman, has been abandoned.

BIG BLAZE.

Burning of the Western Union Telegraph Building at New York City.

New York special: Fire broke out in the Western Union building. The operators, about seventy-five in number, were penned in by the flames. Many of them attempted to climb from the windows. Most of them got upon the top of the building, where they cried piteously for help. The fire started two floors below the top and it was feared many of the operators would be burned to death. The building was eleven stories high, and the fire department was almost powerless in its attempts to reach the unfortunate men. The loss will be enormous and is estimated at $3,000,000. A vast crowd witnessed the fire and the police had difficulty in keeping the street clear for the work of the firemen. Owing to the height of the structure the department experienced great difficulty in subduing the flames, but three hours after the fire started it was under control. It had spread, however, to the Associated Press offices, the executive offices of the Western Union, and the upper floors. Three thousand seven hundred telegraph instruments were destroyed, together with the battery rooms, and thousands of Leyden jars, which cannot be replaced for several weeks. Ten operators made their way to an adjoining building by swinging over an iron shutter. Ten female employes in the lunch department who slept in the upper story were compelled to flee to the roof, from where they were rescued by the firemen, who tied ropes around them and let them down three stories to a building in the rear. The women were screaming for help a considerable time before the firemen reached them. The excitement was increased by two explosions, presumably of acids used for the batteries. At the time the fire broke out the elevators were not running and would have been useless, as the shafts were in flames.

A PAIR OF THEM.

Two Pleasure Boats Run Down by Steamers.

Alexandria Bay (N. Y.) special: The steamer St. Lawrence, returning from an excursion, ran down the steam pleasure yacht Cathlene, with ten passengers on board, from Bradford, Pa. Five are missing. The missing are: Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Pemberton, Mrs. W. D. Hart and Miss Maggie Henr—, all of Bradford, and John Senecal, the fireman of the Cathlene. The yacht was crossing diagonally over from Alexandria Bay to Grenadier Island and was making directly across the track of the St. Lawrence when the crash occurred. Capt. Beaupre, of the St. Lawrence, says that Capt. Senecal, of the Cathlene, blew her whistle to take the right and then took the left hand course.

Detroit special: As the steamer City of Detroit, with three excursion parties on board, was just within the city limits, her steam steering apparatus gave out, and she veered about and ran into the steam barge Kesota, owned in Cleveland, cutting her completely in two amidships. The Kesota's cargo was iron ore and she sunk at once. Capt. Fick and a crew of seventeen were rescued, but the mother of the steward was drowned. Judge Nichols of Batavia, Ohio, an excursionist on the City of Detroit, was severely injured and his son and three or four other passengers were slightly injured, but were all, except the Judge, able to continue their trip up the lakes. While the passengers were considerably frightened there was no panic. The City of Detroit's hull is damaged $10,000 to $15,000 and she will have to go into the dry dock. The Kesota was valued at $12,000 and is a total loss. The value of the cargo is not known.

A Bandit Caught.

Detective Thomas V. Jackson, of the Southern Express Company, has arrived at Memphis, Tenn., with Joseph Jackson, alias J. B. Winslow, chief partner of Rube Burrows in train robberies. The arrest was made on a train as it rolled into Columbus, Miss. The prisoner was taken to the office of Superintendent Magee, of the Express Company, and searched. The many bullet marks on his body tally exactly with the published description. He denies his identity, however, and beyond this will not say a word. He has been a criminal for years, and is now the last surviving member of the celebrated band of horse thieves, train robbers and bandits that terrorized the State of Texas about eight or ten years ago, under the leadership of Sam Bass. There are rewards, amounting to $7,500, out for the arrest of the gang, and with the capture of Jackson, who furnished the brains for the crowd, all are in save Rube Burrows himself, and that personage is well located. Jackson was also one of the principal participants in the robbery of the Mobile & Ohio express train at Puckatunna, Ala., and he is accused of killing the postmaster at Sylacau, Ala., about a year ago. He is under indictment for murder at Duck Hill, Miss., and will be taken there.

Congressman Crane Goes Gunning.

Quite a sensation was caused at the Capitol by Congressman Crane, who was rushing about the Capitol with a revolver in his hand which he flourished wildly, calling for O'Brien Moore, correspondent of the St. Louis Republic. Moore had made certain criticisms upon Crane's course in being absent and not paired in certain close votes in the House within the past four days. Crane met Moore at the Senate end of the Capitol and there were some pretty sharp words and threatening demonstrations by Crane, but it was not until later in the day that the revolver made its appearance. Crane invaded the House press gallery, revolver in hand, inquiring for Moore, who had only recently left the gallery and was then on his way to the depot to take a train for New York, where he had a business engagement. Moore left on the 5 o'clock train, entirely unconscious of the fact that a Congressman with a loaded pistol was hunting for him. It is feared that serious developments may follow upon his return.

Extensive Lumber Thieving.

For years Canadian lumber thieves have been operating on the northern boundary of Minnesota and conservative judges estimate that they have stolen billions of feet of valuable lumber, most of which has been manufactured into lumber by the score and more of saw-mills at Rat Portage. So bold have these timber thieves been that the Secretary of the Interior has decided to organize an expedition to investigate the extent of the timber thieving. The expedition will be headed by four agents especially selected from the Government staff for this work, and with them will be a considerable force of assistants. They will be clothed with the authority of deputy United States marshals and empowered to make seizure of Government timber with force if necessary, when peaceful methods are of no avail.

Poor House Horrors.

Indianapolis special: Secretary Johnson, of the State Board of Charities, reports terrible mixing of sexes in the Pike County Poor House, where he went on an official visit. Each of the four rooms in the asylum contains from six to eight paupers of both sexes, and representing all conditions of mind. A man and wife occupy one bed, two men sleep in another, while a feeble-minded girl occupies a third bed in the same room. In the room adjoining, one bed is assigned to a crazy man, two women sleep in the second and two men in the third, and a similar complication exists in the other sleeping rooms. The asylum is reported well kept, so far as cleanliness is concerned, but the Secretary strongly condemns the sleeping arrangements.

Express Robbery.

Milwaukee special: A package containing $3,000 consigned to the care of the United States Express Company, mysteriously disappeared in transit over the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railway. Following, as it does, the big robbery at Hurly, the company is disposed to regard its losses in this section as a serious matter and an effort will be made to probe this case to the bottom. The package consisted wholly of bank notes and was shipped from Chicago early in the week. It has been traced as far as Monico, Wisconsin. The robbery occurred on the Rhinelander division of the road.

Indiana's Official Muddle.

Indiapolis special: W. A. Peelle, who was elected State Statistician by the Legislature, and John Worrell, who was appointed to the same office by the Governor, are both sending out blanks to county officers for the annual statistical returns and there will be two biennial reports submitted this fall—that of Peelle to the Legislature and that of Worrell to the Governor. Some time ago Worrell sent to the Auditor for the annual crop statement, but Peelle became aware of his plans and succeeded in getting nearly all of the reports, the most important of the series, as they contain the acreage and crop estimates from all the counties.

Mayhem Charged.

Chicago special: A most shocking case of brutality came to the notice of the Desplaines street police. Albert Magoon, of 194 West Lake street, took out a warrant for the arrest of Louis Thrope, an engineer at 46 Green street, charging him with mayhem. Magoon's 8-year-old boy, Willie, was in the habit of visiting and playing around Thorpe, and the later, as he says, in fun held the boy under a heavy steam drill, mutilating him in a horrible manner. It is doubtful if the boy ever fully recovers from the treatment received. Mr. Magoon promises to carry the case to the end, to punish Thorpe to the full extent of the law.

Insane Indian.

James Larney, an Indian from Indian Territory, serving a ten years' sentence in the Ohio penitentiary for manslaughter, grabbed an axe and began to tomahawk his companions in the idle house. He split open the head of Jacob Gross, a colored prisoner, who will probably die; cut on the head Ted Cunningham, broke the shoulder of Charles Greeves and cut into the top of Michael O'Hara's head. The Deputy Warden hearing the Indian's yells, rushed in, and with the aid of other prisoners, disarmed the assailant, tied his feet, and locked him in a cell. The murderous Indian is thought to be insane.

Does This Mean War?

Prime Minister Stambaloff, who is the virtual dictator of Bulgaria, is said to be preparing another note to the Sultan more energetic than the former one, to the effect that Bulgaria will promptly assert its independence unless Prince Ferdinand is recognized, and repeating the demand for the religious autonomy of the Bulgarians in Macedonia. The Sultan, according to advices from Constantinople, has well-grounded suspicions that the Bulgarians mean to annex Macedonia at the first opportunity.

Developing West Virginia Oil Wells.

A gigantic scheme, backed by Stephen B. Elkins, the Standard Oil Company, and Senator Camden, with Profs. White and Jackson, geologists of the State University, is on foot at Parkersburg, W. Va., to develop the oil territory of West Virginia. A line of wells passing across the State is under way, and hundreds of thousands of acres of land have been leased. Three tanks of 300,000 barrels capacity are being erected and an immense line connecting all the oil fields is being built; a million has already been spent and the work is just begun.

Typhoid from Stagnant Water.

Typhoid fever has again broken out in the vicinity of Dundee, Blackford County, Indiana. E. C. Storms, Trustee of the township, George Ashman and others, are lying in a critical condition. Lon Storms claims that a large pond of water in a gravel pit supplies all the wells in the vicinity, and that it is the cause of the annual siege of typhoid fever to which the section has been subject. He has called upon the health officials for an investigation.

Socialism Threatening Germany.

The Berlin Dresdener Nachrichten published an interview which its correspondent recently had with Prince Bismarck. The ex-Chancellor spoke principally of socialism, which he said, was increasing. He stated that in his opinion the government must either fight the socialists or make them many concessions. Although the Emperor is now decided upon peace, he thought that he would eventually make a strong fight against socialism, and that it would be a question for the military to settle.

Sad Death.

Michael Aylward met a frightful death at Lafayette, Ind., the other night by falling out of a window. It is supposed that after going to his room at the Bramble house he opened the window, sat on the sill for a few moments and fell asleep. While sleeping he fell backwards, being killed instantly upon striking the sidewalk. His aged mother lives at Columbia City, Ind., and was at once notified of her son's death. Mr. Aylward was a miller by trade.

An International Question.

London special: In the House of Commons Sir John Gorst, in replying to a question put by Mr. Gourlay, said that the Government had not received information that the President of the United States had declared that he would deal summarily with British sealers in Behring Sea. He said that negotiations between the United States and Great Britain, relative to the Behring Sea question, were being continued.

Five Burned Alive.

The residence of John Hamlett, near Valparaiso, Ind., was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Hamlett and four children, the eldest about eight years old, were burned to death. The house was totally consumed. Nobody knows how the fire originated. Mr. Hamlett was absent, being at Chesterton. He has arrived home and is crazy with grief. It is the greatest calamity ever known in the county, except the Kouts railroad wreck.

Thief Recognized.

Seven years ago a man who gave his name as James McCune hired a team from Coyic's livery stable at Zanesville, Ohio, and traded it off. He was arrested and sent to the penitentiary for seven years. The same man showed up at the same livery stable and tried to get a team. He was recognized, and politely but firmly refused.

Boy Crushed to Death.

Eugene Carroll, the 9-year-old son of B. A. Carroll, and grandson of Mrs. Rook, of the Dispatch Publishing Company, Pittsburgh, met with an instant and horrible death. The boy was riding on the stone and cement mixer of Booth and Flinn, when he fell into the mixer and was instantly crushed to death.

Bolivian Revolution Ended.

The Minister of the United States to Bolivia in a recent dispatch to the department of State, touching the revolution in that country, indicates that the troubles are apparently at an end through the vigorous and aggressive measures of the National Government to suppress them.

Alleged Lady Horse Thief.

A well-dressed young woman drove a horse and buggy into Plainfield, Ind., and sold it for $100 and departed on the first Vandalia train, west bound. It is since learned that the horse and buggy were hired from the livery of George Schofield, of Indianapolis.

Killed by a Reaper.

Henry Otten, while engaged in cutting oats six miles southwest of Richmond, Ind., fell in front of his reaping machine. The horses ran and the sickles caught him and mangled him so that he will die from his injuries.

Earthquake in Indiana.

A very perceptible shock of earthquake, which lasted about one minute, was felt at Martinsville, Ind., recently Houses were shaken and dishes rattled.

—As the pay train on the I. D. & W. was going west, it struck and killed Talmer Yeoman, section foreman, at Dana. Yeoman and his men were on the hand-car going to work. He leaves a wife and two children.

—The census enumerators of Crawfordsville have sent in ninety-five additional names of persons who were missed. This makes that city 6,080 people, according to the enumerators. This does not include the seven suburbs.

—During a storm the barn of James Moffett, in Jackson Township, Fountain County, was struck by lightning, killing the tenant, William Smith, instantly. He was putting up hay at the time. He was about 27 years of age and leaves a wife and two chidren.

—James H. Decker, who resides about ten miles east of Tipton, while under the influence of liquor, fell from his buggy and received internal injuries, from which he died. He was about 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and five children in limited circumstances.

—W. P. Gilman, a South Bend traveling man, went swimming at Crawfordsville, and laid his cigar that he was smoking on his clothes upon the bank. When he was through his swim he found that his clothes had taken fire, and burned up. He borrowed underclothes from other bathers and remained in the woods until after dark, when he was spirited to town.

—Ground has been broken and arrangements made to commence the erection of a mammoth glassworks in Pendleton by R. G. Guptill & Co. They will manufacture glass tubes for the use of underground electric wires in connection with the manufacture of fancy glassware. The company intends to be ready for operation by Dec. 1, and will give employment to a large force of men.

—In Montgomery County there are 2,773 sewing machines, 1,099 organs and 337 pianos. This year there are 57,555 acres in corn, 11,471 in oats, 23 in barley, 45 in buckwheat, 158 in rye, 233 in potoes, 12 in watermelons, 9 in tobacco, 10 in cabbage. Last year 3,839 gallons of sorghum molasses was made, and 42,015 rods of rail fence erected, 5,581 rods of board fence and 10,147 rods of wire fence.

—The State Encampment, Sons of Veterans, elected the following officers: Col. John W. Newton, Winchester; Lieutenant Colonel, W. G. Young, Connersville; Major, W. E. Beach, Indianapolis; Delegate-at-large, F. J. Jackson, Muncie; delegates, W. E. Males, Evansville; H. E. Ogden, Danville; Geo. H. Pennington, New Albany; Joseph G. Leffler, Muncie; Ralph Perry, Indianapolis. The Fifth Annual Encampment will be held the third week in June of next year, at Lafayette.

—A Fortville special says: A few weeks ago a small bug made its appearance in this section of which the oldest citizen can give no information. The pest is a small and very slim, dark bug nearly an eighth of an inch in length, has several small and very short legs; crawls in the same manner as a snake, and its outlines are similar to the alligator. The insect seems to be everywhere, in people's houses, clothes, and even in their hair. One small girl has been bitten or stung so severely by the insects that it necessitated the services of a physician.

—The north-bound freight train collided at New Providence, twenty-five miles north of New Albany, with the south-bound freight. Both trains were badly wrecked, and R. McNally, engineer of the train going north was pinned under the tank of his engine, which had a car-load of stone piled upon it. He was crushed to death. His fireman, Charles Helfrich, was badly bruised, but had no bones broken. McNally had been in the employ of the company but a few months. He lived in Illinois. The track was so badly obstructed with the wreckage as to compel the north-bound passenger train to return to New Albany.

—At Cambridge City a few nights ago an explosion awakened Daniel Wissler and family from their repose. Mr. Wissler hastened to the place from whence came the sound, and discovered the interior of the kitchen in the rear of his house was on fire. He quickly extinguished it and immediately sought the cause. On the outside, near the kitchen window, he found a half-gallon oil-can, which had contained gasoline. The window had been broken open and the gasoline poured upon the floor and ignited. The sound of the explosion which followed awakened Mr. Wissler and probably saved himself and family from a horrible death. The front gate was held open with a prop, thus affording a rapid exit for the miscreant.

—During a heavy storm the United Brethren Church, of South Whitley, was struck twice by lightning, demolishing roof, breaking all windows and wrecking walls. Fire was averted. Damage about $1,500; no insurance.

—Kate Dix, a woman of bad character, wound up a spree at Terre Haute by taking poison. For an hour after the Coroner had viewed the corpse her companions of the orgie insisted that she was yet alive, and after the undertaker had placed the body in a coffin they sent for a physician.

Reading Character.

Dribbler—In my opinion, a man who writes an illegible hand does it because he thinks people are willing to puzzle over it. In other words, he is a chunk of conceit.

Scribbler—Not always. Sometimes a man writes illegibly, not because he is conceited, but because he is modest.

"Modest! What about?"

"About his spelling."

If one wishes to take things easy when one is old, it will be necessary to make many things that are not easy when one is young.

READY FOR THE FRAY.

OHIO REPUBLICANS NOMINATE THEIR STATE TICKET.

A special from Cleveland, dated the 16th inst., says: The delegates to the Republican State Convention were tardy in assembling this morning, and it was half past 11 o'clock when Hon. A. T. Brinsmade, Chairman of the State Central Committee, rapped for order. The convention was held in Music Hall. The exterior of the building was beautifully decorated with flags and bunting, and around the front of the galleries were displayed the portraits of Lincoln, Garfield, Hayes, Logan, Harrison, Grant, Blaine, Sheridan and Foraker. The weather was cool and beautiful, and the hall was comfortably filled by the delegates and spectators, among the latter being a large number of ladies.

Ex-Governor Foraker, the Temporary Chairman, came upon the stage with Col. Brinsmade. His appearance was the signal for prolonged and enthusiastic cheering. Rev. Dr. S. P. Sprecher opened the convention with prayer. At the conclusion of a short speech by Col. Brinsmade, the ex-Governor was introduced and delivered an address.

After thanking the State Committee for the honor conferred upon him by the temporary chairmanship, ex-Governor Foraker made a lengthy speech. He referred to the administration of Governor Campbell and pointed out the instances in which it had violated its pledges on the stump. He referred in enthusiastic terms to Sherman, McKinley and Foster, and praised the administration of President Harrison and the work of the Republican Congress.

Foraker's speech occupied nearly an hour in its delivery and the speaker was loudly applauded at different points, his arraignment of the Campbell administration being greatly enjoyed by the delegates.

The convention then took a recess until 2:30 o'clock.

The convention reconvened shortly before 3 o'clock. The Committee on Permanent Organization reported ex-Governor Foraker for Permanent Chairman, but he declined to accept the honor, and Congressman A. C. Thompson, of Portsmouth, was chosen Permanent Chairman. After a short speech Chairman Thompson called for the order of business. The report of the Committee on Resolutions was passed for a time, and Col. A. T. Brinsmade presented the name of Daniel J. Ryan for Secretary of State. The nomination was made by acclamation, and Mr. Ryan made a speech of acceptance.

Just before Mr. Ryan's appearance on the stage, Chairman Thompson read a telegram of congratulation from Senator Sherman and Congressmen McKinley, Cooper, Boothman, Smyser, Caldwell, E. B. Taylor, and J. D. Taylor. The telegram was greeted with applause.

Attorney General D. K. Watson presented the name of Judge Thaddeus A. Minshall for Supreme Judge, and the nomination was made by acclamation.

Frank J. McColloch, of Logan County and C. A. Flickinger, of Lucas County, were nominated for member of the Board of Public Works. Before the first ballot was completed, McColloch received 327 votes to 76 for Flickinger and the nomination was made unanimous. At this point Congressman Morey, Chairman of Committee on Resolutions, read the platform. It endorses the administration of President Harrison; approves the wise action of the Republican members of both Houses of Congress in fulfilling the pledges of the party in legislation upon the coinage of silver, revision of tariff, passage of the federal election law, disability pension bill, and other measures of national importance; endorses the Republican Congress and Speaker Reed for amending the rules of the House so that the business of the country can be done by the people's representatives; the honest, wise and patriotic administration of Governor Foraker; denounces the Democratic Legislature for its corruption, its extravagance, its partisanship; commends the McKinley tariff bill as passed by the House of Representatives as a wise measure, calculated to protect and defend American industries and American labor against the labor and industries of other nations; endorses the action of the Republican Congress in passing a disability pension bill and the Republican President who approved the same; declares in favor of just and fair service pension, graded according to the length of service, for every soldier and sailor who fought in behalf of the Union, and by reason of whose service, sacrifices and devotion the Government now exists; reaffirms, in the most earnest and emphatic manner, the duty of Congress to faithfully and fully carry out the declaration of the National Convention of 1888 of the Republican party, that it will provide by fair and impartial election law a free and honest popular ballot in every Congressional District of the United States so as to secure to every citizen, rich or poor, native or foreign born, white or black, the right to cast one free ballot and have that ballot duly counted; expresses profound sorrow at the death of that hero and first Presidential candidate of the Republican party, Gen. John C. Fremont.

Cowboys Uphold the Law.

At Wendover, Wy. T., there are about two hundred cowboys in camp. No officers are located there, but the men are held in restraint by self-respect and the orders of their employers. One of the punchers stole a saddle. He was captured red-handed, stripped on the banks of the Platte and received twenty lashes on the bare back with a heavy whip. Then he was paddled with a board. The cowboys are determined to uphold the dignity of the law.—Exchange.

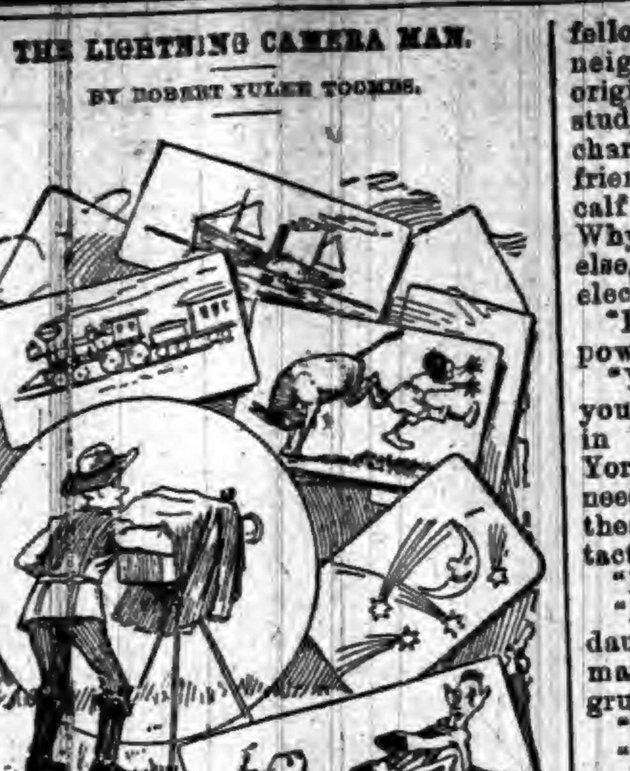
THE LIGHTNING CAMERA MAN.

BY ROBERT YULEE TOOMBS.



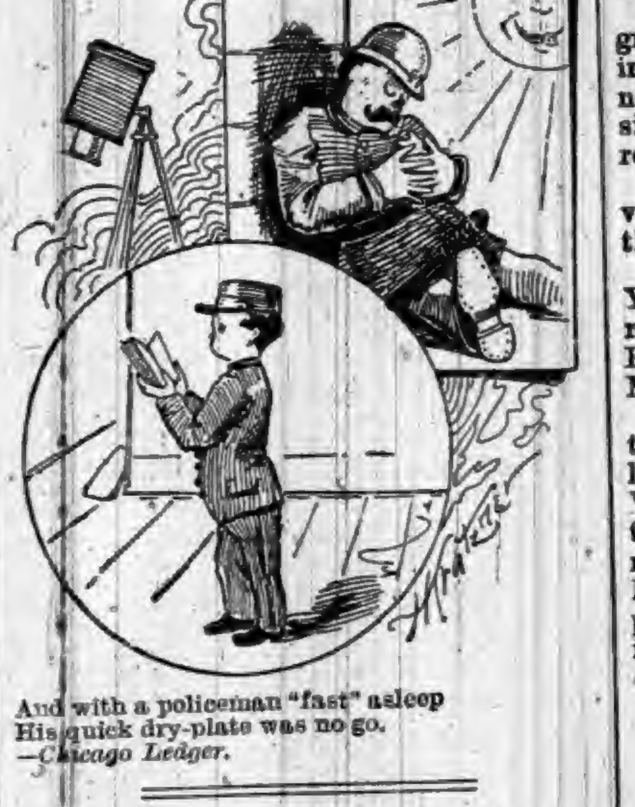
TIS of a lightning camera man
I am now about to sing,
Who would "catch" the fastest express train,
Or a bird upon the wing.

He'd catch a steamship in full sail,
Or a bullet in its flight;
He would catch the shooting stars that trail
Across heaven's dome at night.

He would catch the mule with dreamy eye
In the act of "busting" Sambo,
Then he'd catch the darkey on the fly
Ere he'd in the fence-jamb go.

He oft caught fair bathers in the surf,
As he roamed 'long the beaches,
And he caught some bird-shot in his legs,
A dog's teeth in his breeches.

He tried to catch a messenger boy,
But his cam'ra was too slow!!!



And with a policeman "fast" asleep
His quick dry-plate was no go.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

Months passed, and not another word did he hear from his old classmate.

He grew very restless. The whole thing was preying upon his mind.

He decided that he must have some occupation. Young Bellmont and others of his acquaintance had gone to Congress.

His father suggested that it would be a good idea for him to follow their example.

The suggestion struck him favorably; but there was one great drawback.

The member for the district in which they resided had too strong a hold on his constituency to be easily shaken off.

One morning, when he happened to be in his father's private room at the bank, and while he was considering the matter, an elderly gentleman entered and asked to see the President.

Warren immediately arose to withdraw.

"No, no!" exclaimed the stranger; "don't go, sir, I beg. My business is not of a private nature. I merely called to ask a question or two about the Sedley farm—a most excellent piece of property in Roxbury. One of my constituents is anxious to buy or lease it, and knowing I was to be in New York to-day, requested me to call here about the matter."

"That gentleman is the owner of the farm," smiled the bank president, nodding toward Warren.

"You, sir? I thought——"

"It is my son, sir, Mr. Warren Leland," explained his father. "The property was left him by his grandfather."

"Yes, yes; his mother's father, James Sedley. I knew him very well; and I knew your mother, too, young man, long before she became Mrs. Leland. My name is Sweetland—Emerson Sweetland."

"Ah!" exclaimed the elder Leland; "the member of Congress from the Third Connecticut District."

"Exactly, sir; but for not longer than the present term, I hope. I am heartily tired of it, and am anxious to spend a year or two abroad."

"Well," smiled Warren, "I suppose it's easy enough to find a successor?"

"Not so easy as you think, there are so many qualifications required. What a pity you are not a citizen of Connecticut, and living on your farm at Roxbury. Judging from your looks, you're just the man we want, provided your politics are all right."

"No trouble on that head!" exclaimed the elder Leland, quickly; "they are the same as your own, Mr. Sweetland."

"Then why not think of it?" asked the Congressman. "I have a year longer to serve; that will give you time to gain a residence in the district. You can live in your own house, and turn farmer, you know." Then with a comical look and gesture:

"Good gracious! What am I saying? Advising you to come up and live on the Sedley farm when I am here to buy or lease that very farm for a friend."

"Don't let that thought disturb you," smiled Warren. "I certainly should not think of selling, and I am hardly prepared to consider an offer for a lease."

"Then what do you say to the other plan? You mustn't be surprised that I take so much interest in your mother's son. She was what we call a right smart girl, and I always liked her."

"I am much more inclined to consider that proposition favorably," responded Warren.

"Well, then, I'll help you."

"But won't it be uphill work to prepare myself, get acquainted, and be able to capture the convention in a year's time?"

"Oh, dear no; not with my help, and the help of one other party."

"And who may that other party be, if I may ask?"

"Of course you may. It's Nathan Metcalf, the oracle of Roxbury, the most important man in the district, though not as wealthy as some others."

"Nathan Metcalf," repeated Warren, as though to fix the name in his mind.

"Yes; and my first advice to you, young man, is go and live on your farm, and conquer Nathan Metcalf."

"To do that I must know something about him. What kind of a man is Mr. Metcalf?"

"He is a clever fellow—a very clever fellow, indeed, and all-powerful in his neighborhood, as I have said. He is original, as you will see, and well worth studying. Then there's his daughter—a charming young woman. I tell you, my friend, you must please them, for Metcalf is really the master of the district. Why, I had to secure his friendship, or else, upon my word, I would have been elected to remain at home."

"But, sir, what shall I do to please this powerful man?"

"You must see him. He is, as I tell you, a great oddity. He has never been in Washington; he has a horror of New York and our other large cities. It only needs a little tact to flatter his views on these points. We always need a little tact in this world, young man."

"But his daughter, Mr. Sweetland?"

"Ah, the deuce! You must please the daughter also. He worships her, and she manages him completely, although he grumbles a little sometimes."

"And what sort of a woman is she?"

"A splendid woman, a glorious woman—a widow; somewhat pious, but very well informed—a woman of great merit, I assure you."

"But what course must I take to please this lady?"

"What course? By Jove, young man, you ask a great many questions. I am green as grass with them always. It is a thing I can't understand; but you, my young friend, you have little need to be instructed in that matter. You can't fail to please her; you have only to make yourself agreeable. But you will know how to do it—you will conduct yourself perfectly, I am sure.

"Yes, captivate Metcalf and his daughter. These are my first instructions. And hold! to please them both pay some attention to Miss Lester."

"And who is Miss Lester?"

"An unfortunate young lady, residing with them at present. I can't tell you any more about her just now. But mind! it will please them if you pay her some attention."

Mr. Sidney Leland now asked the Congressman how long he proposed to remain in the city, and on learning that he did not expect to leave until the next day insisted on his taking dinner with them and remaining over night.

Mr. Sweetland consented, and the conversation thus broken off was renewed in the evening.

The next day Warren Leland left New York, armed with the instructions he had received; and, further, with a letter from Emerson Sweetland, M. C., to Nathan Metcalf, Esq.

On reaching the Roxbury station he took a carriage to his own farm, which lay at some distance from the center. While making this transit he considered to himself that the path of ambition was not exactly one of roses, and that it was hard for him, at the outset of his enterprise, to encounter two faces as disquieting as those of Nathan Metcalf and his daughter.

CHAPTER XVII.

A DELICATE SITUATION.

On carefully looking over the ground young Leland determined to wait a little before presenting himself personally to Nathan Metcalf. He sent him Mr. Sweetland's letter, however, accompanied by a neat note of his own, stating that he was unexpectedly recalled to New York, but that he should soon return, and would do himself the honor of paying his respects at the earliest opportunity.

He then hastened to the city, after giving out that he should take up his residence at the farm, as soon as the house could be made habitable; and on reaching New York, sent up an architect and a whole army of workmen to make the necessary alterations and repairs.

At length their work was completed and Leland was informed that his country house was ready for his occupation.

He decided to take possession immediately, and on the very day that Cora Elliston had the talk with Oscar Slyme, started for Roxbury.

He reached the village in safety, and found Seth Gridley, the man who had charge of the farm, in waiting at the station, with a very decent country turnout.

Leland at once took his seat in the carriage. Seth followed, and the horses' heads were turned toward the center.

Passing through the village they struck a long and solemn avenue, shaded by elms, interlacing their thick branches, and leading directly to the Sedley farm.

Presently they reached the house. The front door was open. Leland entered, and received a hearty welcome from Mrs. Seth Gridley, the housekeeper.

Seth then showed him to his own chamber, and when he declared himself ready, conducted him to the dining-room.

Mrs. Gridley had passed half the previous night in slaughtering various dwellers in the poultry yard, and the results of the massacre now successively appeared swimming in butter. The young man managed to get through the meal at last, however, and even found himself in good spirits after it.

He sought for Seth, found him in the great kitchen assisting his wife, and strove to glean from him some information of the Metcalfs. But the farmer, like every genuine Yankee, held it as a tenet of faith that he who gave a plain answer to any question was a dishonored man.

With all possible respect he let the young gentleman understand plainly that he was not to be deceived by his affected ignorance into any belief that Warren Leland did not know a great deal better than he who and what Nathan Metcalf was, where he lived, and what he did; that Warren Leland was his employer, and as such was entitled to his respect; but that he was a New-Yorker, and—as Nathan Metcalf said—all New-Yorkers were frivolous jesters.

For a few moments he leaned over the balustrade of the veranda and looked around.

The night, clear and beautiful, enveloped in its shadowy veil the wide-stretching fields, and a solemn stillness, strange to a New-Yorker's ears, reigned around him, broken only at intervals by the distant bay of a hound, rising suddenly, and anon dying into peace again.

His eyes becoming used to the darkness, Leland descended the veranda steps and passed into the broad avenue, which was darker and more solemn than a cathedral aisle at midnight, and thence into another road into which it led him by chance.

Strictly, speaking, Leland had never, until now, been out of the city, for wherever he had previously gone, he had carried its bustle, worldly and artificial life, play, and the races with him; and the watering-places and the seaside had never shown him true country life.

It gave him a sensation for the first time, but the sensation was not an agreeable one.

As he advanced up this silent road, without residences, without lights, it seemed to him he was wandering among the desolate sites of some lunar region. This part of New England recalled to him the worst cultivated parts of Germany. It wore a rustic and savage character, with its dense shrubbery tufted grass, dark valleys and rough roads.

Wandering on to an eminence, his eyes swept but a fresh horizon of apple trees and wheat fields, and he was about to turn back when a strange sound suddenly arrested his steps. It was a concert of voice and instruments, which in this lost solitude seemed to him only a dream, or, a miracle.

The music was good—even excellent. He recognized a Prelude of Bach, arranged by Gunod. He could not have been more astonished if he had suddenly seen the Grand Opera House set down in front of him.

Filled with curiosity and led by the melody he heard, he descended cautiously the little hill, like a king's son in search of the enchanted princess. The palace he found in the middle of the path, in the shape of the back wall of a dwelling, which fronted on another road. One of the upper windows on this side, however, was open; a bright light streamed from it, and thence he doubted not the sweet sounds came.

With the accompaniment of the piano and stringed instruments rose a fresh, flexible woman's voice, chanting the mystic words of the young master with such expression and power as would have given even him delight. Leland, himself a musician, was capable of appreciating the masterly execution of the piece, and was so much struck by it he felt an irresistible desire to see the performers, especially the singer.

With this impulse he climbed the little hedge bordering the road, placed himself on the top, and found himself several feet above the level of the lighted window. He did not hesitate to use his skill as a gymnast, acquired at Yale, to raise himself to one of the branches of an old oak stretching across the lawn; but during the ascent he could not disguise from himself that his was scarcely a dignified position for the future member of Congress from the district.

He almost laughed aloud at the idea of being surprised in this position by the terrible Metcalf, or his daughter.

He established himself on a large, leafy branch, directly in front of the open window, and notwithstanding that he was at a respectful distance, his glance could readily penetrate into the chamber where the concert was taking place.

A dozen persons, as he judged, were there assembled; several women, of different ages, were seated at a table working; a young man appeared to be writing, while several persons lounged in comfortable seats around the room.

About the piano was a group which chiefly attracted the attention of the spectator in the tree. At the instrument was gravely seated a young girl of some twelve years; immediately behind her stood an elderly man, remarkable for his wonderful physique—his head bald, with a crown of white hair, and bushy, dark eye-brows.

He played the violin with skill and dignity. Seated near him was a man of about fifty, with the most benevolent face imaginable, who played the bass viol with great gusto.

Between them stood the singer. She was a pale brunette, slight and graceful, and not apparently more than twenty-five or twenty-six years of age. The somewhat severe oval of her face was relieved by a bright pair of black eyes that seemed to grow larger as she sang. One hand rested gently on the shoulder of the girl at the piano, and with this she seemed to keep time, pressing gently on the shoulder of the performer to stimulate her zeal. And that hand was delicious!

The hymn of Palestrina had succeeded the Prelude of Bach. It was a quartette, to which two new voices lent their aid. One of the new singers was a young lady of about twenty, quietly dressed, and divinely beautiful, albeit, there was an indescribable expression of sadness on her face.

The benevolent gentleman laid aside his bass-viol, stood up, took off his glasses, and his deep, rich voice completed the full measure of the melody.

After the quartette followed a few moments of general conversation, during which, after embracing the young girl pianist, who immediately left the room, the principal songstress walked to the window.

She leaned out as if to breathe the fresh air, and her profile was sharply relieved against the bright light behind her, in which the others formed a group around the young man at the table, who seemed preparing to read what he had written.

The lady leaned from the window, gently fanning herself as she looked now at the sky, now at the dark landscape. Leland imagined he could distinguish her gentle breathing above the sound of her fan; and leaning eagerly forward for a better view, he caused the leaves to rustle slightly.

She started at the sound, then remained immovable, and the fixed position of her head showed that her gaze was fastened upon the oak in which he was concealed.

He felt the full awkwardness of his position, but could not judge whether or not he was visible to her; but, under the danger of her fixed regard, he passed the most painful moments of his life.

She turned into the room and said, in a calm voice, a few words which brought three or four of her friends to the window; and among them Leland recognized the elderly gentleman with the violin.

The moment was a trying one. He could do nothing but lie still in his leafy retreat—silent and immovable as a statue.

The conduct of those at the window went far to reassure him, for their eyes wandered over the gloom, with evident uncertainty, convincing him he was but suspected—not discovered.

But they exchanged animated observations, to which the party most interested lent an attentive ear.

Suddenly a strong voice, which he recognized as belonging to him of the violin, rose over them all in the pleasing order,

"Loosen the dog!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

PREPARING FOR AN ORDEAL.

The next day after the conference between Cora Elliston and the private secretary, in the library, they met again; and directly afterward Slyme started for Roxbury.

On his return he reported that he had arranged everything to the best of his ability; that Warren Leland had not yet made his appearance at the Metcalfs'; that his own house was nearly, if not quite, completed; but, so far as he could learn, the young man had not yet taken up his abode there.

He might, he said, give up the idea and not live there at all; or even if he did, he might not form the acquaintance of any of the Metcalf family; but should he do so, he, Slyme, would be informed at once, and then Mildred would be summarily removed, as they had agreed in the morning.

"Why do you say he may give up the idea of living in Roxbury after all?"

"There is some talk of his leasing the place to a wealthy party, who, now that it is refitted, is very anxious to get possession of it."

"Do you believe there is anything in it?"

"I don't know."

"You had better go to Roxbury again before this week is out," said Cora, after a moment's thought.

"I think it would be a good plan myself," rejoined the secretary.

But the very next day he received a telegram from the Senator, calling him, peremptorily, to Washington, and he was obliged to leave that same evening.

As he passed down the broad staircase he glanced back, and saw Eugene Cleveland entering Cora Elliston's boudoir.

He gnashed his teeth with rage, and went away with murder in his heart.

Days and weeks passed, and still the Senator's wife lingered in New York.

It was almost six weeks after Slyme's departure. It was nearly six o'clock in the afternoon and Cora awaited Eugene, who was to come after leaving the publishing house down town.

There was a sudden knock at one of the doors of her room, which communicated with her husband's apartment.

It was the Senator himself, who had unexpectedly returned from Washington.

She remarked with surprise, and even with fear, that his countenance was strangely agitated.

"You here, Sherwood?" she exclaimed. "What is the matter with you? Are you ill?"

"No," replied the Senator, "not at all."

"Your return is sudden and unexpected," she said.

"No doubt."

He placed himself before her, and looked at her some moments before speaking again, his eyes rolling in their orbits.

"Cora!" he said at last, with a painful smile, "I must own to you my folly. I have not lived since yesterday—I have received such a singular letter. Would you like to see it?"

"If you please," she replied.

"An anonymous letter?" said Cora, whose eyebrows were slightly raised, with an expression of disdain; then she commenced reading the missive, which was as follows:

"A true friend, Senator, feels indignant at seeing your confidence and your trust abused. You are deceived by those whom you love most.

"A man upon whom you have heaped favors, and a woman who owes everything to you, are united by a secret intimacy which outrages you. They are impatient for the hour when they can divide your spoils.

"He who regards it as a pious duty to warn you, does not desire to calumniate any one. He is sure that as yet your honor is respected by her to whom you have confided it, and that she is still worthy of your confidence and esteem. She wrongs you in allowing herself to count upon the future, which your trusted friend dates from your death. He seeks your widow and your property.

"The poor lady submits against her better judgment to the fascinations of a man who, as is well known, has already betrayed at least one confiding woman. But he—this man, your friend, your relative, almost your son—how can he excuse himself? Every honest person must be revolted by such conduct, and particularly he whom chance informed of the fact, and he who obeys his conscience in giving you this information."

Cora, after reading it, returned the letter to her husband.

"Sign it Oscar Slyme," she said.

"Do you think so?" asked the Senator.

"It is as clear as day," replied the lady. "These expressions betray him—'a pious duty to warn you'—'has already betrayed at least one confiding woman'—'every honest person obeys his conscience.' He can disguise his writing, but not his style. But what is still more conclusive is that which he attributes to Eugene Cleveland—for I suppose it alludes to him—and his private prospects and calculations. This cannot have failed to strike you, as it has myself, I suppose?"

"If I thought this vile letter was his work," cried the Senator, "he should leave my employ. I would kick him out of the house."

"Why so? It is better to laugh at it!"

The statesman commenced one of his solemn walks up and down the room. Cora looked uneasily at the clock. Her husband, intercepting one of these glances, suddenly stopped.

"Do you expect Eugene to-day?" he inquired.

"Yes, I think he will call after business is over."

"I think he will," responded the Senator, with a convulsive smile. "And do you know, my dear," he added, "the contemptible idea which has haunted me since I received this infamous letter?—for I believe that infamy is contagious."

"You have conceived the idea of watching our interview?" said Cora, in a tone of indolent raillery.

"Yes," assented her husband; "there—behind that portiere—as in a theater; but, thank God, I have been able to resist this base intention. If ever I allow myself to play so mean a part, I should wish at least to do it with your knowledge and consent."

"And do you ask me to consent to it?" asked Cora.

"My dear wife," said the Senator, in a sad and almost supplicating tone, "I am an old fool—an overgrown child—but I feel that this miserable letter is going to poison my life. I shall no longer have an hour of peace and confidence. Do you wonder at me? I am an honorable man, but I have learned that all men are not like myself. There are some things which to me seem as impossible as walking on my head, yet I see others doing these things every day. What can I say—how can I tell you? After reading this perfidious letter I thought how you had delayed coming to me, and I could not help recollecting that your intimacy with Eugene has greatly increased of late."

"Without doubt," said Cora. "I am very fond of him."

"I remembered also your being with him that night in the snuggery, during the grand party. When I awoke you had both an air of mystery. What mysteries could there be between you two?"

"You shall know it at the proper time."

"Finally, I swear to you that I suspect neither of you. I neither suspect you of wronging me—of disgracing me—or of soiling my name—God in heaven help me!

"But if you two should love each other, even while respecting my honor; if you love each other and confess it—if you two, even at my side, in my heart—if you, my wife, my nephew, should be calculating with impatient eyes the progress of my old age—planning your projects for the future, and smiling at my approaching death—postponing your happiness only for my tomb—you may think yourselves guiltless! But no, no; this would be shameful!"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

You have a little band around the third finger of your left hand in which is set a turquoise, and when it was put there you remembered that the Hindu said: "He who hath a turquoise hath a friend." Now, that's what you have in the man you love best, and whose wife you are going to become—a friend. He is your sweetheart, your lover, it is true; but because to you his heart seems best worth having, his love the richest gift you can possess, you will not vulgarize, as many girls do, the tie that binds you. It is true you go with him alone to hear some wonderful music or look at some fine pictures, but I hope it is not true that when you are at a party or in your own home you two pair off and make yourselves the objects for silly chatter and idiotic jesting.

He can love you with his whole heart, but he must not make you an object of ridicule. He can think you the most unselfish girl in the world, but he must not show his own selfishness by expecting you to devote your evenings exclusively to him, ignoring those who are at home. Let him come in and be one of them—there's a dear five minutes when he can speak to you, when he can kiss you on the lips that he knows are only the gates to sweet, pure speech, and when he can whisper the lovely nothings that mean so much to you both. Then, too, don't let him feel that he must give up all his friends for you; don't accept valuable presents from him, and don't assume an air of proprietorship with him. Tell him nothing about your family affairs, for the secrets of the household do not even belong to the man you are going to marry. Guard yourself in word and in deed, hold his love in the best way possible, tie it firmly to you with the blue ribbon of hope, and never let it be eaten away by that little fox who destroys so many loving ties, and who is called familiarity.—Ladies' Home Journal.

AT DEAN'S STATION, Ohio, last week lightning struck a car loaded with powder. The explosion was terrible. Five persons were instantly killed and several injured.

THE Press complains that it will cost a good deal to carry out the new election law. However, it says nothing about the proposed federal election law, that will cost the government from fifteen to twenty millions.

THE republican chairman of the third Minnesota congressional district refused to call their convention to order, saying he would not support the nominee. The McKinley bill makes him a democrat.

LAKE IBRAHIM one of the sources of the Nile, furnishes an abundance of lotus plants, which Col. C. C. Long says the natives eat. He and his men found the tender buds very agreeable, and they seemed to have narcotic properties, causing the men to sleep. He thinks it is from this comes the old idea of the Lotus Eaters, so poetically referred to by Tennyson.

THE auditor of Kosciusko county has several years refused to publish the usual report, and there has been a fuss made about it. The people want to see how things stand and where the money has gone. So they are having an investigation. A committee of three, one democrat, one republican and one prohibitionist, are at work and will soon report. Now if such a thing had happened in a democratic county, what a cry there would be.

REPUBLICANS don't care such a great deal for the old soldier, as they make believe. When the new pension bill was under consideration, Hon. A. N. Martin, of the Bluffton district, Indiana, asked leave to substitute in place of it, the Grand Army bill which the old soldiers were promised in '88 should be passed. Speaker Reed, refused to allow this. Martin then asked leave to put in an amendment, a section to repeal the limitation of arrears. This was refused by the speaker and when Mr. Martin then asked unanimous consent, but could not obtain it. The republican leaders think most of the old soldier, at the time he is about to drop a ballot into the box.

NEARLY every republican exchange we pick up has an article in almost the same words, finding fault with the condition of the state finances. But every state office has been filled by a republican for four years past, and for two years we have even had a republican governor. Republicans promised the people, if they got into power, they would reduce taxes and pay off the debt. Taxes have not been reduced. The debt has not been paid, but with their own men at the open money box, the debt, they say is still big. Of course it is, and will be till the democracy can once more control the state's finances. If people object to a state debt, let them turn out the men now at the helm, whose blunders and incompetency, have brought things to this pass, and put in men who can run the state government on business principles.

Text-Books Ordered.

In conversation with Superintendent Merica we learn that the Garrett School Board have made their requisition for books to be used the coming year. The law gives the companies furnishing the books 90 days to fill the order, and the board have shown good judgment in making their order early so as to cause no delay at the opening of the schools. Other school boards and trustees should go and do likewise.

In townships where the schools begin in September the old trustees should order the books as the time between the beginning of the schools and the first of August, the date when the change of officers will take place, is too short to insure the books to be on hand at the opening of the schools. This is a very important duty that no trustee should neglect.

The Dispatch is Too Hasty.

The Dispatch last week attacks our position that "We have always found democratic officers cheaper and more economical than republican." The Dispatch is too hasty. It don't stop to look up the facts—evidently don't want to. So it goes on and produces a list of democratic officials who have stolen money and have been punished for it. Served them right. No democrat should steal money. He is pretty sure to be caught at it and punished. Besides, from a democratic standpoint it is wrong. No one ought to steal. It is wicked, and he who steals, should be punished according to the enormity of his crime. But this don't seem to be the republican idea and therefore, we wonder the Dispatch did not think of the hole he was getting into, when he carried the idea that stealing, was in some undefined way, a reproach. For his party, in general, instead of calling its rascals up and punishing them, has either let them go, or promoted them to a higher place, with the evident intention of either causing the crime to be overlooked, or else making such things respectable. Yes, the Dispatch was hasty. Now, when the next one of their pets gets his hands into the public crib and fills his own pockets with the people's money, the Dispatch will have to be consistent and advocate his punishment. But this would break the republican record.

The Dispatch may, in its ignorance, really believe that more democratic than republican officers prove dishonest. This will not be the first instance in which it has shown gross ignorance. This again, showed too great haste. It should have informed itself, and at least have looked up and published a list of high up republicans, who had not only been dishonest in various ways, but who had had their offenses condoned by high republican officials and the republican party in general, including the editor of the Dispatch. We have only space to name a few. Among them, let us notice M. S. Quay, present republican senator from Pennsylvania. He too, had been a state treasurer and had got away with near half a million of the state funds. The Dispatch evidently forgot to include him in its list. Republicans even, and republican papers in his state, charged him with the steal, and he has never denied it. Yet in the face of all this, he has been promoted by the very men he stole from, till he is today "United States Senator" in good standing in the republican party. He lead the campaign of 1888 and paid out the vast sums of money raised by Wanamaker and the President's son Russell, and by the help of Blocks-of-five Dudley, elected Ben. the Pious, and Benny made Wanamaker postmaster general to pay him for raising that vast corruption fund, at times when not engaged teaching his Sunday School.

Then Look at Blaine, statesman, who never denied his connection with a number disreputable schemes that made him rich, because he was "let in on the ground floor," and "cast his anchor to windward." With a full knowledge of all these, his party tried to make him president, and after an outraged people had rejected him, Ben. Harrison, a man who claims to be a saint, makes him the chief member of his cabinet. Blaine and Steve Elkins, who robbed the government of untold sums are to-day in partnership to control the Standard Oil Company's wells in West Virginia.

The Dispatch's list of defaulters is not so long, but we could make one at least equal to it in numbers, composed entirely of that class of men, and all republicans, who have been selected by Harrison for various responsible offices. Geo. P. Fisher, of Delaware, driven by Grant from the U. S. district attorneyship for gross frauds, appointed now to be first auditor of the treasury. Then we find Sam. Kircheval, who boasts of how he helped in the blocks-of-five crime; Hornaday, who got the $5,800 of a farmer on false pretense to buy cattle down in the south part of Indiana; both given good offices. And so we might go on. When the Dispatch stops to consider, we have an idea it wont care to pursue this subject.

The Press' Tariff Ideas.

These are badly mixed. Last week he said that the effect of a tariff is to lower the price. In his last issue he forgot about this, and said, "Without a tariff, the inevitable result would be that the standard of wages would be lowered in this country." Now, putting his two statements together, it reads like this: "A tariff will lower prices of manufactured articles so that the man who owns the factory can pay higher wages.

Then he adds in effect: "Cheapness brings demoralization in wages making it difficult to get work on any terms. The promised cheapness is a delusion." But the week before, July 10, he had said: "Protection has proved a boon to consumers in that the price of every article that comes near supplying the popular demand, is cheaper to-day." First he argues that protection makes cheaper, and that cheapness is "a boon," or blessing. Seven days later, he says "cheapness is a delusion." Now which is right, Pillip drunk, or Phillip sober?" But the Press editor don't drink. How then are we to account for these contrary and very silly statements? Republican county newspapers ought to send to headquarters for fresh instructions. They have apparently lost their bearings.

Attention, Soldiers!

All soldiers who are drawing a pension of less than $12 a month, are now entitled to the full $12 under the recent act of June 27. I will assist to secure this increase for any soldier entitled to the same.

State Candidates.

We have received letters from a number of them, and personal visits from four or five. All are good men, and of the kind any good citizen could well afford to support, either at the convention or at the polls. But of course DeKalb county will support in the convention, the candidates who are in this part of the state, other things being equal Among these are Henry C. Berghoff of Ft. Wayne, who is a candidate for treasurer. He is a man of ability and high character and we presume our county will give him a solid support. Then there is J. O. Henderson of Kokomo, who is running for state auditor. He is every way worthy, and no doubt DeKalb will give him a good vote, as he is the nearest candidate. The same same may be said of Hon. Daniel McDonald of Marshall county, candidate for clerk of the supreme court. For attorney-general, there is Green Smith, of Jennings county, the man whose courage and ability prevented Ben. Harrison from breaking over that majority of two the democrats had in the legislature in the winter of 1887. But for Mr. Smith, Senator Turpie would not now be in the Senate of the United States. Democrats now have a chance to remember his services by making him attorney-general.

At Their Old Tricks.

It does not seem possible for republicans to run an honest campaign. We had hoped the new law against bribery, would dampen their ardor in the blocks-of-five methods. But it appears, they can't break off old habits. Word comes from a reliable source, that a democratic worker has been approached and asked quietly, as to the feeling in his section, as to Mr. Coffinberry. From one point to another, the interview drifted, till, the republican "trusted man," asked the democrat "Would say, $25 be an object for you to go out and work in this campaign for Crooks?" The interview had come to a head just where the democrat had expected it would, and as the same fine worker had been seen in that section pretty often it is evident they are at their old tricks. We shall keep our readers posted as to the work of these "trusted men, with blocks of five."

Fix the Roads.

Fix up the roads for the fair. We spoke last week of the bridges over Seventh street and North street. This is an urgent case. All who come to the fair from north, from west, and to a great extent from the south, must cross the creek at one of these two places. A good ford can be made at the Seventh street bridge, and our town authorities ought to see to it. This would help a good deal. Then let the country officers improve the road running south through Gas Addition. That would enable people from Jackson and Concord to come to the fair easily.

TOWN ORDINANCE.

An Ordinance to Amend Section Two (2) and Three (3) of "An Ordinance to regulate and license the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, and other intoxicating liquors, within the corporate limits of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county and state of Indiana," which was in force and took effect June 15, 1885.

Section 1. Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn in DeKalb county in the state of Indiana, that section two (2) of the above entitled ordinance be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

Section 2. "Any person or persons desiring to obtain a license to sell spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in said town of Auburn, in less quantities than a quart at a time, shall pay to the treasurer of said town the sum of one hundred and fifty (150) dollars as a license fee, for one year, and shall pay to said treasurer a like sum each succeeding year thereafter, if he or they desire to sell spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in less quantity than a quart at a time in said town. If he or they desire to sell only vinous and malt, or spirituous liquors, or both, he or they shall pay said treasurer said sum of one hundred and fifty (150) dollars as a license fee as herein provided. On paying said sum he or they shall take said treasurer's receipt therefor, which receipt shall be filed with said bond accompanied with an application for a license which application shall designate the kind of liquors he or they desire to sell, and shall contain a description of the place where such liquors are to be sold under such license: Provided that persons holding licenses under the ordinance hereby amended shall at the taking effect of this ordinance, surrender the same, and shall pay to the treasurer of said town an amount in money which with the sum paid for the unexpired term of said surrendered license shall be at the rate of $150 per year for such unexpired term, and thereupon said board shall issue to such person or persons a license for the unexpired term of such surrendered license: Provided also, that except as provided above, no license shall be granted for a greater or less time than one year, and no license under this ordinance shall be issued to any person or persons, except those holding a license duly issued by the Auditor of said DeKalb county under section 5318 of the Revised Statutes of 1881 of the State of Indiana."

Section 2. All licenses issued by virtue of the ordinance set forth in the title of this ordinance are hereby revoked

Section 3. That section three (3) of the above entitled ordinance be and the same is amended to read as follows: "Any person or persons found guilty by any court of competent jurisdiction of selling any spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in violation of the provisions of this ordinance and the ordinance hereby amended, shall on conviction thereof be fined in the sum of one hundred and fifty (150) dollars.

Section 4. This ordinance shall and is hereby declared to be in full force and effect on and after the 15 day of September 1890.

Notice of Road Petition.

Notice is hereby given, that a petition for change of highway in Smithfield township, will be presented to the board of county commissioners at their next regular session beginning Sept 1, 1890. Said petition will be for a change in the road, at the Hiram Brand farm in Smithfield township, for the purpose of getting the road on the line.

Obituary.

Died at her home in Concord township DeKalb county, Ind., July 16, 1890, Ellen, wife of John W. Wyatt. The deceased was the daughter of Hugh and Ellen Maxwell, (deceased.) She was born in DeKalb county, Ind., October 18, 1842, her age being 47 years, 8 months and 28 days. She was united in marriage to John W. Wyatt, March 15, 1862, since which time she has proven herself an affectionate and devoted wife. She leaves behind many grief stricken friends, and a heart broken husband to mourn their deep felt loss. Ellen sought and found peace in her Lord and Savior, many years ago, and never lost sight of the beacon light, but died happy in the triumphs of a living faith, and the God who gave her. The funeral was on Thursday July 17, and she was laid to rest in the cemetery at Newville. Rev. Mr. Starr, of the Christian church at Edgerton, officiated. Mrs. Wyatt was a woman of more than average ability and energy. She was especially energetic in all good works such as the church and Sunday school. Her place will be difficult to fill in these respects and the community will lose a worthy member and good neighbor. Again we are reminded that death is swallowed up in victory.

"Oh death where is thy sting!
Oh grave where is thy victory!"

Dearest Ellen, thou hast left us,
Brothers, sisters, friends and I,
But heaven has gained another treasure,
And we'll follow by and by.

Yes, dear Ellen thou hast left us,
Sitting weary, sad, alone.
Now, dear Lord I pray thee help me,
That I may say, Thy will be done.

DITCH LETTING.

In the DeKalb Circuit Court.

The undersigned Commissioner, charged with the execution of the above work, hereby gives notice that he has divided said work into stations of one hundred (100) feet each, commencing at the source and numbering down stream. Also, that he will, at his office in Farmers' Bank Building, in Auburn, DeKalb Co., Indiana, on at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, proceed to let the contract by stations to the lowest and best bidder, for the construction of said ditch according to the orders of said court, establishing said ditch, which contract includes the furnishing of all material and the labor of each station. Said work to be completed on or before the first day of November, 1890. The successful bidder or bidders shall enter into contract, and give bond with sufficient surety for the performance of said contract. The Commissioner reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

THOS. H. SPROTT, Commissioner.

The Wabash Will be Built.

We clip the following very sensible article from the Angola Herald: "To the voters of Otsego township: There is no question but what the Wabash company will build a road to Chicago and they will decide within the next thirty days the point they will start from, Auburn or Montpelier. Auburn has many advantages to offer, which the company will take into consideration, among others, they will donate the right of way and a very large donation in money, this in connection with 22 miles of road already built at a cost of over three hundred thousand dollars and which the company would use should they start from Auburn, has quite a bearing in favor of Auburn, while upon our side, should we vote the proposed tax in the several townships and secure all we can by donations it would be all we have to offer with the advantages our line may have, against all of Auburn's donations. And now voter, investigate for yourself, and see if it would not be to your interest and the interest of the township to vote the tax. Would it not pay back in taxes to the township in ten fold measure, all the township would donate by voting the tax? Look at Steuben township; the railroad paid eleven hundred and fifty-three dollars in taxes in that township this year and in Pleasant township it paid twelve hundred and twenty-one dollars in taxes, and should we secure this road it would pay more tax in our township than the above. Why? Because it is an east and west road and would be more valuable. Voter, in five years it would pay more back in taxes than we as a township would donate by voting the tax, let alone the taxes it would pay each year thereafter, or all the other advantages the road would bring us and now, as voters of Otsego township, let us work for our good, and the good of the township; let us vote the tax, then if we get no road we get no tax, as the tax is not to be paid without we get the road, and should we do nothing we must expect nothing and Auburn will walk away with the prize that justly belongs to us, and which I believe we may secure if we vote the tax, but we must work if we would get the road.

A VOTER.

It was Only a Box Car.

Last Sunday morning when the inhabitants of our little burg were reposing in an oblivious quietness, with no thought of danger hovering near, they were suddenly aroused from the sweet refreshing slumbers of early morn to a realization of an unpleasant anticipation of nameless dread. The sharp, violent clatter of the fire bell, the loud, noisy rattling of the engine, hose cart and ladder wagon, together with the yells of excited people as they beheld that peculiar procession rushing wildly down Main street at a furious rate of speed, was sufficient to disturb the deep slumbering of a sound sleeper, and brought old and young to the door. It was then understood by all that the fiery elements were at work in the south part of town, and everybody forgot all else, and started en masse, in hot haste to see where the fire was and what was being consumed. Luckily the subject which attracted this tumultuous throng, was only an Illinois Central box car loaded with charcoal, which was supposed to have been put in the car before the fire was all out of it, thus causing it to ignite while it was being transported over the Wabash road, and the train men deeming it unwise and unsafe to carry a flaming car over the track, they set it off on the sidetrack east of the depot, a little distance below the elevator, and at once notified the fire company, who responded to the call without delay. The car was a very difficult thing to handle, but by a little engineering and a steady stream of water the fire was put out with but little damage to anything except the car and its contents. Just what might have been the result, had this car been neglected, we cannot guess But we know the Hoosier Boys "can get there just the same" when a stream of water is needed to control an unruly flame

CONSUMPTION,

IN its first stages, can be successfully checked by the prompt use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Even in the later periods of that disease, the cough is wonderfully relieved by this medicine.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."—A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middleton, Tennessee.

"Several years ago I was severely ill. The doctors said I was in consumption, and that they could do nothing for me, but advised me, as a last resort, to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking this medicine two or three months I was cured, and my health remains good to the present day."—James Birchard, Darien, Conn.

"Several years ago, on a passage home from California, by water, I contracted so severe a cold that for some days I was confined to my state-room, and a physician on board considered my life in danger. Happening to have a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, I used it freely, and my lungs were soon restored to a healthy condition. Since then I have invariably recommended this preparation."—J. B. Larwill, Ind., has a paper now. It has always been a bright little town, chock full of business and of enterprise. The "Review" is quite a good paper, though we don't understand why the first number is marked "Volume 11, No. 7," and yet in the editor's bow, it speaks as if this is the first number. The St. Joe News says that J. W. Dills had a field of wheat that will likely average forty-five bushels to the acre. Chris. Corie, a near neighbor says his wheat goes about twenty to the acre all through. He also believes the entire crop of the county, will be about two-thirds the usual amount of a full crop. From all we hear, that is high enough. In some townships it will not exceed half a crop, but the high townships, like Fairfield have pretty good wheat in general.

Wanted, everybody to have cabinet photos at $1.50 per dozen. Save half by going to Davison's, Waterloo.

Execution by electricity is to be called "electrocution." Another new word in the grand old English language.

Something new, a Red, White and Green social Friday evening on the court yard. Come and see and eat.

Mrs. C. P. Glazier went to Ft. Wayne Saturday for treatment by Dr. T. J. Dills. Her eyes have been troubling her for some time.

Wm. Little's feed barn and feed yard one block south of the engine house, or south of jail. Your horses will be well cared for. Try him. tf

A gray beard on a man under 50 makes him look older than he is. The best dye to color brown or black is Buckingham's Dye for the whiskers.

George Kirkpatrick is now engaged with the Monitor Windmill Co. to sell their mills. We believe he will prove an excellent man for the business.

John Leasure has had his bakery room on Seventh street repainted. A much needed improvement that changes the looks of the building considerably.

For sale: A 40 acre tract in Richland township, 25 acres in good timber, balance farming land, only 3 miles north of Auburn. Inquire of Henry Korff. 3t

As usual, the Garrett windjammer last week could not help lying when he said John Treesh had been allowed four dollars for one days work and that town Attorney Dills' salary was $100.

A large audience at the M. E. church Sunday evening, were well entertained and instructed by Mr. Lamport's sermon. The discourse was full of good thoughts and was well received.

Hard coal for winter use in stoves is being delivered now to those who use it. It makes one almost prespire to think of it these hot days. But if we don't get it now, we may not get it at all.

Graham Earle and wife have been spending their summer vacation at Kendallville with the parents of the present Mrs. Earle. He claims to have had a very prosperous year in their theater business.

The normal school begun here Monday, with an attendance much better than on the first day last year. It bids fair to be well patronized. We hope so, for Mr. Harrison and Mr. Coe, are capable of doing good work.

M. B. Masters came in with a load of wheat from Concord township last Wednesday. It was, we believe the first load of new wheat brought to Auburn this season. If there were any before him, we have not heard of it.

We had an item from Richland last week, that we do not think stated the facts correctly, or at least the circumstances were exaggerated. We have found out more about the matter, and feel satisfied that the party complained of was criticised more harshly than the facts would warrant.

Swineford's livery stable is being completely overhauled and refitted. An addition has been put up all along the east side, and a new floor in the main building. It will be quite a large establishment. We understand J. C. Henry will have charge of it. His acknowledged business ability, will insure its success.

Mrs. John Fretz, and daughter Agnes, started last Thursday morning for the southern part of the state, where they expect to make an extended visit in Daviess and Green counties. Mrs. F's mother, brothers and sisters reside in Green county, she not having seen the place for seventeen years. It is thought she will enjoy the trip very much.

George Fretz, of Odon, Ind., who came to Auburn to spend the Fourth, returned to home last Thursday morning, after a pleasant visit among friends and relatives. Mr. F. was formerly a resident of this county, but for a number of years he has lived in Daviess county. He has noted Auburn's improvements with a DeKalb boy's pride, and hopes that as a town, it may realize the highest ambition of a Hoosier town to cope with sister towns.

We omitted to notice last week, an accident to G. W. Lewis, reported in the Hicksville News. Mr. Lewis and Cook Ford were in a buggy, Mr. Lewis driving and Cook sitting in behind leading a colt. The colt took fright and jumped into the buggy. This scared the horse and the buggy was overturned. Mr. Lewis was considerably bruised and injured internally. But as the News did not speak of it in its last issue, we suppose he is getting along.

Simmons Liver Regulator has never failed to relieve constipation of the bowels.

Ice cream, cake, watermelon and a full supper at the lawn social, Friday evening on court house lawn. All come.

Mr. Harrison returned last week from his vacation at the old home, Lagrange, Ohio. Mrs. Harrison, will remain a few weeks longer.

D. S. Segner, station agent at Hanover, Mich., sends in his subscription this week, for which he has thanks. DeKalb has reason to feel pleased with the success of her boys who have gone abroad. We are personally acquainted with the most of them.

Attorney Gengler, of Garrett, was over here Friday on some legal matters. He is also interested in the Tri-State Building and Loan Association of Ft. Wayne, being secretary and attorney for the local board at Garrett. It is probably a good institution.

The evils resulting from habitual costiveness are many and serious; but the use of harsh, drastic purgatives is quite as dangerous. In Ayer's Pills, however, the patient has a mild but effective aperient, superior to all others, especially for family use.

Dr. G. W. Long county clerk of Allen county, died at home in Ft. Wayne last week. Mr. Kern, his deputy has been appointed to fill out his term. Dr. Long, was also, chairman of the democratic county committee, and member for this district on the state committee.

The news of the untimely death of Miss Belle Ressigue at her Garrett home last Friday morning, will bring sadness to the hearts of many young people who knew her. She was a young lady of more than ordinary intelligence and amiability, and had a large circle of warm friends. Typhoid fever was the disease.

Dr. Hoffman, stepson of our friend J. H. Pyle, was home for a brief visit last week. He is located at Bryan and in practice as a veterinary surgeon, doing well, as we are told. Frank is an old Waterloo boy and graduated in the famous veterinary college at Toronto, in the same class with Dr. Harry Chamberlain.

As will be seen by an article we publish to-day, the Wabash road gained its suit with the Western Indiana, last week. That settles it, that the Wabash will soon begin to run the Canada Pacific trains over the line from Detroit through here, and also that it will soon need the new line of its own, that has been so much talked of.

J. M. Brumbeck's barn at the cross roads one-half mile south of Sedan, was struck by lightning Thursday afternoon and was burned to the ground with about two tons of hay. There was $400 insurance on the building, insured in the Ohio Insurance Co., of which Mr. Hastings, of this city is agent. Ed. Brumbeck was down here Friday to see about the matter.

C. P. Urie informed us while here last week, that his brother Will, has been in a hardware store ever since Harrison's civil service reform put him out of the postoffice at Burr Oak. Mrs. Urie, his mother, and her daughter Nettie are living there. It might interest some of our good looking girls and energetic young men, to know that Nettie and Will are both single.

Jerry Bitner formerly foreman of this office came back for a short vacation last Thursday. He has been for some years in a large job office in Chicago. Lately he has been working on the Chicago directory, but a strike having been ordered, he took the opportunity to come back and see his old home. Jerry learned his trade in this office and has always been a steady young man. We are glad to say he has been a success.

There was a large audience at the open air temperance meeting Sunday on the public square. Rev. H. C. Smith of the Baptist church, preached a powerful sermon. The Arien Quartet sang delightfully, as they always do. Gertie and Elsie Carruth and May Rose, spoke pieces which were appropriate to the occasion, and were nicely given. And the two little Fisher girls sang some of their sweet songs. Mrs. Ehlers presided with her usual ability, and the whole meeting was a decided success.

The gall some editors (?) display, is simply amazing. What respectable editor would think of putting in his own photo to illustrate an advertisement in his own paper. But look at the advertisement of the "Model" as seen in the Garrett "Skookmackuck." The picture is the very image of Hank Little as he motioned and guided a young fellow on democrat convention day, telling him, "Go and get that bottle filled, or bring back that quarter —— —— you." Both were in bad shape, and the way Hank's dexter finger would order the young man back or send him across the street, and the expression of his face, are precisely shown in the advertisement. Gall!

The August number of The Forum will contain a remarkable essay, by Prince P. Kropotkin, on "The Possibilities of Agriculture." He has made a thorough investigation of the fabulous results of the scientific cultivation of land in the most densely populated portions of Europe, and he shows the ease with which the number of acres now cultivated in the civilized parts of the world can be made to yield sustenance for many times the number of people now alive. Scientific and intensive agriculture in the United States, for instance, can be made to sustain in plenty, and with much greater cheapness than now, a population at least ten times as dense. The writer shows conclusively why it is that such slow progress is made in these revolutionary improvements in agriculture; but he predicts with confidence that we are on the eve of the reign of plenty. He proposes that a hundred acres be cultivated in this way as a part of the exposition at Chicago, in order to demonstrate the possibilities of multiplying many times the products of the American farmer.

So easy in its action, harmless and effectual in relieving is Simmons Liver Regulator.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Meade have returned from their visit with friends in Steuben county.

The Ladies' Missionary society of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. T. P. Scott next Monday evening at 8 o'clock. All come.

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Sopher with the little folks drove over to Albion last Sunday, where Mrs. F., expects to make an extended visit with her mother and other relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards were up into Fairfield Saturday visiting Mrs. R's people, the family of Wm. Buss. Mr. Buss, though in poor health for some time, remains about as usual.

The expense to this county in the trial of the celebrated Allen county bridge case tried here about a year ago, amounting to $649.40 was last week collected by County Attorney Dills and turned into our county treasury.

You should not forget to notice E. F. Sopher's Black Excelsior paint "ad" this week. If you have a roof that needs painting, we believe you can do no better than to give him a trial. He fully warrants all his work.

Mrs. Frank Borst celebrated her birthday Saturday by entertaining quite a number of her lady friends who were her old neighbors at Corunna. There were also some of her Auburn friends present, and all had a nice time.

Will Fisher, of Waterloo, was over here last Saturday to get a new Richey road cart. He thinks it a good style. Mr. Fisher has a trotter that he is having trained for the track, and which he believes will show good speed.

Mr. Moody has fitted up a very neat and convenient law office in the Farmers' Bank Building, first door to the left, at the head of the stairs. Here he will hold himself ready to attend to all legal business intrusted to his care.

W. B. Odion, of the Angola Herald was here last Wednesday. He is giving the democrats up there an excellent local paper, and even furnishing light to dawn on the darkness of republicanism in that rock-ribbed stronghold.

L. B. Fretz is expected to address the people at the Church of God next Sunday morning at 10:30. His subject will be Young "Men's Day Dreams." He has something that is well worth listening to and no young man should miss it.

Thousands have been relieved of indigestion and loss of appetite by a single bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of this medicine, by giving tone and strength to the assimilative organs, has made innumerable cures of chronic dyspepsia. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

Mr. Madden, of the firm of Smith & Madden, is off on a trip to the east for a stock of marble and granite. They have been delayed so much in getting material, that they find it best to go down in person. They are getting out some very heavy monuments, and must have the stock, and that of the right kind.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Auburn, Ligonier & Chicago railroad company at Albion last Saturday, Messrs Davis, Gerber, J. E. Rose were appointed to lay before the Wabash officials the maps, profile and feasibility of the Auburn route. Judge McClellan was requested to also accompany them.

Miss Alice Palmer who is well known to the W. C. T. U. ladies of the town, will conduct a school at Island Park, from July 31, until August 6. The object of this school is to give instruction in the various departments of W. C. T. U. work. All who are interested in this work are urged to attend and will, no doubt, be greatly benefited. 30 31

Our old farmer friend D. B. Olinger, was in here Thursday last to pay up ahead for the Courier as is his custom. He was 77 the 17th day of June, and has been in the county since September 1846. In spite of his advanced age, he has been helping some in the hay field. Few men of that age could do it. He attributes his good health to temperate living.

Rev. Adam Kline, a brother of our townsman, M. Kline, who is visiting with the family of the latter, preached a powerful sermon at the Church of God Sunday evening, Mr. K., is one of those plain, out-spoken, matter-of-fact ministers, who preach the christian doctrine in language that can in no wise be misconstued, and all who had the opportunity of hearing his address received a rare treat in point of eloquence.

Elder Ward is delivering choice garden vegetables to families now. In spite of the very dry, hot weather, he seems to have a fair supply. This reminds us, that our venerable friend, Mrs. Ward, is a strong democrat and a prohibitionist, and for these two reasons, she appreciates the Courier and its good work. She has a neighborly way of showing this, for she sent us a fine lot of vegetables this week.

Island Park Assembly.

The 12th annual meeting at Island Park, Rome City will open July 30 and close August 13. There will be also, a camp meeting beginning July 23, and lasting a week to July 30, closing at the time the regular Assembly begins. For the Assembly a full program is made out providing for lectures by some of the best talent in the country. There will of course be classes of instruction in various sciences and all the work that has usually been done at the assembly. Special rates on the railroads. Willis, at the book store near the postoffice in Auburn, has a supply of catalogues for all who wish to get them. Call on him.

Dr. Adams has a nephew from Illinois visiting him.

The shoe store at Bowman's old stand, moved to Toledo yesterday.

Ben. Zimmerman and his daughter Gracie are visiting relatives in Michigan.

The B. & O. runs an excursion to Rome City August 8, leaving Auburn at 9 a. m.

Mrs. Dr. Adams went up to Waterloo Tuesday for a short visit with her children.

Mr. Post has returned from Hanover, Mich., his wife remaining there for the present.

J. A. Potter had the misfortune to lose his horse Monday. It was worth $150 at least.

A. J. Ralston, has word that his family arrived at Lakeside in safety the evening they left here.

Mrs. Anice Lees and son John went to Ann Arbor Tuesday to visit Mrs. A. Lees. Miss Nannie Lees expects to start for California this week.

A letter from John W. Dills, at Battle Creek, states that he is improving in health under the treatment there. We hope soon to hear of his complete recovery.

Workmen commenced early Monday morning to remove the shingles from the Baptist church. The new ones they put on, have been coated with paint to improve their lasting qualities.

Recorder Geo. Crane joined the M. E. church Sunday. Let us hope that whatever errors Mr. Crane has heretofore made, may now be amended, and that he will stand by his new resolutions.

Fred. Davis and his sister Edna, Bernie Trentman and his sister Mamie, Will Schaab and Alda Barkley and Clarence Raut and wife expect to go up to Clear Lake Thursday to remain a few days.

To feed the hungry, assist in a good cause and have a pleasant gathering, are among the reasons why we should patronize the young ladies who have the social on the court yard lawn Friday evening. Regular supper; besides ice cream, cake and watermelon.

C. H. Husselman, of Wichita, Kansas, came back Saturday morning. He was called here suddenly by the dangerous illness of his mother, Mrs. George Husselman, who lives at the north end of town. He brings word that Dr. Littlefield and F. K. Blake are prospering, especially the latter.

A "red, white and green" social will be given on the court lawn Friday evening by the young ladies of the Presbyterian church. Besides the usual supper, which will be served from 5 until 7 o'clock, there will be cake, ice cream, watermelon, etc. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Married, at the residence of the bride in Perry township, Allen county, July 17, 1890, Perry E. Griffin to Miss Mary Griffin, Rev. W. L. Messe officiating. The parties are all residents of Perry township, the bride being the daughter of 'Squire A. C. Griffin. The Courier sends congratulations.

Send a postal card to W. L. Messe, Auburn, and have him bring a Favorite Washer to show you what nice work it does, and how much hard work it saves the women folks. He has just received a new supply of these favorites. He has wringers also. Buy a washer that has been used about here for years and has proved satisfactory.

Christ. Fell and John Smith went up to Fairfield, the latter's old home last Friday to have an old fashioned huckleberry gathering, at the place of our old friend Andrew Smith. They had big luck, for they brought home thirty-five quarts of the finest berries seen for many a year. The boys are now at the head of the list in this line.

Dr. J. B. Casebeer went this week to New York City, where he will attend a summer medical school, known as the Polyclinic Institute. It is a school of a high order, at which physicians who are in practice can attend now and then, as they feel they need. This enables them to keep up with the times, by refreshing their knowledge, and learning all the new ideas that are developed from time to time.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson and family were here Friday and Saturday, on their way to spend a season at Lakeside. At this place, they were joined by several of our citizens, the whole party going on the north-bound Saturday noon train. Those from this place were Mrs. F. J. Yesbera, Mrs. Hare, Mrs. A. J. Ralston, and her daughters Alza and Samme, and Mrs. A. Lewis and her little son. Mrs. Lewis' sister, Mrs. Kaley, had preceded them, as we believe their father, J. P. Widney has a cottage at Lakeside.

The big ditch along the north side of the Wabash railroad toward the Juncton is progressing. But the finest improvement down that way, is the line of maple trees along the Avenue. There are hundreds of them and scarcely any have died. The people along the Avenue have generally painted up their dwellings and tidied up their property, till it all shows great improvement. The Monitor Windmill Co., we are told, have bought near the Mascot House, land enough to give room for new factory buildings some day. It will be a good location.

Auburn Woolen Mills solicit all kinds of custom work. Farmers, don't forget this. We want your work. tf

The Nickel social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained by Mrs. Barns Friday afternoon of this week, from 2 to 5. Bring your thimbles.

Mrs. Wright of South Chicago is visiting the editor's family. She will be better remembered as Miss Carrie Smith. She will remain here a few weeks, and hopes to meet many of her old friends.

Old Mr. Olinger west of town, was seriously hurt last Saturday afternoon. He was driving home, when his horse took fright. He was thrown out and considerably bruised, but Dr. Swarts who was called, reports him getting better.

Mr. Comstock, of the Ohio Steel Seat Co., has been here this week looking up the prospect for a location for their factory. Our people gave him great encouragement, and should back this up by doing all they can to assist him. That is the way to get a new industry to locate here. He makes buggy seats, furnishing all used by the Kain Road Co., already. Mr. Comstock left some specimens of work at Brown & Culbertson's, and will be here again Friday afternoon.

Council Meeting.

The town council held its regular meeting Monday evening. All were present, though Dr. Matheny, owing to his professional duties came quite late. Various bills were allowed and matters of importance discussed. Mr. Dills, the town's attorney, Marshal Headley and Clerk Grund were present and night-watch Baker called in and remained a short time. Mr. Dills read over to the board, a copy of the saloon ordinance fixing license at $150. This was approved and the time for it to go into effect was fixed at Sept. 1. It was also to be published in the Courier. Quite a little discussion here arose, as to whether the report made in the Dispatch as to the last meeting, was correct, as to the way the vote stood. The report had it that Mr. Lanning and Heberling failed to vote. It was made certain however, that Lanning had voted, though Heberling as president of the board, did not, for the reason, that he only votes in case of a tie. There was some sparring back and forth. Matheny and Lanning insisting that the Dispatch, while welcome to publish anything that occurs at these meetings has no right to misrepresent the board, nor to give its work a partisan color. All are working for the good of the town, whether democrats or republicans. Mr. Campbell, editor of the Dispatch, was at first inclined to claim his report as correct, and even went so far as to say that if the report of the city clerk, differed from that in the Dispatch, the clerk was wrong and the Dispatch right. (He must have improved greatly, since he attempted to act as secretary for the republican convention.) Campbell finally gave up, that perhaps Lanning had voted on that ordinance, though he still seemed to doubt whether the board was yet capable of transacting business. The work then went on to ordinary matters. Each member had been instructed to canvass his ward, and had done so faithfully, and it was gratifying to see each produce a little book, or tell from memory, every defective sidewalk and its special defect, every poor crossing, and every little thing that should be seen to. If any of our people doubt the earnestness with which our city dads are watching their interests they should attend such a meeting. Then they decided that a fire cistern must be made in Rainier & Headley's Addition, one in the South Addition and one in the Gas Addition. They ppointed Wednesday morning to meet at the engine house, and all visit these points to see what should be done. Mr. Boland, was present to lay before them a plat of the new addition, for their consideration, and they also decided as far as possible, as to how much gravel and dirt they would still need to get on his land. The marshal was instructed to see Henry Shull as to getting coarse gravel for crossings. They decided to send for a good stock of cement for the same purpose, as many new crossings must be made. A good deal of sidewalk matters have been attended to, and additional sections had been procured from the Eagle Iron Works, for the culvert on the avenue. Drainage at the M. E. church, and general drainage were discussed, as well as the necessity of having shade trees trimmed to a uniform height. It was after midnight when the session ended. We feel certain that our councilmen earn their salaries, and repeat what we have said, that our town's interests are in good hands.

GENERAL BUTLER and Gov. Brackett are at the head of the movement in Boston for the erection of a memorial hall in honor of Wendell Phillips.

THE "relief fund" of the Pennsylvania Railroad is no small affair. Last year it is said the employes contributed $377,461 and the company $70,160, making a total of $447,621. Of this $343,569 was paid out.

A POSTAGE stamp was recently found by a Connecticut physician in the ear of a human patient, and on its removal a severe pain, from which the child had suffered and which caused the visit to a doctor, disappeared.

THE only woman in South American journalism is said to be a Wisconsin lady, the wife of a secretary in the Brazilian War Department. She is connected with the Cidade do Rio, edited by the great Brazilian abolitionist, Jose do Patrocinio.

THEODORE TILTON is described by a lady who recently saw him in the new Salon in Paris. He has grown stout, and his long white hair was pushed behind his ears, and his face had a restful look peculiar to men of leisure. He was sauntering around, seemingly unconcerned about people or pictures, and only caring to while away a moment of ennui.

PREPARATIONS are being made to take out a section of a big redwood tree in the mammoth forest of Tulare County, California, for exhibition at the world's fair in 1893. This will be the largest section of any big tree ever taken from California, it is sad. The tree measures ninety feet in circumference, and the section to be taken will be nine feet in height and sixty feet in circumference.

THE telephone must have a new role of usefulness scored for it. Sir Humphrey de Trafford, near Manchester, has, perhaps the finest kennels in England, the kennel-man's house adjoining them. From each kennel a telephone arrangement leads to the kennel-man's room, so that when any dog is noisy at night the keeper can speak to him so as to be heard without leaving the room.

SOME lakes are distinctly blue, others present various shades of green, so that in some cases they are hardly distinguishable from their level, grass-covered banks; a few are almost black. The Lake of Geneva is azure hued; the Lake of Costannce and the Lake of Lucerne are green; the color of the Mediterranean has been called indigo. The Lake of Brienz is greenish yellow, and its neighbor, Lake Thun, is blue.

CYRUS W. FIELD carries two watches, one a cheap affair, which he uses, and the other a timepiece worth $2,500, a gift of a friend, which he never takes from its fob, because, his friends say, he dislikes vulgar show. People who have read in the newspapers two-column accounts of the dinners which Cyrus now and then gives to a few hungry lords in London, which accounts Cyrus cables over very carefully at his own cost, will be glad to know that he is so free from the petty vice of vanity.

JUST after midnight, a compositor in the office of the Bombay Gazette, who had been for three weeks on a spree, imagined he heard a strange noise. Looking at a window over his head, he saw a huge cobra slowly entering the composing room. He imagined that the vision was caused by an attack of delirium tremens, and that the snake was merely the product of a diseased brain. Still he was so terrified that he had to scream. His cry brought his associates to his rescue, and the snake was killed with an iron bar.

FOR the decade of 1880-90 the duel statistics of Italy record for the entire kingdom 2,759 duels, most of them military. The hotter the weather the more duels, while in very cold winter weather the figures tapered off. Thus seven-eighths of the whole number took place in summer and one-eighth in winter. Only 50 deaths resulted out of all these duels, 90 of which were fought with the sword, 2,480 with the saber and the rest with the pistol. Ordinary quarrels produced 780; press and political discussions, 1,322; love, 183; religious questions, 29. Most of the duels took place at Naples and the fewest at Venice.

THE curious "traveling stones" of Australia are paralleled in Nevada. They are described as being perfectly round, about as large as a walnut, and of an ivory nature. When distributed about on the floor, table or any other level surface within two or three feet of each other they immediately begin traveling toward each other until they meet at a common center, and there lie huddled up in a bunch, like eggs in a nest. A single stone removed to a distance of four feet, upon being released, returns to the heap, but if taken away five feet remains motionless. It is needless to say that they are largely composed of magnetic iron ore.

THE agreement of the cigarette combine to abolish the practice of giving pictures of scantily clad beauties and athletic heroes of the ring and base-ball field is doubtless intended to mollify a hostile public opinion as well as to save $2,000,000 annually on the outlay for picture advertising. It has always been claimed that the pictures found in the packages were one of the chief allurements that led boys to buy them. If this is really the case it is not probable that the agreement will last long. That most of the pictures had a demoralizing effect is undeniable, and if their withdrawal results in a diminution of the cigarette-habit among boys it will be a matter of congratulation. It is not probable, however, that any great loss of trade is anticipated. The rising generation will continue to buy cigarettes and court the narcotic influence as usual.

WHILE Commander Davoust and his comrades were steaming down the Upper Niger toward Timbuctoo a while ago they made a strange discovery at one of the river towns. They found a piece of European pottery that was evidently quite old. It was fixed upon the summit of a mosque, and the Mohammedan natives told the travelers that it had been given to them near the beginning of this century by a white man who was going down the river. From all the information the travelers collected they could reach no other conclusion than that the donor of this little vase was Mungo Park, the pioneer of African exploration in the past hundred years. It will be remembered that he mentioned this town of Sama Markhala, where the vase has been found, and he passed through the place in 1805 on his last journey, which terminated so tragically at Boussa.

THE "gamelle," a kind of tin mug in which the French soldier receives his rations, and which he carries on his knapsack, has at last achieved notoriety. When the young Duke of Orleans came before the court, and exclaimed: "I ask for nothing but a gamelle," meaning nothing but the treatment of a common soldier, the public readily seized upon the emblem. Scarcely three days had elapsed before a great jeweler of the Rue de la Paix had hundreds of "tin mugs" in silver, gold and jewels as pins and badges, which sold immediately as the "tin mug of Orleans," and were worn all over Paris. A popular florist designed a vase in the shape of the "tin mug," and presented the first specimen to the Prince, who sent it to his bride, Margaret de Chartres, filled with roses and lilies of the valley. In the meanwhile all Paris is sporting the soldier's tin mug in the tri-color, and the young Duke has left a fashionable ornament to remember him by.

A PARAGRAPH is going the rounds to the effect that wild animals are completely fascinated and can be tamed by perfumes, and this story is told: "There was a Mrs. Lee in India who had a tame leopard that played in the house with her children. He was very inquisitive, as all of the tribe are, and loved to stand on his hind legs and, with his forepaws on the window sill, to look at the passers by. When the children wanted the place for themselves, they would all take hold of his tail and pull him down by that. He was generally very amiable, but sometimes, his claws being very sharp, the children were scratched. So Mrs. Lee taught Sal to keep his claws sheathed by giving him, when he did so, a little paper tray on which lavender water had been dropped. This would throw him into transports of delight. He would tear the paper into bits and roll over them on the floor. With nothing but a bottle of lavender water persons have become the best of friends with a leopard, a tigress or a lioness in a menagerie."

She Sat Up in Her Coffin.

The wife of John Korb, aged forty, living on the river road near Four Mile, Ky., was to all appearances dead after a long spell of sickness, says the Washington Star. The body was prepared for burial, and while the pall-bearers were carrying the casket from the church they heard a noise inside the coffin, and upon removing the lid the woman was found to be alive, but too weak to speak.

The greatest consternation among relatives and others in attendance ensued. When the woman opened her eyes women screamed and ran about as if demented. Some fainted. Many of the men lost their presence of mind, and it was only when the woman sat up that aid was extended. She could not speak, and was evidently frightened at her situation. She was taken into the church and made comfortable while a physician was sent for. Before he arrived the woman moaned, started to an upright position, and fell back dead.

The physician on arrival pronounced her dead, and she was buried at ance. There is much excitement in the neighborhood, and many believe she should not have been buried.

Dreaming Out an Available Story.

Having a severe cold in the head, a literary friend of mine had taken a hot bath before retiring and a dose of fine whisky. "I slept like a log," he says, "until about 5 o'clock. When I awoke my head was as clear as a bell and I found myself interested in a peculiar story which, in all symmetry, was passing through my mind. The plot was somewhat complicated, but thoroughly artistic. I was astonished, and at first thought that my memory was recalling some tale that I had read. As I reviewed the story, however, I realized that it was eminently original.

"Much pleased at this seeming presentation from the gods of a literary nugget, I composed myself to sleep and in the morning found that the tale was still mine. Some weeks later I received an order from a syndicate for a story of 10,000 words. I had thirty-six hours in which to produce the manuscript. The plot that had been the outcome of a hot bath, whisky, and sound sleep now came into play, and I had no difficulty in completing my story within the allotted time. As I received $150 for it, I am now patiently awaiting another cold in the head."—Washington Post.

"POLITICAL HELLS."

A SCATHING ARRAIGNMENT OF THE DOMINANT PARTY.

The Cold-Blooded Policy Pursued by the Republicans Against the South—Extract from a Speech by Hon. James K. Jones, of Arkansas, in the U. S. Senate.

To illustrate to what length the Republican party has gone in the accomplishment of a partisan purpose, and particularly to show by a witness of their own how they have been willing to sacrifice anything and everything to the preservation and maintenance of their "economic law," I beg leave to call attention for one moment to a statement by a high Republican authority.

Alexander Johnston was professor of jurisprudence in Princeton College, New Jersey, was a political historian of distinction, and a Republican in full accord with his party, and familiar with its counsels, its purposes and its history.

In speaking of reconstruction in the South he uses the following remarkable language:

We have noticed also the portentous reappearance of the seceding States after their reconstruction by the President as an imperium in imperio. It would have been an impossibility for Southern representatives under that regime, however honest their intentions, to divest themselves suddenly of the prejudices and traditions of a life-time training and come back in full sympathy with the economic laws which were thenceforth to attach to their own section as well as the rest of the country. They must then have returned as a compact phalanx of irreconcilables sure of their ground at home and a positive danger to the rest of the country.

All this was ended by reconstruction. This process, to speak simply and perhaps brutally, gave the Southern whites enough to attend to at home until a new generation should grow up with more sympathy for the new and less for the old. The energies which might have endangered the national peace were drawn off to a permanent local struggle for good government and security of property. Whatever may be alleged on humanitarian grounds against a policy which for a time converted some of the States into political hells, it must be confessed that the policy was a success and that it secured the greatest good of the greatest number.

Mr. President, here we have frankly stated a most brutal truth. Here is an avowal of means resorted to and ends to be accomplished, which fairly make one shiver by their heartless, cold-blooded brutality. There is a diabolism running through these sentences, in the description of the purposes of the Republican party in the enactment of the reconstruction measures, that would have put Macchiavelli to shame. Here is an avowal that the purposes of these measures was, notwithstanding the hypocritical pretense that they were "for the protection of life and property," and that "peace and good order should be enforced," really to make the Southern States "political hells;" to give the Southern people at home a permanent local struggle for good government and security of property, which was giving them enough to attend to at home to prevent their interfering with "economic laws" which were thereafter to attach to their own section as well as the rest of the country.

One can scarcely conceive that in a so-called Christian land, where the teachings of the meek and lowly Nazarene are the standard of morality, a deliberate purpose could be formed to surround a large number of people with conditions dangerous to not only their prosperity and happiness, but dangerous to the lives of women and children, for the purpose of thereby giving the "Southern whites enough to do," and all for the purpose of preventing any interference with certain "economic laws." But such is the fact.

This has been going on whenever you have felt that your economic laws were being a little too closely looked into. Whenever you have felt that you were about to be called sharply to account for your political sins and misdoings, you have made haste to divert the attention of the public from yourselves, your methods and your misdeeds by undertaking to make more "political hells" in the Southern States. Your force bills and civil-rights acts were in pursuit of this wicked purpose. You have enacted law after law which the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional and which the able lawyers in helping to enact them must have known would not stand the scrutiny of the courts, yet they passed, and the purpose must have been simply to make trouble for the South, for political purposes. Were you ever in greater straits or was there ever greater need for such political juggling than now?

The old methods are still in use. They will not be so frankly avowed, because an enlightened and humane public would condemn to the pillory of public scorn and contempt any man who would dare now avow such atrocious sentiments; but the same old spirit, hiding itself in a hypocritical cloak of deep regard for the rights of man will now, if a partisan end can be accomplished by it, subject every Southern home to danger from the torch and the dagger.

The Unrepresented Vote.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

A few of the Republican organs are trying to justify the Lodge bill indirectly by reproducing certain figures which have long been on duty and are supposed to represent the effects of "suppressing" the Southern vote. As a matter of fact, the figures show nothing of the kind. What they do show, and all that they show, is that in South Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia the Congressional vote by districts is very much smaller than it is in Kansas, New Jersey and Michigan, and, inferentially, that a good many of the voters in the Southern States named do not or did not in 1886 go to the polls. That the vote was "supressed" or the voters intimidated the figures neither show nor in any degree tend to show; for there would be precisely the same array of figures if the voters voluntarily abstained from voting as if they were kept away with shotguns, according to the Republican theory.

There is, however, a "suppressed" Congressional vote in the country, as the figures abundantly prove; that is to say, a vote which, though cast, is absolutely unrepresented in Congress. But because it is a Democratic vote it receives no attention from the friends of the Lodge bill.

There are fourteen States in the Union in which the Democracy is wholly unrepresented in Congress, although the Democratic vote in those States amounts to more than half a million. Here are the figures:

UNREPRESENTED DEMOCRATIC VOTE.
Colorado	37,725
Kansas	105,129
Maine	60,977
Minnesota	168,010
Montana	18,264
Nebraska	81,838
New Hampshire	45,271
Nevada	5,682
North Dakota	12,006
Oregon	25,412
Rhode Island	17,051
South Dakota	21,229
Vermont	19,351
Washington	24,992
Total	584,937

It is true that there are several Republican voters who are also unrepresented, but not so many as there are of the Democratic persuasion. Here are the figures, according to the claims of the Republican organs themselves:

UNREPRESENTED REPUBLICAN VOTE.
Alabama	55,547
Arkansas	66,804
Delaware	12,935
Florida	26,534
Georgia	33,476
Mississippi	25,600
South Carolina	9,704
Texas	93,707
Total	397,053

Here, then, is a net loss to the Democracy of the nation of representation for 187,884 voters, that being the difference against the Democracy in a comparison of voters unrepresented in the two parties. When, therefore, the organs talk of "suppression" it is well to remember that under our present system of representation by districts the Democracy is swindled out of Representatives enough to give it a majority in the present House, even though every Republican voter in the country were represented according to the most extravagant claim of the g. o. p.

RESTRICTED TRADE.

JAMES G. BLAINE SOUNDS A NOTE OF WARNING.

He Sees an Opportunity to Open the Markets of Forty Millions of People to Our Farm Products—A Remarkable Letter to Senator Frye.

BAR HARBOR, Me., July 11, 1890.

DEAR MR. FRYE: I have just received intelligence from the highest commercial authority in Havana that American flour under the new duties imposed by Spain cannot reach the Cuban market under a cast of $11.46 per barrel—counting the shipping price in New York at $4.80 per barrel. Spain holds the market for herself and is able to send European flour at a price which totally excludes the American flour from the markets of Cuba and Porto Rico. Other articles of American growth are likewise taxed by Spain to the point of prohibition. This one-sided commerce will seriously injure the shipping routes which are still in American hands largely if not exclusively.

It would certainly be a very extraordinary policy on the part of our Government just at this time to open our market without charge of duty to the enormous crops of sugar raised in the two Spanish islands. Cuba and Porto Rico furnish the United States with nearly or quite one-half of the sugar which we consume, and we are far larger consumers than any other nation in the world. To give a free market to this immense product of the Spanish plantations at the moment Spain is excluding the products of American farms from her market, would be a policy as unprecedented as it would be unwise.

Our trade with the American republics as well as with the West India Islands has been for many years in a most unsatisfactory condition. The aggregate balance of trade with all Latin America is heavily against us. A single illustration will suffice. Since we repealed the duty on coffee in 1872, we have imported the products of Brazil to the extent of $821,806,000 and have sold to her only $156,135,000 of our own products. The difference—$664,671,000—we have paid in gold or its equivalent, and Brazil has expended the vast sum in the markets of Europe. You can readily see how different the result would have been if in return for the free admission of Brazilian coffee in our markets, we had exacted the free admission of certain products of the United States in the Brazilian market. To repeat this error with sugar (to an amount three times as large as with coffee) will close all opportunity to establish reciprocity of trade with Latin America.

The charge against the protective policy which has injured it most is that its benefits go wholly to the manufacturer and capitalist, and not at all to the farmer. You and I well know that this is not true, but still it is the most plausible, and therefore the most hurtful argument made by the free-trader. Here is an opportunity where the farmer may be benefited—primarily, undeniably benefited. Here is an opportunity for a Republican Congress to open the markets of 40,000,000 of people to the products of American farmers. Shall we seize the opportunity or shall we throw it away? I do not doubt that in many respects the tariff bill pending in the Senate is a just measure, and that most of its provisions are in accordance with the wise policy of protection. But there is not a section or line in the entire bill that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork. If sugar is not placed on the free list, without exacting trade concessions in return, we shall close the door for a profitable reciprocity against ourselves. I think you will find some valuable hints on this subject in the President's brief message of June 19, with as much practical wisdom as was ever stated in so short a space.

Our foreign market for breadstuffs grows narrower. Great Britain is exerting every nerve to secure her bread supplies from India, and the rapid expansion of the wheat area in Russia gives us a powerful competitor in the markets of Europe. It becomes us therefore to use every opportunity for the extension of our market on both of the American continents. With nearly $100,000,000 worth of sugar seeking our market every year, we shall prove ourselves most unskilled legislators if we do not secure a large field for the sale and consumption of our breadstuffs and provisions. The late conference of American Republics proved the existence of a common desire for closer relations. Our Congress should take up the work where the International Conference left it. Our field of commercial development and progress lies south of us. Very sincerely yours,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

HON. W. P. FRYE, U. S. Senate.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

If this country is to strike at the commerce of the world such a blow as is now threatened, says the New York World in a recent editorial, it is not surprising if the commercial nations endeavor to bring us to terms by a warfare upon our most vulnerable interests.

There is no doubt as to what will be the point of attack. The majority of people of this country are vitally interested in foreign commerce. The farmers would starve were it not for their European market. Of our $730,000,000 of exports in 1889 $503,000,000 were agricultural products. About 21 per cent. of our wheat goes abroad. Ten years ago more than 40 per cent. of the crop was exported. Two-thirds of our cotton supplies foreign mills. Provisions, corn, flour, animals and other farm outputs make up the balance of the merchandise in which our largest foreign trade is done.

The concerted action of the European powers will be against the farmer. Discriminating and even prohibitory taxes against American products are already threatened. That it is possible for Europe to stimulate the production of rival states was shown during the war by the great increase in the cotton-growing industry of Egypt, and it has been demonstrated still more recently by the important advance made in Hungary, Russia, and the Argentine Republic in wheat growing.

As an exporter of wheat the United States is on the decline, and it is not holding its own in the foreign corn trade. With the exception of 1877, our exports of wheat in 1889 were smaller than in any year since 1873. In view of this it will be readily seen that if Europe shall discriminate against our farmers in retaliation for our tariff, the result must be dire distress.

This, and not the proposed duty on eggs, is the feature of the McKinley bill which demands the attention of our farmers.

There is no question but that the McKinley tariff would make every civilized family in the United States pay a good deal more for carpets, and that the great ranchmen, who choose to herd great droves of half-wild sheep on government lands rather than raise decent animals on their own land, would get more for their wool. That is just what the McKinley increase of the wool tariff is for. But how will it help the ordinary American sheep farmer? The average price of carpet wools imported in 1889 was 11 cents per pound. The duty, therefore, under the McKinley bill would be about 3½ cents, which, with 2 cents added for transport, etc., would make the wool cost say 16½ cents on the average, laid down in Philadelphia, where it is manufactured. This practically means an equivalent of from 11 to 13 cents at the railroad stations nearest the few American producers of carpet wool. No farmer grows any wool which would be in the slightest protected by his being assured any such price, even if the tariff did it. And no American farmer proposes to raise any such wool at all, though a few ranchmen may. The excuse these latter have for asking a higher duty is their claim that the better grades of carpet wools are sometimes used as substitutes for the coarser grades of clothing wools, and hence hurt the market for the latter. This claim—always absurd to any one who knows anything about the carpet and wool trade—has at last been given a quietus by the great protectionist expert and dealer, George William Bond, of Boston, the oldest and for a long time past the leading expert in the American wool trade, who, in his annual wool circular dated February, 1889, notes what every farmer knows, if he will stop to think—"that coarse wools here have held their prices better than fine wools of late years."

As to the effect of high tariffs on wool prices, the figures leave no doubt. High tariffs (we have had them since 1867) mean low prices for the better grades of our wools, for all the grades that a farmer, as distinguished from a ranchman, cares to raise. Mr. Bond's circular, just referred to, is a most conclusive document. Explaining, as he does, how the taking off all tariffs on most wools in 1857 at once caused somewhat of a raise in the price of foreign wools, and a much greater increase in the price of domestic wools, he closes: "An experience of high duty for over twenty-five years has failed to increase the value of wool, home-grown. So different is the character and quality of wool grown in different countries, and even in different parts of the same country, that if the wools were free the probable result would only be to equalize values the world over, and it would be found that other countries would want our wool as much as we should want theirs." This is corroborated by the following facts:

The price of wool in this country has been but little (and often no) higher than it has been abroad, grade for grade. Hardly a year has passed that buyers from the woolen mills of Scotland, England, Germany and Canada have not invaded our market, buying here because they could buy cheaper than anywhere else in the world. Here are our exportations for the past few years:

1883	64,474	$22,114
1884	10,393	3,073
1885	88,006	16,739
1886	2,138,080	476,274
1887	257,940	78,002
1888	22,164	5,272
1889	141,576	23,065

Where was this wool shipped to? Who bought it? Here is the report of the Bureau of Statistics: Canada, 2,388,069 pounds; England, 114,657 pounds; Scotland, 29,334 pounds; Germany, 42,258 pounds; Mexico, 76,602 pounds.

The farmers of the United States have never once inquired the price of wool abroad. They have shipped their wool to Liverpool and Glasgow, for sale there at foreign market prices, in competition with the English and Scotch sheep farmers whom they undersold—after paying freight.

An actual and notable increase of pauperism, which shows, according to J. S. Leadem—author of "Agriculture and Land Laws"—"that between 1840 and 1850, the decade in which the corn laws came to an end, there was one pauper to every twenty-one inhabitants; in 1886 only one in every thirty-three." We quote Mr. Leadem, who uses different dates for comparison to show that other authorities besides Mr. Giffen and Mr. Gladstone hold to a decrease of pauperism.

Further, in England we have a remarkable advance in the condition of living among all classes, as shown by the consumption per head of the following articles:

Tea	1.22	4.66
Sugar	15.20	48.56
Coffee	1.08	0.97
Rice	0.90	7.50
Currants and raisins	1.45	4.49
Tobacco	0.86	1.45

Still further, English statistics show that the amount assessed for income taxes was, in 1843, £250,000,000; in 1865 it was £396,000,000; in 1875 it was £571,000,000, and statisticians estimate the wealth in England in 1843 at £3,880,000,000; in 1875 at £8,500,000,000, an increase of more than 100 per cent. in wealth against an increase of 28 per cent. in population.

It is not true that one in every five of London's population dies a pauper. One in five of the population of London is 800,000, and no one claims that in all England and Wales the number of paupers is as much as 900,000.

Nor does "the gulf which separates the rich and poor broaden year by year in England." The table given above, showing the consumption of food, shows a wonderful improvement in the condition of England's poor. Look at these figures:

In 1831 the savings bank depositors were only 429,000; in 1881 they were 4,140,000.

In 1862 the co-operative associations of Great Britain had 90,000 members; in 1881 they had 525,000 members.

In 1843 there were 39,366 incomes, ranging from $750 to $1,000; in 1880 there were 130,000 such incomes.

In 1851 England's imports and exports were £260,234,150; in 1880 they were £697,644,131.

It does not appear that exporting agricultural products hurts the farmer very badly. In 1860 our farmers were really prosperous, although they exported over $256,000,000 worth of their products out of a total of exportation of $316,000,000. Then our agricultural exports were 81 per cent. of the whole; in 1888 they were only 73 per cent. This appears to indicate that the farmer is most prosperous when his exports are relatively largest, and such is the fact.

If we stop exporting our farm products how are we to pay our imports, even supposing we import no manufactured goods? asks the Louisville Courier-Journal. Our $130,000,000 exports of manufactured goods will not pay for the coffee and sugar we import, to say nothing of tea, rubber, chemicals, dyes, tropical fruits and nuts, raw silk, precious stones, furs, salt, and hundreds of other articles. The products of our mines might help us a little, but we should still find the balance of trade heavily against us, and that, according to all orthodox protection authorities, is illimitable disaster. It is apparent, therefore, that there is no chance for the farmer to stop exporting a large part of his products.

If we are ruined both by importing goods and exporting them, it must be that commerce is a mistake, and that a general embargo upon trade is what we need. It is to this point that the logic of trade restriction irresistibly leads us.

About a Stand-off.

If there is anything on this orb of sin more fidgety than a man with two cigars and no match, it is a boy with unbroken legs in the house on a rainy day.—The Ram's Horn.

MOST readers of Shakspeare find themselves at times thrown into exalted mental conditions like those produced by music. Those are times when they pass into the region of thought without words. Reader, you and I may be very dull people, and probably are, but do we not get glimpses now and then of a realm of spiritual possibilities where, dull as we are, we can sail in vast circles around the largest expanse of earthly intelligence?

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

BILL HEMPSEY'S RECITAL

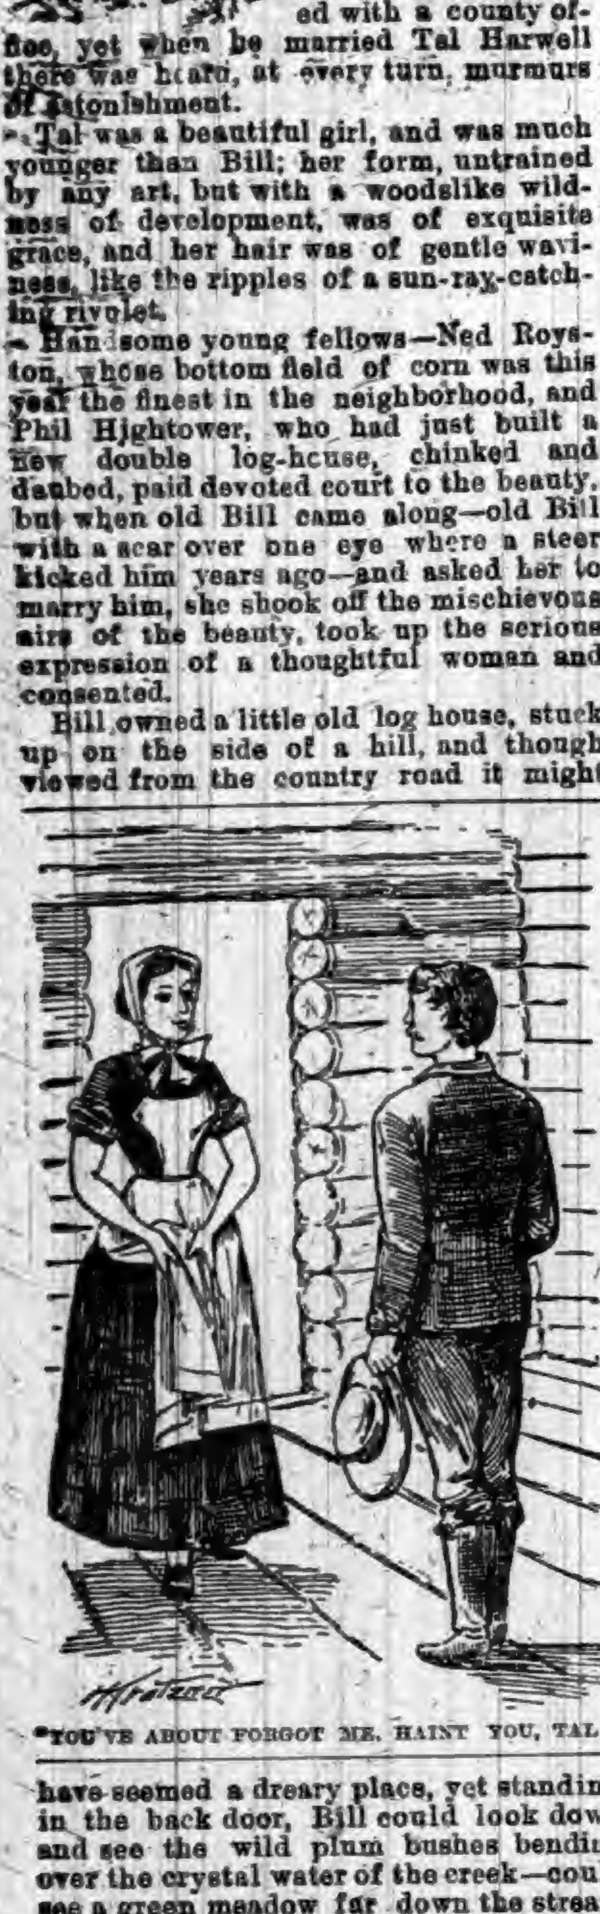
BY OPIE P. READ.

WHEN Bill Hempsey married Tal Harwell there was great surprise in the Nubbin Ridge neighborhood. Bill was worthy of respect and was respected; he was worthy of confidence and had been intrusted with a county office, yet when he married Tal Harwell there was heard, at every turn, murmurs of astonishment.

Tal was a beautiful girl, and was much younger than Bill; her form, untrained by any art, but with a woodslike wildness of development, was of exquisite grace, and her hair was of gentle waviness, like the ripples of a sun-ray-catching rivulet.

Handsome young fellows—Ned Royston, whose bottom field of corn was this year the finest in the neighborhood, and Phil Hightower, who had just built a new double log-house, chinked and daubed, paid devoted court to the beauty, but when old Bill came along—old Bill with a scar over one eye where a steer kicked him years ago—and asked her to marry him, she shook off the mischievous airs of the beauty, took up the serious expression of a thoughtful woman and consented.

Bill owned a little old log house, stuck up on the side of a hill, and though viewed from the country road it might have seemed a dreary place, yet standing in the back door, Bill could look down and see the wild plum bushes bending over the crystal water of the creek—could see a green meadow far down the stream and could hear the song of the rain crow.



"YOU'VE ABOUT FORGOT ME, HAINT YOU, TAL?"

Several years passed. The gossips reluctantly agreed that Bill and his wife were happy, that is, reasonably happy, for the gossips never submit to a complete surrender. One day while Bill was away from home Ned Royston came to the house. Tal came in when she heard footsteps, and upon seeing the visitor stood wiping her hands on her apron. She had been washing, and a bubble of suds on her hair, catching a ray of light, flashed like a diamond.

"You've about forgot me, hain't you, Tal—Miz Hempsey?"

"No, how could I forget you when I see you at church nearly every Sunday? Sit down."

"Yes, you see me," Ned replied, seating himself, "but as you never speak to me I 'lowed that you had dun fergot me."

"I never forget a friend."

"Much obliged. You look tired; sit down yourse'f." She sat down. Ned continued:

"You do a good deal of hard work, don't you?"

"No more than any other woman, I reckon."

"You do more than I'd let my wife do."

"Yes, all men talk that way before they are married."

"And some of them mean what they say, Tal—or Miz Hempsey."

"But the majority of them do not."

"I know one that does. Tal, if you had married me you never would had to work none."

"You let your mother work."

"Yes, but I wouldn't let you work. I wish you had married me, Tal, for I ain't been happy a single hour sence you told me that you wouldn't, not a single one. I uster be fonder of persimmon puddin' than anybody, but I ain't eat narry one sence you 'lowed that you couldn't marry me. Tell me, Tal, air you happy?"

"Happy as most women, I reckon."

"But most women ain't happy."

"Mebby not."

A short silence followed; Ned twisted his hat round and round. Tal wiped her hands on her apron.

"Tal—you don't care if I call you Tal, do you?"

"No, I am not particular."

"But you wouldn't let everybody call you by your first name, would you?"

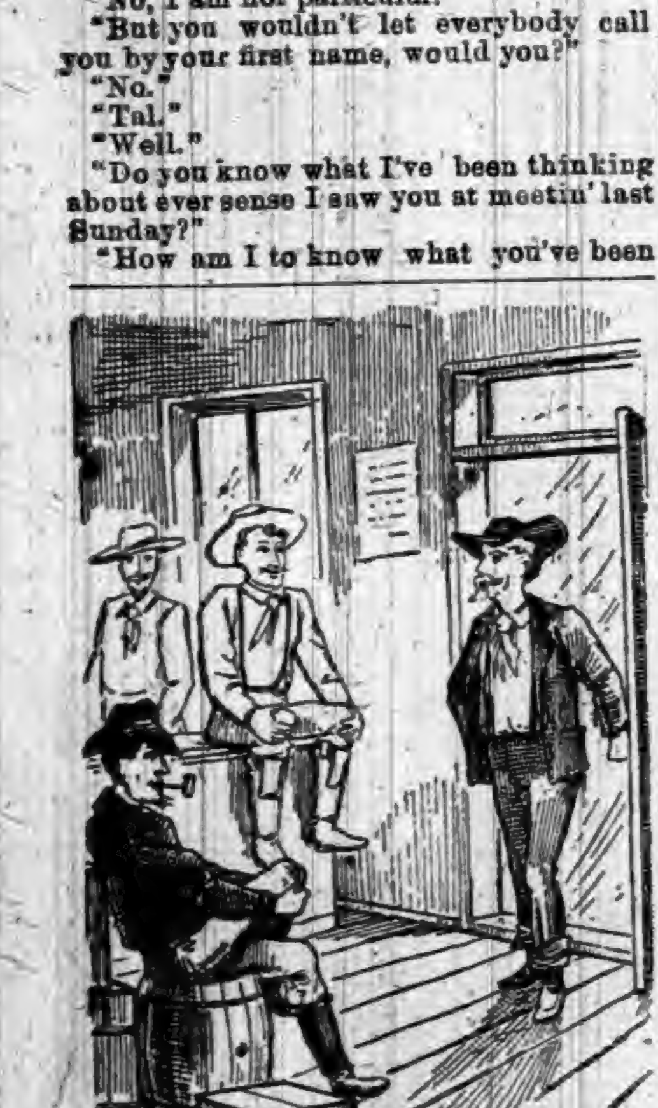
"No."

"Tal."

"Well."

"Do you know what I've been thinking about ever sense I saw you at meetin' last Sunday?"

"How am I to know what you've been



"HELLO, MEN!" BILL SHOUTED.

"Would you like to know what I've been thinkin' about, Tal?"

She sat twisting her apron; a cat purred about the legs of her chair. A chicken, singing the lazy song of "laying time," hopped up into the doorway. "Shoo," she cried. "The chickens are about to take the place."

"But that ain't got nothin' to do with what I've been thinkin' nor about you wantin' to know it. Do you wanter know?"

"You may tell me if you want to."

"Sho' 'nuff?"

"Yes, if it ain't bad."

"Oh, it ain't bad." He untwisted his hat, straightened it out by pulling it down on his head, took it off, and, beginning to twist it again, said:

"I've been thinkin' that you wa'n't happy livin' with a man that don't 'preciate you—hold on now, let me get through." She had moved impatiently. "Man that don't 'preciate you; and I've been thinkin' that I would come over here and—and ask you to run away with me. Wait, Tal—please wait." She had sprung to her feet. "Just listen to me a minit. Folks uster think you was happy, but they know you ain't now. Tal, please wait a minute. You won't tell Bill, will you? Oh, you won't do that, I know. We understand each other, Tal, don't we? Tal, oh, Tal——" She was hastening down the slope toward the wild-plum bushes. "Don't say anything," he shouted. "Don't, for if you do there'll be trouble."

"What's the matter, little girl?" Bill asked that evening as he was eating his supper.

"Nothin'."

"You don't 'pear to be as bright as usual."

"I thought I was."

"But you ain't. Thar's some new calico in my saddle-bags that'll make you as putty a dress as you ever seed. Got red and yaller spots on it that shines like a sunflower. Look here, little gal, thar's somethin' the matter with you and you needn't say thar ain't. Come here now." He shoved his chair back from the table and took her on his lap. "You know thar's somethin' wrong, now, and you air jest tryin' to fool me. I haven't done nothin' to hurt your feelin's, have I?"

"No."

"Then what's the matter? Oh, don't cry that way." She sobbed on his shoulder. "You'll make me think that I ain't the right sort of a husband, if you keep on. Mebbe I ain't, too. I'm gettin' old and grizzly, and I ain't good-lookin' nohow, while you 'pear to git puttier and puttier every day."

"Bill," she said, putting her arms around his neck, "you mustn't talk—you mustn't think that way. You air the best man that ever lived, and if you'll promise not to get mad I'll tell you what ails me."

"Law me, child, I couldn't git mad if I wanted to."

She told him; he sat for a few moments in a silence of deep meditation, and then, with a brightening countenance, said cheerfully:

"Why, that ain't nothin to git mad about, chile. It's all right; and let me tell you that any man after seein' you a few times is bound to love you, and I reckon he would be willin' to run away with you. Why, bless my life, I'd run away with you in a minit, er haw, haw! No, indeed, honey, you kain't blame the pore feller for that."

"And you won't say anything to him about it?"

"Law me, child, I'll never mention it to him; never in the world, so don't give yourself no uneasiness."

* * * * * *

A chilling rain was falling. Several men, including Ned Royston, were sitting in Bob Talbot's store.

"Yander comes Bill Hempsey," said Talbot, looking out.

Ned Royston moved uneasily in his chair.

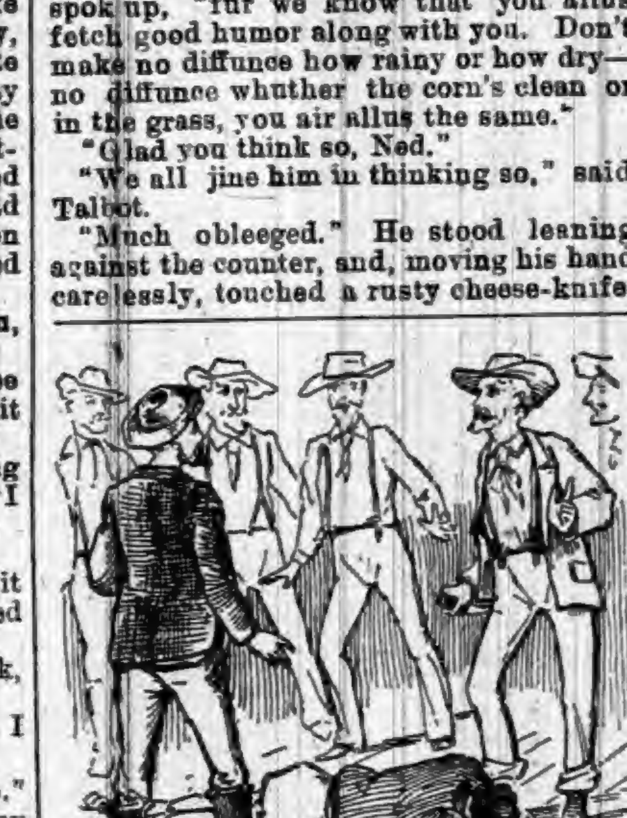
"Hello, men!" Bill shouted, as he stepped up into the door and began to stamp the mud off his feet. "Sorter saft outside. Hi, Bob; glad to see you lookin' so well. Hi, Ned, and hi, all hands."

"We're always glad to see you," Ned spoke up, "fur we know that you allus fetch good humor along with you. Don't make no diffunce how rainy or how dry—no diffunce whuther the corn's clean or in the grass, you air allus the same."

"Glad you think so, Ned."

"We all jine him in thinking so," said Talbot.

"Much obleeged." He stood leaning against the counter, and, moving his hand carelessly, touched a rusty cheese-knife.



"HE WANTED MY WIFE TO RUN AWAY WITH HIM, BOYS."

"Bob, what do you keep sich a onery-looking knife as this for?"

"Sharp enough to cut cheese with, I reckon, Bill."

"Yes, but that's about all. Hand me that whetrock over thar and let me whet the point. Blamed if I haven't got to be doin' somethin' all the time. Wall, fellers, I seed suthin' 'tother week, while I was down in Knoxville, that laid over anything I ever did see before. I went to a theater. Ever at one, Ned?"

"No, don't believe I was."

"Wall, now if you've ever been at one you'd know it," Bill replied, industriously whetting the point of the knife. "Why, it knocks a school exhibition sillier than a scorched pup. I never did see sich a show."

"Any hosses in it?" Bob Talbot asked.

"Oh, no, it all tuck place in a house. I'll tell you how it was [still whetting the knife]. It was playin', regular pertend-like, but it looked mighty natral. It 'pears that a ruther old feller had married a ruther young gal [he put the whetstone on the counter]; a powerful putty ga', too. Wall, one time when the old feller wa'n't about the house, a young chap that had wanted to marry her a good while before, he come in and got to talkin' to her, and the upshot was that he wanted her to run away with him."

"No," said Bob Talbot.

"Yes, sir," continued old Bill, "wanted her to run smack smooth away with him. Wall, she told her husband, but he sorter laughed, he did, and 'lowed that he didn't blame the feller much. But the fun come after this. The old feller—stand up here, Ned, and let me show you. Hang it, stand up; don't pull back like a shyin' hoss. The old feller got him a knife 'bout like this, and he went into a room whar the young feller was. Now, you stand right thar. He walks in this way, and neither one of them says a word, but stood and looked at each other 'bout like we are doin', but all at once the old feller lifts up the knife this way and—Thar, you damned scoundel!"

He plunged the knife into Ned Royston's breast—buried the blade in the fellow's bosom, and, as he pulled it out, while Royston lay on the floor, dead, he turned to his terror-stricken friends, and exclaimed:

"He wanted my wife to run away with him, boys!

"If you wanter hang me, I'll tie the rope.

"You don't? Then good-by, and God bless you."

Sure Result of Exposure.

Mrs. Pennifeather—Goodness gracious! I wonder what in the world has become of my tarts?

Mr. Pennifeather—Where did you put them?

Mrs. Pennifeather—Right on the windowsill, here.

Mr. Pennifeather—That accounts for it. You have carelessly exposed them to the son.

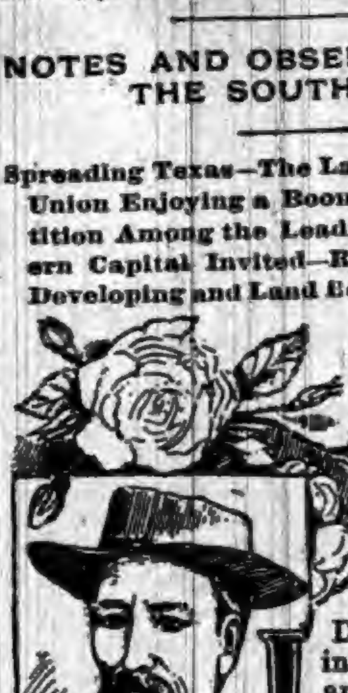
A WANDERER'S LETTER.

NOTES AND OBSERVATIONS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

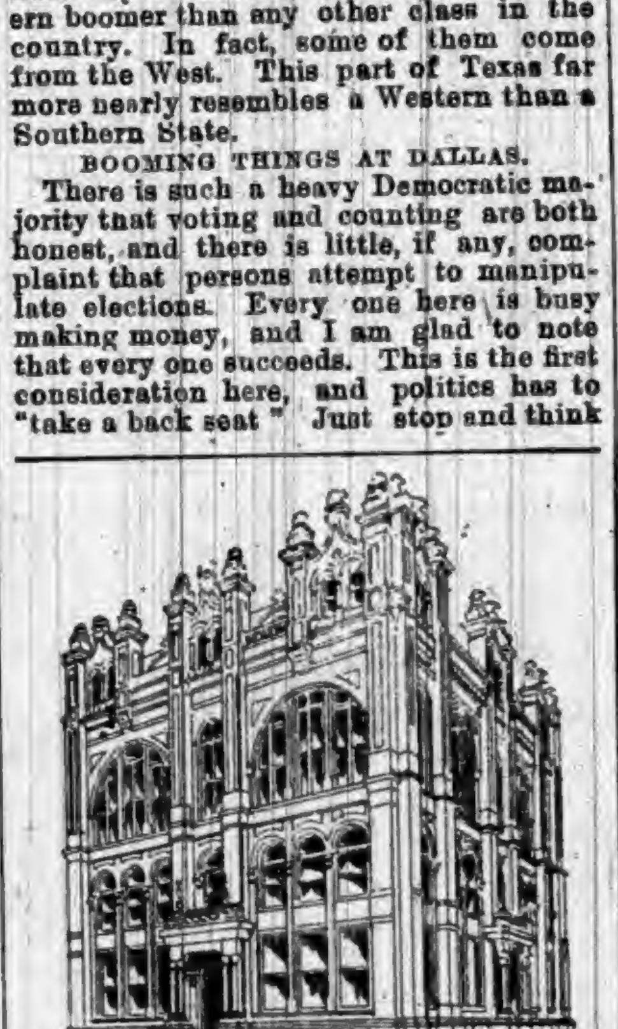
Spreading Texas—The Largest State in the Union Enjoying a Boom—Active Competition Among the Leading Cities—Northern Capital Invited—Railroad Interests Developing and Land Booms Everywhere.



I DOUBT if any one in the outside world appreciates the sort of boom that this State is enjoying at this particular moment, and it is not a matter of immediate growth. It has been going on for several years; in fact, no Texan likes to have you speak of "the boom." He always says, "We are not having a boom; we do not want a boom; we are having simply the steady, natural growth to which our State is entitled." But at the same time boomers are at work, and you meet them in every city where you go. And they are more nearly like the Western boomer than any other class in the country. In fact, some of them come from the West. This part of Texas far more nearly resembles a Western than a Southern State.

BOOMING THINGS AT DALLAS.

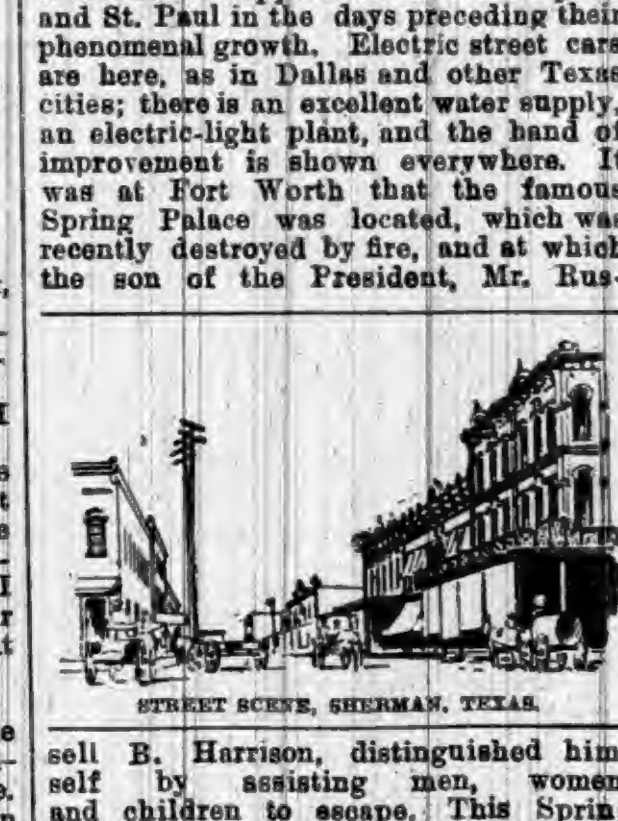
There is such a heavy Democratic majority that voting and counting are both honest, and there is little, if any, complaint that persons attempt to manipulate elections. Every one here is busy making money, and I am glad to note that every one succeeds. This is the first consideration here, and politics has to "take a back seat." Just stop and think what some of the cities of this State are accomplishing. I visited Dallas and found it a city of beautiful homes; houses laid out in villa lots, with suburbs which have sprung up like the growth of a night into magnificent city sites. Manufactures have been encouraged, and city improvements have been lavishly attended to. Dallas has made a splendid fight for supremacy and the control of the business of its section. It is still growing, and prices of real estate were never before so high; still there is no sign of a decline. Northern capital is offering itself freely, and the people are as buoyant as they were two years ago, when the boom was supposed to be at its height.



CITY HALL, DALLAS, TEXAS.

FORT WORTH AND ITS RIVAL.

Fort Worth, only thirty miles from Dallas to the westward, is a rival of the former place. It claims to be the entrepot for all the great trade of the West and Northwest, so far as this State is concerned. There is about Fort Worth much of the aspect of a frontier city, and it has the appearance of Minneapolis and St. Paul in the days preceding their phenomenal growth. Electric street cars are here, as in Dallas and other Texas cities; there is an excellent water supply, an electric-light plant, and the hand of improvement is shown everywhere. It was at Fort Worth that the famous Spring Palace was located, which was recently destroyed by fire, and at which the son of the President, Mr. Russell B. Harrison, distinguished himself by assisting men, women, and children to escape. This Spring Palace contained an exhibit of all the wonderful products of the State of Texas. Its destruction was a severe blow to Fort Worth and the entire State, but with a wonderful display of energy the people have decided to rebuild it next year; to make it of iron, fire-proof, and to expend $300,000 in its construction. When this is finished it will be one of the marvels of the land.



STREET SCENE, SHERMAN, TEXAS.

THE NORTH TEXAS BOOM.

Gainesville, in the north of Texas, has been one of the smaller cities, but it is just waking up to the fact that it is in every way deserving of the rise that other cities are enjoying. I have learned recently of a combination of capitalists to put Gainesville to the front. It is certainly one of the pleasantest cities in the State, and its surroundings presage a wonderful growth and life.

Sherman, to the southeast of Gainesville, has been one of the oldest and most conservative cities of Texas. With a population of from 15,000 to 18,000, it probably has more wealth than any city of its size, and it has been one of the largest banking cities of the State. One of the banks, under the control of Mr. Tom (not Thomas) Randolph, has a capital of $1,000,000. Mr. Randolph had the honor of being the youngest bank president in the United States. At the age of 20, on the death of the President, he was elected to take his place, but under the law the courts had to legalize his actions, as he was still a minor and therefore debarred from discharging important trusts. The city of Sherman stands in probably the richest farming region of the northern part of the State.

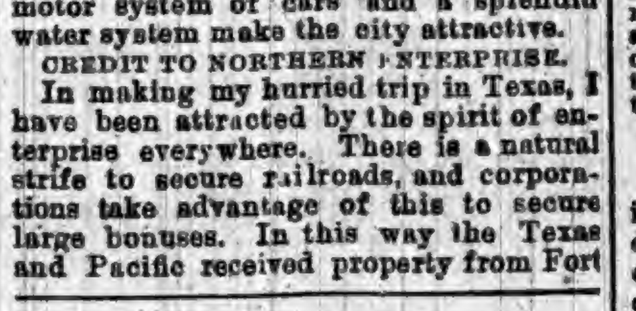
A RAILROAD TOWN.

One of the liveliest and most progressive cities in Texas, and one nearest the northern border, is Denison. Strangely enough, it stands in the center of a rich black agricultural soil, while its own town site is a sort of sandy loam, so that the immediate outlying country is famous for its small fruits and vegetables, while beyond it a few miles come the rich cotton and corn lands. Denison has this advantage, that it is within a few miles of the famous coal-fields of the Indian Territory. It is not very far from the iron mines of the State. Because of its nearness to the coal region, extensive railway shops have been erected, employing six or seven hundred men, and to their credit most of the employes have established themselves in comfortable homes which they own. It has an exposition building in which a splendid display of limestone, granite, kaolin, fire-brick, clay, galena, and other minerals are made. It is a wonderful exhibition, and one who looks upon it can readily understand why Denison has had such an extraordinary growth. The establishment of a cotton factory here has been secured, and the building is just being erected. It will be one of the largest cotton factories in the South, with 25,000 spindles, and is to employ 600 persons. An electric and motor system of cars and a splendid water system make the city attractive.

CREDIT TO NORTHERN ENTERPRISE.

In making my hurried trip in Texas, I have been attracted by the spirit of enterprise everywhere. There is a natural strife to secure railroads, and corporations take advantage of this to secure large bonuses. In this way the Texas and Pacific received property from Fort Worth which is now worth $2,000,000. The city of Sherman, some years, ago refused a quarter of a million to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, and it was diverted from that direction to Denison, and has been worth to the latter city every dollar of the bounty that they paid for it. The funds for railroad, manufacturing, and other enterprises are raised by the cities, everybody contributing, and some contributing more than they really feel they should. But the contributions all come back in the growth and impulse given to the towns. The same sort of enterprise in Northern cities would amaze the people, and would hardly result in the same sort of boom that Texas enjoys. Texas is welcoming a constant stream of immigrants and offering to capital every facility for investment and speculation. The newcomer will find himself liable to be misled, and must expect to meet some very shrewd men in his operations, but he only needs to employ ordinary tact to secure his bargains and make the most of them.



RUINS OF THE TEXAS SPRING PALACE, FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

WANDERER.

DALLAS, Tex., June, 1890.

Paralyzed by a Scratch.

"I have read of men being paralyzed by a wound and unable to move," said a well-known prominent Maine office-holder, "and I believe it. I know that there have been many cases of the kind, and one of them in particular has such a personal twist that I have good reason to remember.

"It was at the battle of Chantilly in the early part of the fight. We had approached a low, rambling fence—a Virginia fence, as they were called—and I had my gun through it and was doing what service I could. I saw the splinter fly from a piece of that fence under the impetus of a ball from the enemy. In the lightning flash of the flying wood I seemed to find time to dodge, and there was a quick pain like the searing of a hot iron and the splinter was through my hat-band and along my scalp, penetrating it, but not injuring the skull.

"The blow was severe and stunned me, and I remember as well my last look at the scene—the fighting troops, the smoke, the battle and the trampling men. I fell back, my legs half doubled up beneath me, and in a moment my strength was gone and I was powerless. I saw everything. Men fell upon me. Horses reared around me. The battle was on all sides.

"My wits were clear, my brain unclouded, but there was I, dying a death momentarily, alive, yet dead and suffering more tortures than I thought life could have. I lay there perhaps an hour—every moment a year of agony—when I felt some one's hand on my collar, and I was dragged out and turned on my face, where I lay for a moment as some one rifled my cartridge box. The motion saved me. My pulse seemed to stir, my heart beat, my will to re-exert itself, and in a few minutes I was myself. The wound was so small that I staunched it with my handkerchief and in half an hour I was as well as ever.

"If the hand had not found my coat collar I should have been bleaching my bones on Chantilly at this moment instead of here talking to you, and it would have been tough to have passed in on such a scratch."—Lewiston Journal.

The Commissary's Mysterious Disappearance.

The two lines were facing one another, with only a short distance separating them. A farmer rode into the Confederate camp on a mule. Most of the soldiers had been farmers, and were good judges of horseflesh, so that in conversation with the old farmer the merits and demerits of the mule came up naturally for some discussion. It was a good mule, they agreed with the farmer, "but," added the owner, "I've never seen another man that could ride him."

This remark brought on another discussion. Several of the soldiers protested that they had never been thrown from a mule, and were willing to bet that they could ride this one. One of the most vociferous in praising his own horsemanship was a commissary. He swore he could ride that mule, and finally it was decided to let him try.

He had no sooner mounted than the mule began plunging viciously, and then he ran around in a circle several times at breakneck speed, the commissary holding on for his life.

Suddenly that mule made a break for the front. The commissary sawed and shouted in vain. Every attempt was made to stop them, but the mule was wild, and the commissary knew that if he once let loose he would have to be buried.

On like a ternado—and as straight as the crow flies—on past the Confederate outposts and heading for the Yankee lines. They watched him until the mule was lost to sight.

That was the last seen of them, nor has one word ever been heard, from that day to this, of the commissary or the mule.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Poisonous Tick.

This pest in Australia sucks the blood out of the animal on which it has attached itself, and it is supposed that some poisonous secretion of the tick passes into the animal. Two or three ticks will kill a horse in a week or ten days if they are not discovered before that time and pulled out, while dogs and some other animals will not live as long after being attacked. Animals which have been seriously affected with ticks and have recovered—which is, however, a rare occurrence—become tick-proof, and, as native animals are tick-proof by heredity, most of the loss occasioned is with introduced animals. These pests would kill human beings in the same way, but from the fact that from the itchiness they cause they are invariably found and pulled out.

Peace on Earth

Awaits that countless army of martyrs whose ranks are constantly recruited from the victims of nervousness and nervous diseases. The price of the boon is a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most genial of tonic nervines, pursued with reasonable persistence. Easier, pleasanter, and safer, this than to swash the victualing department with pseudo-tonics, alcoholic or the reverse, beef extracts, nerve foods, narcotics, sedatives, and poisons in disguise. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," is the providential recuperant of weak nerves, and, this glorious franchise being usually the consequence of sound digestion and increased vigor, the great stomachic which insures both is productive also of repose at the required time. Not unrefreshed awakens the individual who uses it, but vigorous, clear-headed, and tranquil. Use the Bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney troubles, constipation and biliousness.

"You infernal scoundrel, if you were not insured in my company I'd choke the life out of you."—Texas Siftings.

A QUEER AFRICAN CITY.

DIFFICULTY OF ENTERING TANGIERS AND WHAT ONE MAY SEE.

President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, Visits an African Town Where the Life Is That of the Old Testament and the Arabian Nights.

What is there to see in Tangier, and why do American tourists, after "the run through Spain," think it quite essential to visit the Barbary coast? I can answer for one party. A sagacious friend who recently went from the Straits of Gibraltar to the Bosphorus said to us before we left home: "You will see nothing more purely oriental than Tangier in all your proposed journey." Certainly we have found the place so completely foreign to all our ideas that only the old fashioned word "outlandish" seems adequate to describe it.

Here is the most western of all the seaports of northern Africa lying within sight of the coast of Spain and the Rock of Gibraltar, a place of 16,000 inhabitants, upon whose ways of life and thought European Christian civilization has scarcely made an impression. Yet more than 200 years ago this city for a short period belonged to the English crown. It is now the residence of those foreign ministers who are accredited to the sultan of Morocco. It is in almost daily communication with France, Spain and Gibraltar, both England and Spain maintaining postoffices, with separate bureaus, stamps and mail bags. There are newspapers published here in English and Spanish. The Hotel Continental is so good that there is a current mot to the effect that the best hotel in Europe may be found in Africa.

HARD TO LAND.

The English come "for sport," the particular attraction being the chase of wild boar, for the which a manual of "hog sticking" has been elaborately set forth. Yet, notwithstanding all this the Moors and the Jews go on in their old fashioned ways as if they were living in the Fifteenth century. Indeed, it is easy to believe that we see in Tangier much of the same sort of life which prevailed in southern Spain 400 years ago—before the conquest of Granada—with one important qualification: Tangier has nothing which suggests the learning, the science, the arts, or even the sacredness of the great cities of Andalusia when Moorish sway was dominant. The Arabic or Mohammedan dominion, without the Arabic enlightenment, loses all the charm which is suggested by what is even now to be seen in Cordova, Granada and Seville.

The transit to Tangier is easily made in eight hours from Cadiz, in four hours from Gibraltar, in twelve hours from Malaga, and the traveler may have his choice among many competing steamers of different sizes and different disadvantages.

The transit over, a landing must be made. The beach slopes so gradually that large vessels cannot come near the shore, and people, cattle, baggage and goods must all be transferred to lighters and rowboats and thus brought to land. In rough weather the steamer will sometimes lie for hours without being able to disembark its cargo, and one company of travelers whom we met returned to Spain without putting foot upon the shore of Africa.

When it is rough, but not so rough, passengers are carried ashore in the arms of stalwart Moors, or perhaps ride papoose fashion. Fortunately, these descendants of the pirates who used to infest the Morocco coasts are capital boatmen, with strong arms and legs, so that they may be safely trusted.

New perplexities arise when the shores are reached. In all Tangiers I do not think there is a wheeled vehicle—not a gig, a dray or even a wheelbarrow. So a gang of porters seizes a traveler's trunks, handbags, shawl straps and umbrellas, and transports them up the narrow and sinuous lanes which lead to the hotel.

As I looked from the rowboat to the top of the landing stairs I noticed in the crowd, which was dressed in all the colors of the rainbow and in all the varieties of eastern fabrics, a tall, dark faced Moor, with a capacious turban, a broad, blue flowing robe and a stout staff, ending in a pastoral crook. "I am Mohammed," he called out, pointing to his heart either to confirm his identity or his veracity, I cannot say which. "The man I am looking for," was my answer. From that hour until our departure Mohammed took charge of us. We did not engage him, but he engaged us. His tread was as dignified and steady as that of Salvini when he personates Othello. His shoulders were broad enough for a Samson. His voice was deep, rich and musical, like that of Carl Formes. When he was mounted on his favorite mule, leading our cavalcade through the market place, or halting before the snake charmer, or climbing "the mountain," where foreigners have their houses, he was quite magnificent.

SIGHTS IN THE CITY.

The architecture of Tangier is much more impressive when seen in mass than when seen in detail. Looking toward the city from the steamer in the early dawn the view was beautiful. Terrace above terrace rise white, flat roofed houses, over which tower the minarets of two or three mosques. The city is divided into two parts, through which runs the principal street, leading from the "water gate" to the "market gate." Upon the western or highest acclivity is the karbat or citadel—a combination of residence, fortress, court of justice and prison—a forlorn and unattractive Alhambra. The shops, the bazars, the dwelling houses are interesting because so completely different from those to which Europeans are wonted. So is the boys' school that was "kept" just opposite the door of the Hotel Continental. Twenty bright eyed little fellows, seated on the ground, were taught by an old man in turban and spectacles to repeat over and over again verses from the Koran in a sing-song tone, while cards with the words in Arabic were held in their hands.

Solomon's precepts respecting the utility of the rod were not forgotten by the turbaned pedagogue. He plied the stick gently but firmly on the backs of the inattentive scholars, precisely as in southern Spain the sellers of Christmas turkeys drive their bipeds from door to door in search of a purchaser.

If the buildings of Tangier are not pleasing, the landscape is most rewarding. The beautiful curve of the bay, the wide view of the ocean, the near hills of gentle acclivity intersected by pleasant valleys, the foliage green in winter, and including such sub-tropical plants as palms, cactus, aloes, eucalyptus, pepper trees, oranges and lemons—all this was charming. In the distance on the European coast we could see Trafalgar, where Nelson fought and died; Tarifa, a name associated with most unpleasant "duties," and Gibraltar, with its commanding fortress. Here run the straits which unite the sea to the ocean, and here are the pillars of Hercules, which always have been and always will be landmarks to the traveler and the merchant.—D. C. Gilman in Baltimore Sun.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The "Seven Modern Engineering Wonders of the World," described by Arthur V. Abbott, with elaborate illustrations, in the August number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, are: The new Forth Bridge, Scotland; the Eiffel Tower, Paris; the new Croton Aqueduct, New York; the blowing-up of the Hell Gate obstructions, New York; the Eads Jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi the St. Gothard Tunnel, Switzerland; and the Brooklyn or East River Bridge. A racy biographical sketch is that of "A Vagabond Queen" (Isabella II of Spain). Edwin H. Morris, an eminent authority on dogs, writes of those "Canine Lords," the greyhounds, including the superb Russian Barzoi. An article on "The Tin-Mines of the Black Hill's conveys information as to that country's resources which will surprise many readers; "Zoar and the Zoarites" is a picturesque account of a remarkable Ohio community; and "Storms and Cloudbursts" are interestingly discussed by Dr. Felix L. Oswald. There are also numerous short illustrated sketches, poems and stories.

A Pantomime Audience.

If there is one thing more amusing than an English pantomime, it is the English audience that go to see it. Men, women, and children who are intelligent enough on ordinary occasions seem, under the influence of this potent spell, to lose all control of themselves. Before the curtain rose the faces in front were expressive and even thoughtful. But when the entertainment was in full swing all sense of propriety was thrown off. The audience were carried away and delighted beyond measure, and swallowed the most idiotic nonsense with one broad grin that seemed to mantle the face of the whole house. Shout after shout went up when the clown sat on the baby; and as the cockney swell appeared, extravagantly conscious of his own dignity and charmed by the effect of his personal appearance, the heartless public sat in eager expectancy, well knowing that some disaster was about to befall him; and when a half-barrel of flour was poured upon his devoted head they would burst forth in the most boisterous manner. Any catastrophe that occurred to the police was always hailed with delight. Why is it that these guardians of our safety are held in such contempt theatrically? When a double-dyed villian gets his quietus, and the innocent heroine is restored to the arms of the first walking gentlemen, we applaud with delight. Surely under these circumstances one would suppose it to be our duty to resent any affront offered to the "force"; but no, the slightest indignity bestowed upon a virtuous policeman, such as the emptying of a bucket of water over his helmet, seems to give us joy.—Joseph Jefferson, in The Century for July.

By saturating bullets with vaseline they may be easily seen in their course from rifle to the target; their trajectory course is marked by a beautiful ring of smoke, caused by the vaseline being ignited on leaving the muzzle of the gun, the smoke being suspended for some time in the air if not too windy. Much better scores result when grease of some kind is used, bullets are not so apt to be split, the recoil is not so great, and it is believed the course of the missile is more true.

A Valuable Discovery.

Dr. Brown Sequard's elixir of youth may be an important discovery, but every one knows that Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure certainly is. It has given thousands afflicted with serious heart disease a new lease of life. Druggists who can observe its effects on many customers everywhere speak highly of it. Mr. John Weaver, of Knightstown, Ind., says: "I have sold much of Dr. Miles' New Cure and have received many good reports." O. Monroe, of Dunkirk, N. Y., reports large sales "And the best part of it is every bottle has given satisfaction." Sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport. 6

Coughing

IS Nature's effort to expel foreign substances from the bronchial passages. Frequently, this causes inflammation and the need of an anodyne. No other expectorant or anodyne is equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It assists Nature in ejecting the mucus, allays irritation, induces repose, and is the most popular of all cough cures.

"Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred diseases, there is none, within the range of my experience, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For years I was subject to colds, followed by terrible coughs. About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this preparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure." —Mrs. L. L. Brown, Denmark, Miss.

"A few years ago I took a severe cold which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continual use of the Pectoral, a permanent cure was effected."—Horace Fairbrother, Rockingham, Vt.

Valuable Information to Voters in Indiana.

METHOD OF CASTING THE BALLOT.

Cuts and Diagrams Showing How the Polling Places Are to Be Arranged. How a Vote May Be Challenged—The Ballots—What the Voter Must Do. What He Must Not Do—The Canvass.

The general election law passed March 6, 1889, by the general assembly of the State of Indiana is now in force, and as the election this fall will be conducted according to its provisions it is highly important that every voter in the state should acquaint himself with its requirements. Its extreme length has prevented that careful examination of its provisions which the importance of the law would have otherwise occasioned, and in consequence some erroneous ideas have become prevalent. One is that it does not provide for the registration of voters, and another that the system of balloting provided by it is complicated. As to the first, the law does not require the repeated registration of citizens who reside continuously in the same county, but it does require the registration of every person who moves into the county within six months preceding an election, whether he previously resided within the state or not, and also of every person who, having once been a citizen of Indiana, shall have voted in another state or gone there with the intention of voting, or who shall have been absent from the state for six months. This system will effectually cut off the industry of importing voters.

While under the new law the preparation and distribution of ballots, the "preservation of order" at the polls and the "instruction of ignorant voters" will be performed by sworn officers of the state and not by irresponsible agents of political parties, the only real new features of the system are the registration of voters and the secrecy of the ballot.

THE POLLING PLACE.

The reader may get an idea of the arrangement of the polling place from the diagram given below, and as the plan shown is the simplest and most convenient it will probably be the one most generally used.

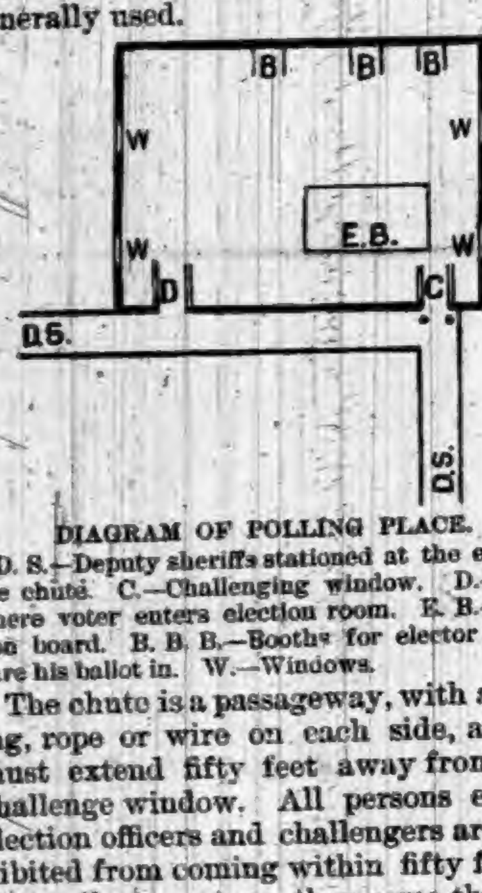

DIAGRAM OF POLLING PLACE.

D. S.—Deputy sheriffs stationed at the ends of the chute. C.—Challenging window. D.—Door where voter enters election room. E. B.—Election board. B. B. B.—Booths for elector to prepare his ballot in. W.—Windows.

The chute is a passageway, with a railing, rope or wire on each side, and it must extend fifty feet away from the challenge window. All persons except election officers and challengers are prohibited from coming within fifty feet of the polls, except as they come through this chute to enter the election room.

ELECTION SHERIFFS.

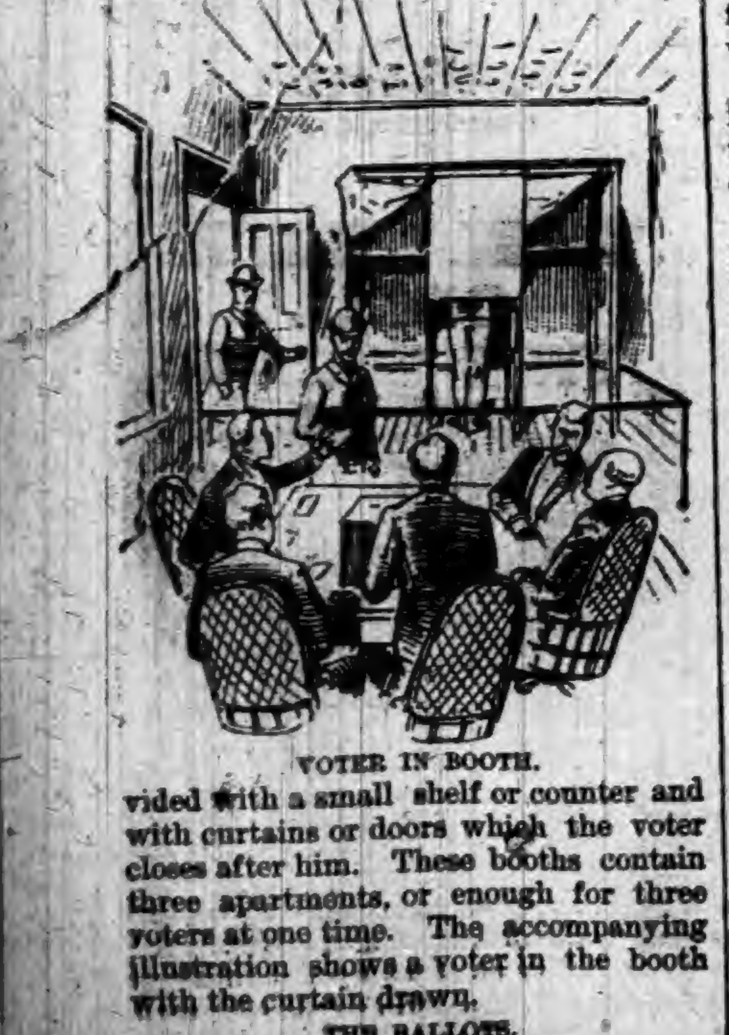
The election sheriffs are special deputies appointed by the county sheriff to act as officers at the polls. The sheriffs must be at the polls when they open and remain until the count is concluded. They must make arrests on the demand of any member of the board, and also on affidavit made before the inspector by any qualified voter that any person who has voted is not a legal voter.

THE CHALLENGERS.

The new law puts a stop to needless and indiscriminate challenging, and but one challenger and one poll book holder, designated by each party organization, are entitled to stand at the sides of the chute next the challenge window. When a person is challenged he must stand aside or make affidavit that he is a legal voter. If he makes affidavit he is entitled to vote, unless the challenger or some other person makes affidavit that he is not a legal voter. The voter must then bring a qualified voter of the precinct as a witness, who must swear that of his own knowledge the claimant is a legal voter.

ELECTION BOOTHS.

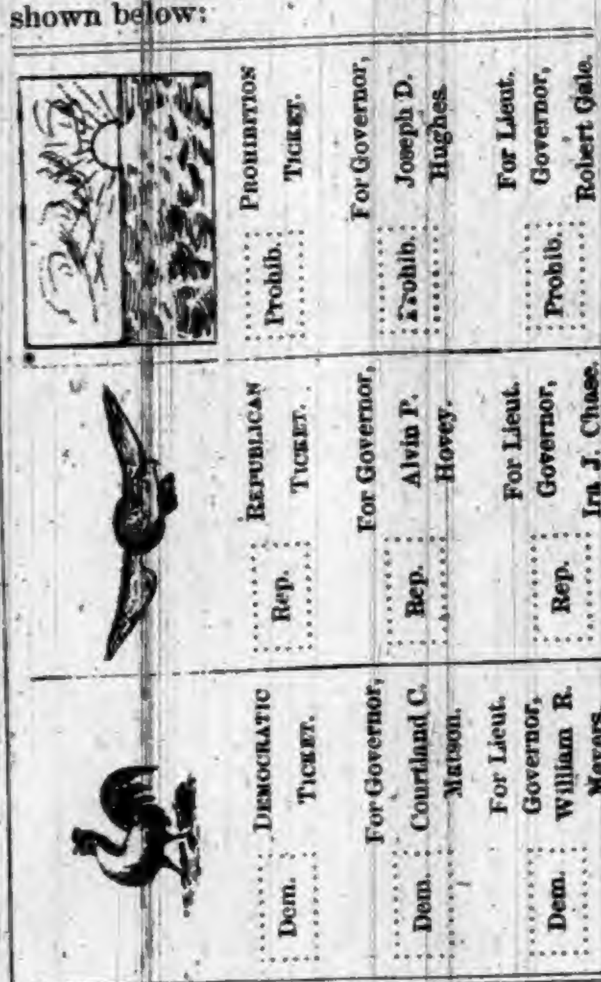
According to law the voter must be screened from view while marking and folding his ballot, and for this purpose election booths are to be used. These are nothing more than little stalls provided with a small shelf or counter and with curtains or doors which the voter closes after him. These booths contain three apartments, or enough for three voters at one time. The accompanying illustration shows a voter in the booth with the curtain drawn.



VOTER IN BOOTH.

THE BALLOTS.

The county board of election commissioners will prepare and distribute ballots for the election of all officers who are to be voted for in their county other than those to be voted for by all the electors of the state, and the names of all candidates of their respective jurisdictions will be printed on one ballot, all nominations of any party being placed under the title and device adopted by such party. The ballot shall be of uniform size and of the same quality and color of paper, and sufficiently thick that the printing cannot be distinguished from the back. The ballots prepared by the state board of election commissioners will be printed on red tinted paper and put up in blocks of 100 each, while those prepared by the county board of election commissioners are to be printed on white paper. The arrangement of the ballot is to be after the manner shown below:



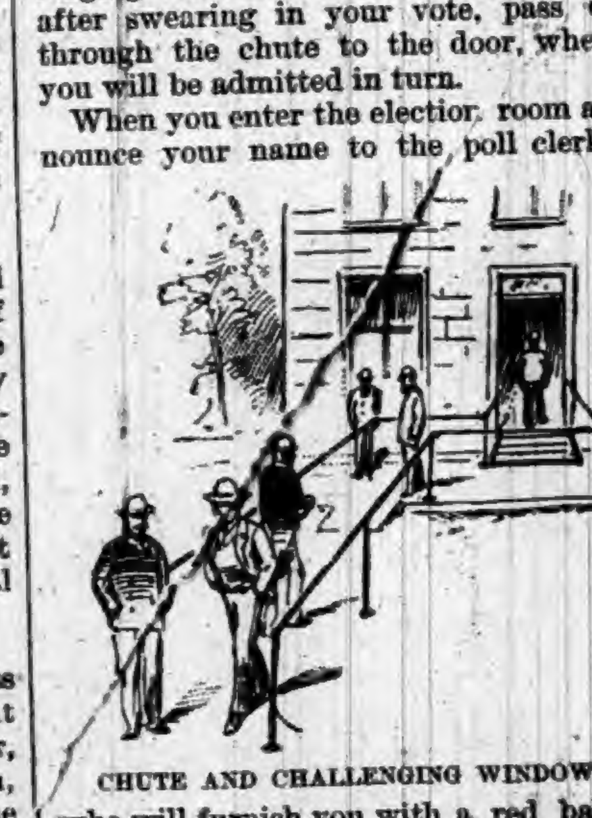
PROHIBITION TICKET.
Prohib.
For Governor, Joseph D. Hughes.
Prohib.
For Lieut. Governor, Robert Gale.
Prohib.
REPUBLICAN TICKET.
Rep.
For Governor, Alvin P. Hovey.
Rep.
For Lieut. Governor, Ira J. Chase.
Rep.
DEMOCRATIC TICKET.
Dem.
For Governor, Courtland C. Matson.
Dem.
For Lieut. Governor, William R. Meyers.
Dem.

The device adopted and list of candidates of the Democratic party must occupy the first column on the left hand side of the ballot, that of the Republican party in the second column and that of the Prohibition party in the third column. The list of candidates of any other party shall follow in such order as the board of election commissioners may decide. Samples of the ballots plainly marked "Sample ballot," and printed on different colored paper from that on which the genuine ballot is printed, will be posted in the vicinity of the polling place for the instruction and information of voters, but no voter is supposed to see the genuine ballot until it is given him by the polling clerks after he enters the election room. If the printer of the ballots shall give, or knowingly permit any one other than the board of election commissioners to take, any of the ballots, he then, according to the law, has committed a felony, and is liable to imprisonment for a term not less than three nor more than ten years.

WHAT THE VOTER MUST DO.

If you are subject to registration, as before stated, you must register at the county clerk's office at least three months before the election. On going to the polls on election day pass through the chute to the challenge window, and if challenged swear in your vote or stand aside. The necessary forms for affidavits will be supplied at the challenging window. If not challenged, or after swearing in your vote, pass on through the chute to the door, where you will be admitted in turn.

When you enter the election room announce your name to the poll clerks, who will furnish you with a red ballot containing the names of all candidates for state offices, a white ballot containing the names of all candidates for local offices, and a stamp for marking them.



CHUTE AND CHALLENGING WINDOW.

If you do not understand how to mark your ballots ask the poll clerks. If you cannot read English, or are physically unable to mark your ballots, the poll clerks will mark it for you, and on request will read over the names marked.

Go alone into one of the unoccupied booths and mark your ballot with the stamp. If you wish to vote a "straight ticket" mark the square in front of the title of your party at the head of the ticket. If you wish to vote a mixed or "scratched" ticket mark the square in front of the name of each candidate for whom you wish to vote.

If by accident you tear, mutilate, deface or spoil your ballot go at once to the poll clerks, explain how the accident occurred, and ask for another ballot.

Before leaving the booth fold each of your ballots so that the initials of the poll clerks on the back will show, but so that no part of the face of the ballot can be seen.

When your ballots are marked and folded come out of the booth. Give the stamp to the poll clerk from whom you received it and hand the folded ballots to the inspector, who will put them in the ballot box in your presence. Then leave the room.

When you have voted, and before you are ready to vote, remain fifty feet away from the polls.

As the voter doubtless now understands pretty well what to do it is right that he should alike understand

WHAT HE MUST NOT DO.

Do not attempt to vote if you are not a legal voter. You are not a legal voter if you have not lived in the state six months, the township sixty days and the precinct thirty days. You are not a legal voter if you have lived in the county less than six months and have not registered. If registered you must have your certificate with you.

Do not accept a ballot from any person outside of the election room. Any ballot obtained outside is fraudulent, and it is a penitentiary offense to have such a ballot in your possession, whether you attempt to vote it or not.

Do not attempt to hold any conversation in the election room except with the members of the election board and the poll clerks. It is a penitentiary offense to declare that you cannot read English or cannot mark your ballot if in fact you can.

Do not mark on the ballot with the stamp at any place except the squares in front of the title of the party, or the names of the candidates for whom you wish to vote. Do not put any mark of any kind on your ballot except with the stamp.

Do not tear, mutilate, deface or mark your ballot in any way so that it could be identified; and if you should do so accidentally do not attempt to vote it.

Do not show the face of your ballot to any person; you will lose your vote and be subject to fine and imprisonment if you do. Do not attempt to see the ballot of any other person.

Do not attempt to vote any ballot except the one given you by the poll clerks. Do not injure or interfere with any of the railings, posters, booths or any of the furniture used in conducting the election.

Do not advise, counsel or abet any vote buying, bribery or other violation of the election law.

Do not personate some one else in registering.

Do not misprint ballots.

Do not make a false affidavit.

Do not refuse an employe time to vote, as the law says he can have four hours at some time in the day for that purpose.

Do not deceive an elector in assisting him to stamp his ticket.

Do not counterfeit ballots.

Do not open or destroy ballot packages.

Do not reveal the nature of ticket cast by voter.

Do not try to persuade election board to violate the law.

Do not electioneer within the fifty feet limit.

Do not show a marked ballot.

Do not bribe.

Do not break open any ballot box.

Do not alter a tally sheet.

Do not import voters.

Do not vote twice.

Do not intimidate voters.

Do not bet on the election.

Severe penalties are provided for doing or attempting to do any of these acts. Any voter who attempts to leave the election room with a ballot or stamp in his possession shall be immediately arrested, and any person having in his possession outside the election room any ballot or stamp, whether genuine or counterfeit, during the election shall be guilty of felony, and shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than five years, and shall be disfranchised for any determinate period not less than ten years.

CANVASS OF THE VOTE.

Immediately on closing the polls the board shall count all the ballots remaining unvoted, record the number of the same on the tally sheets and destroy all of such ballots by totally consuming by fire.

The board shall then proceed to canvass the votes, beginning first with the state ballots, and completing them before proceeding with the local ballots, by laying each ballot on the table in the order in which it is taken from the ballot box, and the inspector and judge of the election, differing in politics from the inspector, shall view the ballots as the names of the persons voted for are read therefrom. In the canvass of the votes any ballot which is not indorsed with the initials of the poll clerks, and any ballot which shall bear any distinguishing mark or mutilation, shall be void and shall not be counted, and any ballot or part of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice of candidates shall not be counted as a candidate or candidates affected thereby; provided, however, that on protest of any member of the board such ballot, and all disputed ballots, shall be preserved by the inspector, and at the close of the count placed with the seals of the ballot packages in paper bags, securely sealed, and so delivered to the clerk of the county, with notification to him of the number of ballots so placed in such bags, and of the condition of the seals of the ballot packages. The poll clerk shall also record on the tally sheets memoranda of such ballots and the condition of the seal of the ballot packages, and in any contest of election such ballots and seals may be submitted in evidence. On completing the count and recording the same on the tally sheets all the remaining ballots, except those marked, mutilated or otherwise defective, shall be destroyed by the election board by totally consuming by fire before adjournment, and thereupon the election board shall immediately make a memorandum of the total vote cast for each candidate, and deliver a copy thereof to each member of such board.

By this it will be observed that the practice of petitioning courts for a recount of the votes, as was frequently the case under the old law, is abolished under the mandatory clause to burn the ballots. The only ground left for contest is the disputed tickets uncounted, which will require almost a tie vote to be available.

AS TO CANDIDATES ELECTIONEERING.

The new law contains stringent provisions against the use of money or anything of value to influence voters directly or indirectly, either in nominating conventions or in elections. As they are equally stringent as to hiring persons to do electioneering, or to use their influence in any way, the occupation of the professional "worker" is gone. Any violation, direct or indirect, subjects the candidate to fine, imprisonment and challenge as a voter. It also prevents him from holding the office to which he is nominated or elected, disfranchises him and makes him liable to the person hired or bought in the sum of $300. It is not safe for a candidate to enter a campaign without carefully examining the new laws, and it will be found advantageous to know the provisions, as the penalties prescribed will be sufficient answer to the parasites who will demand money of him.

If the requirements of the new law are strictly complied with there is no possibility of anything other than a fair election and an honest count in Indiana.

MERIT WINS. We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits.

JUDGE McCLELLAN SUSTAINED.

The incomes of the wealthy should be taxed, so they will pay of the public expense, a share that will compare with that paid by those with less means. This is in subtance, the idea on which is based the plea for a tax on incomes. It is in subtance Judge McClellan's idea, and which he is trying to carry into effect by pushing a bill in Congress, providing for such a tax. We have mentioned this before, and now call attention to it to show that other statesmen of broad views, whose patriotism and sense of justice, are known throughout the union, have adopted Judge McClellan's views. One of these, one that will strike every Indiana man favorably, is Judge Helman, the veteran member from the Fourth Indiana district, a man who has been in the House longer than any other member from our state now in that body, and who has always had the respect of men of all parties for his sterling honesty and great ability. No one should fail to read what he says in a recent interview in the New York Sun. After speaking of the extravagance of this Congress, he adds:

> But with this unexampled extravagance of Congress, I hope for at least one other result. That is, that the farmers, who bear the heaviest weight of government, both state and national, whose great industry has been for years, and still is grievously oppressed by the pernicious legislation of Congress, while special interests are pampered and general interests loaded down with burdens, and indeed, all laboring men will begin to consider seriously the propriety of a judicious income tax, so that the great capital interests which control Congress and inspire the legislation which builds up private estates and fosters special interests at the expense of the general welfare, will be compelled to bear a just share of the burdens of the government. I tell you that whatever may be said against it, a judicious income tax, which would reach fairly and justly the great private estates which our class legislation has virtually created, would do a great deal in preventing appropriations and vicious laws. When the wealth of the country bears a reasonable portion of the tax which swells into nearly four hundred millions a year, owners of great private estates will begin to see the value and merit of frugal and honest government.

WE see continued efforts on the part of republicans about here, and republican papers, to misrepresent Judge McClellan, and all he does. Some of these statements show ignorance. One case is in point. It has been stated that he voted against free coinage of silver. This is not true. The Record, page 6191 shows that he voted in favor of a motion to recommit the silver bill to the committe on coinage, with instructions to have that committee prepare and report a bill in favor of free coinage. We hope these critics will read the Record. But he did vote against the silver bill that was passed, for the very reason that it did not provide for free coinage, but was a bill in the interest of the gold men, those who do not want silver to be made equal in value and commercial usefulness with gold. These goldites expressed themselves very plainly, on this point. Senator Dolph, of Oregon, said plainly. "Free coinage would have put the country on a silver basis. * * * There will be danger in any measure that increases the volume of silver coin or silver certificates which are redeemable in silver dollars." Other gold men spoke as plainly. In voting against the silver bill which such men had prepared, the democrats simply cast a vote, as usual, in favor of the common people's interests and against the gold bugs. They did right, and we believe the people will thank them for it.

Literary Note from The Century Co.

At the time of General Fremont's death he was engaged upon the manuscript of a paper for The Century's forthcoming series on the California Gold Hunters. It was to be entitled "Finding Paths to California," and was not only to deal with the several exploring expeditions, but to narrate the writer's intimate connection with the events which led to the conquest and occupation of the territory. The work will be promptly continued by Mrs. Fremont. A first draft of the article had been made, and the subject so recently and closely discussed by General and Mrs. Fremont that she will have no trouble in completing the manuscript, for which she has already written an introduction, as well as a supplement describing her life at Monterey in 1849. A fine portrait of General Fremont from a daguerreotype of '49 or '50 will appear in the September number of The Century, along with portraits of Commodores Sloat and Stockton, "Duke" Gwin, and Governor Burnett, in an article giving account of "How California Came into the Union."

Marvelous Endurance.

The vast amount of labor performed by the heart in keeping all portions of the body supplied with blood is not generally known. It beats 100,000 times, and forces the blood at the rate of 168 miles a day, which is 3,000,000,000 times and 5,150,880 miles in a life time. No wonder there are so many heart failures. The first symptoms are shortness of breath when exercising, pain in the side or stomach, fluttering choking in in the throat, oppression, then follow weak, hungry or smothering spells, swollen ankles, etc. Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. FATAL EXCURSION.

Two Steamers Collide, Killing Four Persons and Injuring Many More.

A special from Baltimore says: The excursion steamer Louise and the bay line steamer Virginia, were in collision near Fort Carroll. Four people are known to have been killed and seventy-five injured. Many believe that a greater number were drowned. Just how many lives were lost cannot be positively determined. The dead are: Mrs. Mahlia Marshall, Charles Grenzer, Daniel Keep, and Mrs. Howard Keizer. There are seven missing—they may have jumped or been thrown overboard. Twelve persons have been taken to the hospitals in a badly injured condition. Just how many people went over into the water is not known, but some eye witnesses of the disaster say that a great number of people, men, women, and children, were sitting on the starboard side, when the crash occurred, and immediately disappeared. Not since the Tivoli disaster has such a thing happened near this city. All sorts of rumors are afloat as to the number killed and injured. The streets are thronged with anxious relatives and friends of those reported missing. Just who is to blame for the accident is not known. Naturally the pilots of both boats deny negligence. Capt. Bohannon said that his boat, the Virginia, struck the starboard quarter of the Louise about the after gang way. "The collision nearly turned the Virginia around so great was the force. There was no great excitement aboard our boat, although when the collision occurred a man, one lady and a child climbed overboard. They did not return when I left the Louise. I saw no one on the waters. When the collision occurred the people on the Louise rushed to the side where the Virgina struck. I do not want to cast any reflection on the captain of the Louise, but I think he was wrong." The captain of the Louise disclaims all responsibility for the accident and intimates that the blame is entirely with the bay line steamer. The Louise was carrying 1,450 passengers and the scene on board was an awful one. Four are known to be dead and eight are now missing.

THE CENSUS.

About Eighty-five Per Cent. of the Returns of the Whole Country Now In.

About 85 per cent. of the population of the entire country has been received at the Census Bureau, and Superintendent Porter hopes, with the present rate of counting, to have the rough estimate of the population of the country ready in a few weeks. While the energies of the office are being pushed toward securing the result of the count of the people, other inquiries connected with the census are also being pushed forward, and Superintendent Porter hopes within a week to begin the publication of bulletins giving the results of these special inquiries. To show how well in hand the census work is, compared with ten years ago, Superintendent Porter states that about this time ten years ago, as chief of the division of wealth, debt and taxation, he was just putting out the schedules, while now the office is getting ready to announce the results of this inquiry. Bulletins will also soon be issued, giving the bonded indebtedness of 858 cities now and in 1880, and statistics of State production of insurance and on street railways.

A Western Town Burned.

The town of Wallace, Idaho, 100 miles east of Spokane Falls, burned and it is said that only two buildings have been saved, and these were the railroad stations. The loss will probably be $300,000. The fire started in the saloon of "Shorty," of Denver. The high wind carried the flames to other buildings, all of which were frame. The water facilities were good, but the firemen could not check the progress of the flames. The telegraph and telephone wires were destroyed and particulars are meager. Wallace is the leading mining town of the Cœur d'Alene district and will undoubtedly be rebuilt. One thousand five hundred people are homeless.

Fearful Loss of Life.

A special from Manchester, England, says: A fearful accident has just happened in the new Manchester ship canal which will entail a heavy loss of life. Two workmen's trains, through some unexplained stupidity of a switchman, have collided. Ten workmen were instantly killed and sixty others injured, of whom twenty, it is said, will certainly die. The news has spread through the city and the greatest excitement prevails. Of the sixty injured it is now believed that at least thirty are fatally hurt.

The Rebels Are on Top.

Buenos Ayres special: The revolutionary movement continues to spread. The fighting between the Government troops and the revolutionists was desperate. The Government forces were defeated and 1,000 of them killed or wounded. The navy has joined the revolutionary movement. Insurgent artillery bombarded the Government house and the barracks.

Will Attend the Encampment.

Boston, special: President Harrison has written Governor Brackett an autograph letter in which he says he hopes to be in Boston, Tuesday, August 12, the day of the Grand Army parade, and in reply to the Governor's inquiry states he will accept such hospitality on the part of the State as his brief stay and the exercises of the occasion will permit.

Both Legs Cut Off.

Martin Inman, 18 years old, was found on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, with both legs cut off above the knee. It is supposed he was stealing a ride and fell off the cars.

A BLAZE AT SEA.

New York special: The National Line Steamship Company has received a cablegram confirming the fire and abandonment of the steamer Egypt. The company say: On July 15, five days out from this port fire was discovered in the lower hold of the steamer among 800 bales of cotton. The hatches were battered down and efforts made to smother the flames, but in spite of all the efforts of the crew and the twenty-five cattlemen on board, the fire burned fiercely, and spread to 400 cases of lard oil, which were stored amidship. The heat then became so great that all hands were driven away, and the cattle, driven mad by flames, stampeded and over-run the ship. The crew battled with the fire all the night of the 15th, and at daybreak on the 16th, seeing their efforts were futile, it was decided to abandon the vessel and take to the boats. The captain and all of the seventy-two men of the officers and crew and the twenty-five cattlemen left the ship in boats and after floating until 5 o'clock Thursday night they were picked up by the steamer Manhattan and will be landed at Dover.

PIRATES ON LONG ISLAND.

Thrilling Story Told by William C. Walton—Female Thieves.

New York special: The days of the pirates are not yet over for Long Island, if the story of William C. Walton, investment broker, is to be believed, and there is no reason to doubt it. The other day he set out in his sloop Caprice from Newark, with a sailing-master and one man before the mast. Off Horton's point a storm came up and the vessel was thrown upon the rocks. Mr. Walton and his men endeavored to launch the port boat and trust themselves to the seething waters. Some men on shore swam out to assist them, and one ventured so far that it took all the efforts of the shipwrecked men to save him. At last all hands reached the shore safely, with the aid of a rope thrown them; but no sooner had they set foot on land than Mr. Walton and his friends were surrounded by a yelling gang of men and women, who clamored for money. The venturesome one who had been saved by Mr. Walton demanded $25 for saving Mr. Walton's life, and was backed by the crowd. Mr. Walton protested that he had no money, and the women got into battle array and insisted on his producing his pocket-book and paying their husbands. Both men and women threatened and swore, and Mr. Walton and his companions, with difficulty and with the crowd in pursuit of them, made their way to Prospect house, Shelter island. Then, to save further trouble, Mr. Walton was obliged to obtain from the proprietor the sum demanded by the piratical rascals. Next morning Mr. Walton found that the wrecked sloop had been stripped of everything of value, and that some of the articles were offered him for a big price. When he reached New York he got out warrants for the arrest of the robbers.

A RUINED LIFE.

Richwood, O., is now in a serious mood because of a most remarkable marriage. The facts are as follows: A stranger came here recently, and found his way to the home of Miss Emma Jane Rosette, a lady of excellent character, whom it seems had in some way gone into correspondence with him. After reaching her home he represented to her that he had been robbed on the train and was entirely without funds to prepare for the wedding, which it seems had been prearranged. As love is blind to all reason, the lady opened her heart, against the earnest protestations of her nearest friends and arranged to become his wife, and disposed of all her earthly possessions amounting to $400, as an interest in her home with a brother with whom she lived. They hired a conveyance which took them to Marysville where they were made man and wife, she paying all the expenses. They went back to Richwood, and took board at the Palmer House, where he registered as W. J. Blake and wife, Detroit, Mich. They also paid a short visit to her brother at Peoria, a small village not far from there. During the week they started on a wedding tour to New York City. No tidings were heard from them until Sunday, when a telegram was received by her brother to the effect that her husband had left her penniless, and asking for money to bring her back home. Her brother kindly telegraphed an order for a railroad ticket to New York. The good and charitable people of Richwood express their deep feelings of sorrow for the ruin of this once highly esteemed lady.

GENERAL PELLEGRUE

Assumes the President's Chair in the Disturbed Argentine Republic.

A special from Buenos Ayres, (via Rio,) says: General Campos, at the head of the Revolutionary forces has taken possession of the arsenal, barracks, and the plaza Savalle in this city. Several street fights have taken place which resulted adversely to the government, though the losses on both sides were heavy. During the firing between the troops several buildings caught on fire and were destroyed. The navy, so far, has remained neutral, but the revolutionary movement evidently commands the popular sympathy. Dispatches are meagre as to details and it is impossible to gain exact information as to the situation. As all accounts agree that the revolutionary party has entire control of the city it is clear that news unfavorable to that side would not be allowed to be sent over the wires. Gen. Pellegrue issued a manifesto in which he assumed the Presidency of the Republic.

Three Persons Killed, and Many Injured.

W. J. Bullard's boarding house, a two-story brick building at 203 Congress street, was blown up at Savannah, Ga. Three persons were killed and six injured, two of whom will probably die. There were thirteen people in the house. The explosion shattered the walls, which collapsed in an instant and fell a mass of ruins. Most of the occupants of the house were asleep and were hurled from their beds and either buried under the falling debris or thrown on top of it. The killed are: Mrs. W. J. Bullard, —Lockley, Gus Bobie. The wounded are: John Roberts, right ankle fractured and concussion of the brain from the shock; L. J. Tate, contusion of the face and chest; Meldon Hywood, (colored), shoulder dislocated and injured; A. Rimes, slightly bruised; Edward S. Everitt, slightly bruised. Mrs. Edward S. Everitt, slightly bruised; Sam King (colored), badly injured about the body.

A Massachusetts Cyclone.

A terrible cyclone passed over Lawrence, Mass., killing seven people and doing considerable damage. From the ruins of their houses were taken out the following dead: Mrs. O'Connell, 19 Springfield street, crushed; Mamie O'Connell, neck broken; Mary Lyons, aged 40, crushed; Mrs. Collins, Portland street, crushed; her child, 14 years old, crushed; child of Julia Beatty, which was buried in the ruins, has not yet been found. Of the injured, some, especially those of the family of Martin McLaughlin are seriously, if not fatally, hurt. The damage to property is over $100,000. An unknown railroad man was killed. The cyclone struck the city from the west, and cut a swath over a mile in length and over three hundred feet in width.

Didn't Like the Workhouse.

Cornelius McCarty, a man of fine attainments, but given to drink, was sent to the penitentiary from Indianapolis, under peculiar circumstances. He stole a dictionary, and the court was about to send him to the workhouse on a plea of guilty when McCarty said: "Your Honor, I rise to protest against being sent to the workhouse. I have been there seventeen times and I am tired of it. The fair is simply villainous and the associations are bad. Please send me to the penitentiary for a year for a change." Judge Irwin granted the request and sentenced him for one year.

Minnesota Republicans.

The Minnesota Republican Convention has made the following nominations: For Governor, William R. Merriam, present incumbent; for Lieutenant Governor, Senator G. S. Ives; State Treasurer, Joseph Bobleter, renominated by acclamation; Secretary of State, F. P. Brown; State Auditor, P. J. McGuire; Attorney General, Moses E. Clapp, renominated; Clerk of the Supreme Court, C. B. Holcomb.

Sail Boats Capsize.

During the progress of a yacht race at Duluth, Minn., a sudden squall came up and three sail boats were capsized. Two of them sank immediately. One boat contained a party of five, all of whom were provided with life preservers. They were picked up in a short time uninjured. In another boat were Rev. Mr. Lathrop and Rev. Dr. Dunn and three others. They were also picked up all right. The crew of the Roller were not so fortunate. She was being sailed by the owner, Charles Lindner, in the yacht race, and with him was J. W. Clark, both of whom were drowned. The rest of the crew were picked up. The Roller was heavily weighted and sank like a shot, giving the unfortunate men no chance for their lives.

A Big Wash Out.

Denver special: The washout on the Colorado Central Railroad is the most disastrous that has occurred since the road was built. The loss is approximated at $250,000. The amount of track washed out covered altogether a distance of twenty miles—five miles from the forks of the creek to Smith Hill, and fifteen miles from Golden to Floyd Hill. The iron rails at the forks of the creek look like a bundle of wire, it has been so tangled up. It is impossible for railroad men to estimate the damage done to the road, but they admitted that it must be very large, as the road through there is a very costly piece of railroad construction

Dr. Meyer Goes Free.

Dr. Henry Meyer is again a free man. A jury in Judge Grinnell's court, at Chicago, returned a verdict finding him not guilty of defrauding the Germania Life Insurance Company. The defendant and his faithful young wife were seated together on the prisoner's bench holding hands when the jury entered the box, and an affecting scene followed the reading of the verdict. Mrs. Meyer burst into tears and threw herself on her husband's neck. He held her hands still harder to soothe her excitement, and several hearty kisses were exchanged. After that they grasped the hand of each juror in turn and thanked them effusively.

Fatal Fight with Tramps.

A gang of tramps attacked the Lake Shore freight train at Goshen, Ind., and made things rather lively for awhile. The train men fought like tigers, but in the melee which followed one of the brakemen, named Frank Houck, was fatally shot, and Conductor C. H. Rockwood fearfully pounded about the head and breast. He is badly injured. Help soon arrived and the toughs were driven off. Lake Shore detectives arrived on the scene in a special train from Elkhart, but have not yet found any trace of the murderers. It is only about four weeks since that a gang of tramps assaulted a train crew at the same place.

A Pavilion Falls.

A horrible accident occurred at the outing of the Grand Lodge Sons of St. George of Michigan, at Ironwood, Mich. About six hundred were in the pavilion, a structure raised fifteen feet above the ground, when, without warning, it fell, precipitating the mass of human beings to the ground. For a moment there was stillness, and then a cry of horror was sent up by the struggling victims. Willing hands were sent to their relief at once. The major portion were more scared than hurt, but many were badly injured. These were extracted and made as comfortable as possible.

Successful Seal Fishing.

San Francisco special: The schooner "Dashing Wave" arrived here from Sand Point, Alaska, bringing news of the sealing fleet. The vessels have done well, having caught from six hundred to twelve hundred seals each. The rendezvous for the fleet this year was at Konish Island instead of Sand Point. The sealers, seven in number, have left for the Behring Sea. The British schooner, Lilly, did not appear, and fears are entertained for her safety. The revenue cutter, Richard Rush, arrived at Sand Point on July 10 and left two days later for Ounatoska.

Should Be Pardon.

J. A. Holmes, a colored cook at the Hotel Hascall, of Goshen, Ind., who was five years ago sentenced to two years at Michigan City for bigamy, escaped shortly afterward, and, though a vigorous search was carried on, no trace of him could be found. He has turned up at Goshen and asked Mr. Alderman, his old employer, for work. The latter told him if he would go back and serve his time out he would reinstate him in his employ, as he was a very valuable kitchen adjunct. This Holmes consented to, and left for Michigan City in company with Alderman.

Probable Wife Murder.

At Indianapolis John Soloman, aged 65, and his wife, aged 60, quarreled and he left the house and went to the barn. She followed him a few minutes later to apprise him of the presence of a friend at the house, but just as she entered the door he threw an iron coupling pin at her with great force. It struck her squarely above the right eye, crushing into her skull and knocking her senseless. Seeing that he had probably killed her, Soloman fled and has avoided arrest. The woman is in a very precarious condition, and will hardly recover.

Horrible Wife Murder.

A horrible murder and suicide occurred near the village of Zanesfield, Ohio, in which a cowardly ruffian enticed his young wife to an orchard and shot her in the back, and then blew out his brains with a double-barreled shot-gun. The man's name was Albert D. Parmenter, and his victim's name was Carrie Leella. The murderer was a fairly well-to-do farmer, 25 years old, and his wife, who owned the place, had just passed her 22d birthday.

Was Tired of Life.

R. D. McKey, who has been superintending a farm in Dakota for his brother, J. P. McKey, who is cashier of the First National Bank at Three Rivers, Mich., has committed suicide. He went to his room at his brother's house, where he had been stopping for some time, and shot himself in the head, death resulting almost instantly. He had been noticed as being in a despondent mood for a few days. He was about 43 years of age and unmarried.

Murder and Suicide.

Mandeville Ault, Deputy Recorder of Bellmont County, Ohio, at his father's home near Centerville, shot his wife through the heart, killing her instantly, and then shot himself in the head, but not fatally. He then hanged himself in the barn. Mental and physical depression for nearly a year is assigned as the cause.

Burned His House and Took Poison.

John Gillinger, a young bachelor farmer, living near Nashport, Ohio, becoming despondent over the refusal of a young woman to marry him, set fire to and burned his house. Going to the city he purchased an ounce of laudanum, and was found unconscious on Market Street. His recovery is very doubtful.

They Will Play Quits.

Greenville (Ohio) special: The Democratic Convention of the Fourth Ohio district, failing after 600 ballots to nominate a candidate for Congress, took a recess until September 3, and changed the place of meeting to Piqua.

A Touching Scene.

Findlay (Ohio) special: Mr. and Mrs. William Todd are well-to-do people residing in the Stock addition. Death visited their little home and carried away one of their little twin babies. The mother, by being economical and saving, had laid away about fifty dollars for a rainy day. With this she intended to pay the funeral expenses. When she went to get it she was horrified to find that it was gone. Her husband afterwards acknowledged that he had taken the money and lost it gambling. It was a sad and heart-touching sight to see the mother hanging around the gambling place waiting for the proprietor.

Fish-Hook in a Boy.

For some time Florean McFeely, a 12-year-old boy of Crawfordsville, Ind., has been complaining of a pain in his side, but continued to run about as usual and play with other boys. The other day his father examined his side and found a dark, hard substance just under the skin. Making a slight incision, he was surprised to find a fish-hook firmly imbedded in the flesh. How it got there is a mystery, but it must have been working around in the boy's body for quite a while, as he has felt pains in that part of his anatomy for several months. It required the services of a surgeon to cut the fish-hook out.

Land Rights of Aliens.

The old principle that an alien cannot acquire public lands under any of the land laws was asserted by Secretary Noble in a decision rendered in the appeal case brought by Henry Booth and James P. Robson, who had located homestead and pre-emptive entries in lands within the grant of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in the Salt Lake City land district, Utah. The Secretary denied the appeal, holding that the settlement and residence of an alien upon the lands does not except the same from the grant.

A Miscreant's Work.

A dispatch from Pembroke, Can., eighty-six miles above Ottawa, on the Upper Ottawa River, says that some miscreant cut the rope holding a raft of logs to the bank, where the twenty-two raftsmen were stopping over night. The raft, with all asleep on board, drifted out into the river and into the rapids, a mile below, and before those on board were awakened they were tossed about among the rocks of the rapids. Of the twenty-two aboard, only two got ashore. No trace of the bodies of the twenty has been found.

Murder at Martinsville.

A fued existing for several years past between Ben Odonald and John Cochran, who resided near New Berry, Ind., was ended by the latter being shot dead by the former. Odonald was returning home from church when Cochran came up with him and renewed the old-time quarrel. Odonald drew his revolver and shot his assailant dead, fleeing instantly.

Another Strike Probable.

Chicago special: It is possible that another strike of carpenters will take place here. The Carpenters' Union claim that the two bosses associations have united their interests and are trying to force down the scale of wages. The "new bosses" association at a meeting adopted a resolution giving warning that the schedule of prices agreed upon last April would no longer be respected.

Editors at War.

A sensation was created at Logansport, Ind., by the filing of a suit of criminal libel by C. O. Fenton, editor of the Times, the Prohibition organ, against the editors of the Winamac Republican. The affidavit states that a certain issue of the Republican falsely charges Fenton with an asault upon a Logansport lady. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the defendants.

Cincinnati Next Time.

The Western Amateur Press Association, in session at Indianapolis, elected Dr. E. B. Swift, of Cincinnati, President, and E. A. Mueller, of Milwaukee, was chosen official editor. The time of the annual meeting was changed to the Christmas holidays, and Cincinnati was selected as the place for the next meeting.

Struck by a Train.

Emil Kroom and daughter, while crossing the Grand Rapids and Indiana road in a wagon at Kalamazoo, Mich., were struck by a train and probably fatally injured. Miss Kroom was thrown fifteen feet in the air and Mr. Kroom was carried some distance on the cow-catcher.

Pensioners Multiply.

Since the Dependent Pension Bill became a law, there have been received and acknowledged by the pension office 206,000 applications. It is estimated that there are at least 20,000 applications which have not yet been acknowledged.

Brakeman's Skull Crushed.

A Baltimore & Ohio brakeman named Ed Irwin, aged 21 years, was caught between cars at Spencer, Ohio, and fearfully crushed, his skull being mashed in. There is no hope of his recovery.

Death of Jesse H. Mitchell.

Carnegie Was Liberal.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has donated ten thousand pounds for a library at Ayro, Scotland.

White Caps Arrested.

Four prominent farmers of Adams Township, Madison County, were arrested by Detective Charles Page, of Richmond, and placed in the County Jail, and more arrests are to follow. The charge is White-Capism. Within the past year the property of certain farmers have been destroyed by a band of White Caps. About one year ago Road Supervisor James Cox attempted to enforce the Stock law, whereupon he was visited by twenty mounted men wearing paper caps, about midnight, and notified if he persisted in enforcing the law, his death would be the result. The work of this band has become bold and outrageous. Geo. Kirby was first arrested, and on his way to Anderson confessed his guilt, and gave the names of the others implicated. The names of those arrested are Geo. Kirby, Strangman Stinson, Isaac Hoppes and Heron Richardson. The latter was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for the nomination of County Recorder in April last. The arrests have created the most intense excitement. Detective Page has been working on the case six months.

Minor State Items.

—Logansport is suffering from a multiplicity of tramps.

—A number of indictments against White Caps have been found by the Orange County grand jury.

—John Fess, of Medaryville, was killed by a stroke of lightning, which broke every bone in his body.

—The old settlers and soldiers of Owen County will hold their fifteenth annual reunion near Quince, August 14.

—Goshen voted $52,000 in aid of the proposed Toledo and Chicago Air Line road. The election was held under the new ballot law.

—J. N. Watts, of Pulaski County, has a son 12 years old weighing 334 pounds, and another of 5 years who tips the beam at 130 pounds.

—Solon Young, a wealthy farmer of Charlestown, died there at the age of 75. He was worth $150,000. He was a native of Vermont.

—Seven men were injured by the explosion of a can of powder in the grocery of Hern & Carroll, Red Key. The building was wrecked.

—Excavators in an old vault at Fort Wayne found three mail-sacks, from the Grand Rapids and Indiana railway, that had been cut and rifled.

—Joseph Gable, of Columbus, crippled for life by the collapse of the J., M. & I. watertank at Jeffersonville, has compromised with the company for $7,600.

—A man giving his name as William Foster, residing at Lawrenceburg, and having a wife and children at Lansing, Mich., was struck and fatally injured by a mail train near Batesville.

—Miss Belle Doyle, who was with a party of Indianapolis people going to the Shades of Death resort, had her arm broken near Waveland by the vehicle in which the party were riding being overturned.

—John Settle, of Muncie, was sandbagged by a couple of strangers who asked him for a ride as he was returning home. He was found unconscious by the roadside. He had no money about him at the time.

—According to the late census the population of Montgomery County has increased 506 in the last ten years. The gain in Crawfordsville has been 825, and this would make the decrease outside the city 319.

—An unknown assassin fired from ambush upon Charles Hargus, a prominent farmer of Vigo Township, Knox County, as he was returning on horseback from a lodge meeting. The bullet made a flesh-wound in his arm.

—John Gaw, a veteran soldier, who enlisted at the age of 17 and lost an eye in the service, was killed near La Porte, by being crushed under a thresher engine, which he was running, as it fell through a highway bridge.

—George Grayson, a farm-hand in Clark County, was attacked by a black-snake, which wound around his leg, paralyzing him from fright. A companion killed the reptile; which measured eight feet, nine inches.

—John Bants, aged 19, whose parents live in Indianapolis, was drowned while in bathing in the Tippecanoe River near Springboro. Robert Dent, his companion, attempted to rescue him and came near perishing in the attempt.

—The directors of the Crawfordsville Y. M. C. A. have secured the services of W. C. McCay, of Appleton, Wis., as secretary. He graduated this year at the training school at Springfield, Mass., is 27 years old and is a Presbyterian.

—Abram Cahn, aged 70, was released from the Prison South recently, after serving two years for horse-stealing, and was immediately re-arrested on a similar charge.

—A peculiar case of hereditary deformity has come to notice at Columbus. There is a family residing in Brown County, three members of which have six toes on each foot. It is claimed by one of the senior members of this family that this deformity can be traced back through three generations. All the members of this family are robust and healthy.

—Isaac Bond, a prominent and wealthy farmer of Miami County, and one of its earliest settlers, died, aged 70, of blood poisoning.

—Mr. Peter Mills, on the farm of W. L. Lee, in Saluda Township, Jefferson County, raised on eighteen acres 450 bushels of wheat, an average of twenty-five bushels to the acre. This is the best yield yet reported in that county.

—Charles Wood, a J., M. & I. conductor, was precipitated from a train crossing the Ohio River by the breaking of a step. He hung on to an iron rod while the rest of the train passed over the bridge, and was later rescued by the trainmen.

—Lewis Halsema, aged 22, and Frank Riehle, aged 16, were drowned in Wildcat Creek at Lafayette, while bathing. Neither could swim. A strange coincidence about the fatalities is that they were drowned at the same hour, but two miles apart.

—There is a hill near Spencer at present under lease by John Curtis, in which aluminium forms 60 per cent. of the clay deposit. This is the only hill about the place which contains so large a percent. of the metal. He regards it as very valuable.

—A curious accident occurred on the road near Fredricksburg. A traction-engine broke an exposed gas-main, and the gas was ignited from the furnace. The engineer, Chris Wetsel, and a boy were enveloped in flames and seriously burned.

—At Decatur, in alighting from a train, while yet in motion, Frederick Miller was thrown headlong against a log, breaking a leg and fracturing his skull. He lay until morning, and when found by the section men he was yet unconscious. It seems that his aim in jumping from the train was to reach his residence with little walking. He will die.

—A terrible explosion of a threshing engine occurred on the farm of Jas. Marrow, near Princeton. Andrew Cretsinger was killed outright. Charles White has since died. Thomas Mehan, the engineer, had his leg shattered, was internally injured and scalded. He cannot recover. Hugh Marrow's head was crushed. He cannot recover. Sam Sweeppy was badly scalded. Several horses were killed. The wreck is complete.

—A west-bound freight train on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad broke in two while passing through East Warsaw, a suburb of Warsaw. The train was descending quite a steep grade and the forward end had slowed up, when the rear portion, which was running at a high rate of speed, crashed into it. About a dozen cars were reduced to splinters and piled up in a confused mass, and the merchandise with which they were loaded is almost a total loss. A couple of the trainmen were badly shaken up, but not seriously injured. The loss to the railroad company is estimated at $8,000 to $10,000.

—Gabe Ward is a helpless cripple of Indianapolis, whose support has been contributed to for years by the Township Trustee, the law permitting this where the person makes a partial support by his own labor rather than to send him to the poor-house. The pittance which he makes is earned by selling papers, for which purpose he is hauled about the streets in a small wagon. The other morning he made a request of the Trustee for help, and an employe of the office was sent around to see why his last allowance had given out so soon. Ward blandly explained that it would take more to support him from this time on because he had just married. Investigation showed that this was true, and he further explained that one reason that led him to marry was that his wife could haul him about town, and he could thus save the hire of a boy.

—A novel cure for a poisonous bite has just been discovered by an old lady residing near Rockfort. Some time ago Henderson Griffith, a colored farmer, was bitten by something, he does not know what, while plowing in a field, where he reached in the weeds for a jug of water. In a short time his hand began to swell, and continued until it had nearly doubled in size. All efforts to reduce the swelling and alleviate his sufferings proved of no avail, and for some time his life was almost despaired of. One day a neighbor proposed to cure it by cutting open a live chicken and binding it to the swollen member. This was done, and in a remarkably short time it had almost ceased to pain him and the swelling began to disappear. This remedy was repeated and he is now getting along nicely, and shouts aloud his praise of the old lady and her novel cure.

—During a storm lightning struck the barn of B. A. Kinzie, six miles east of Logansport, setting fire to it. The building and contents, consisting of wheat, corn, hay, agricultural implements and stock, were destroyed. Loss, $2,000.

—Royal Tyler, employed at Tyler's planing-mill, in Muncie, in doing some figuring, leaned his right arm on a little circular saw, on a table, and in an instant a gash over an inch deep and fifteen inches long was torn from his elbow to the hand, making a horrible wound.

—Miss Ethel Bert, the 13-year-old daughter of H. L. Bert, was thrown by a pony, at Marion, receiving injuries that are likely to prove fatal.

—For some time Florean McFeely, a 12-year-old boy at Crawfordsville, has been complaining of a pain in his side. His father examined his side and found a dark, hard substance just under the skin. Making a slight incision, he was surprised to find a fish-hook firmly imbedded in the flesh. How it got there is a mystery, but it must have been working around in the boy's body for quite a while.

MOMENCE'S HAY PALACE

A BUILDING CONSTRUCTED PRINCIPALLY OF BALED HAY.

Something About the Interstate Exposition Soon to Be Held in an Eastern Illinois Town—Some of Its Novel Features.

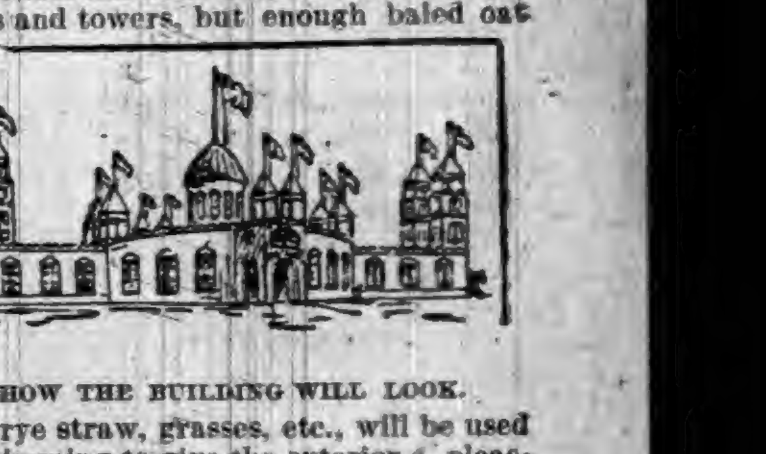
[Momence (Ill.) dispatch to Chicago Tribune.]

Preparations for the Interstate Hay Palace Exposition, which is to be held at Momence Oct. 1-11, are now well advanced, and work on the building is in progress.

The building, as its name indicates, will be constructed principally of baled hay, but, as a matter of course, lumber, iron and glass will be necessary in a building of such proportions. The palace will be 204 feet in length, with a width of 170 feet in the center. The accompanying engraving, taken from the architect's plans, gives a good idea of its appearance, but does not show the auditorium in the rear of the central or main hall. This main hall is a perfect circle 103 feet in diameter, surmounted by a central glass dome 81 feet in circumference, the top of which will be 87 feet from the ground.

A gallery, sixteen feet wide, sweeps entirely around this main hall, from the inner circle of which there is an unobstructed view to the center and to the top of the dome. Three wings lead from the main hall, the larger or rear wing being designed for an auditorium, seating 1,200 people.

The Kankakee marshes east of Momence annually produce thousands of tons of a species of wild hay that is baled and shipped principally for packing purposes. This hay, pressed in bales 16 by 22 by 36 inches, will furnish the principal visible material used in building the walls and towers, but enough baled oat and rye straw, grasses, etc., will be used in trimming to give the exterior a pleasing contrast of color and shading. Corn in various forms, sheaf wheat and oats, and other farm products will enter largely in the interior decorations. The exhibit is designed primarily to show the resources and products of Will, Iroquois, Kankakee, Vermillion, Livingston, Grundy and Ford counties in Illinois, and of Lake, Newton, Benton, Warren and Fountain counties in Indiana. These counties are being organized by townships to secure a proper representation of the products of their farms, factories, forests, mines, etc., together with the acquirements of their people in the way of music, art, athletics, and manual training.



HOW THE BUILDING WILL LOOK.

Among some of the novel features will be an immense aquarium containing, as far as possible, every species of fish native to the Kankakee, Iroquois and Wabash Rivers; collections of the geological, botanical, ornithological and zoological features of the district; a collection of Indian and prehistoric relics, owned and mostly collected within the district. The latter feature promises to be unusually interesting, as several large collections have already been secured, including the noted mound-builders' collection, belonging to H. M. Keyser of this city, embracing the relics obtained from over 600 mounds in the Upper Kankakee Valley.

The reunion of the survivors of the Seventy-sixth Regiment, Illinois Infantry, will take place Oct. 2 and 3, the second and third days of the exposition. This will be followed by a band tournament, a firemen's tournament and bicycle tournament. There will also be a contest of the church choirs of the district, for which the association offers liberal prizes; also of male quartettes, solo singers, etc.

One room in the palace will be set apart for drawings and models illustrating the methods of constructing and operating manufacturing plants of the class that seek locations in the smaller cities and towns. Lectures and such other information as can be procured will be given in this room, on methods of securing manufacturing establishments, and the experience of various cities and towns will be detailed in the hope of inciting the people of the district to stronger efforts in the way of building up and increasing their manufacturing industries.

The hay palace will be the first palace exposition east of the Mississippi River, and the fact that a small city like Momence has raised the money and carried the work of organization to a point where success seems certain speaks well for the enterprise and public spirit of her people. The project of the exposition was conceived by Charles S. McNichols, Secretary of the Association, after a visit to Creston, Iowa, where the success of the Blue Grass Palace has almost turned the heads of the Crestonites.

REED AND BLAINE

Hold Different Views on Reciprocity and Tariff Legislation.

Washington dispatch: Speaker Reed believes in the French saying: "Always and everywhere be bold." He is bold enough to throw himself across the track which a large element in his party is following toward reciprocity. Piquancy is added to his position because of the Speaker's well-known views that the days of Secretary Blaine's leadership are past. But, outside of any personal feeling, Mr. Reed thinks that reciprocity is not the Republican party doctrine and is doing his best to stop the movement which at present has its opportunity in the Senate. The Speaker has been seeking interviews with Republican Senators, particularly the members of the Finance Committee, and urging his views upon them. But he has failed to convince them, for, at a conference this afternoon of leading members of the committee it was agreed that an amendment drawn up by Senator Aldrich should be offered and made a part of the Tariff bill.

The Aldrich amendment is not just what Secretary Blaine would like, as it is in the nature of a compromise, but it recognizes a principle that seems distasteful to Speaker Reed and many of his colleagues. The principle is that in the present and in all future tariff legislation regard is to be had to foreign as well as to domestic trade. In other words, that a country whose policy is protection will undertake by reciprocity treaties to provide its producers with a market for their surplus products. The Aldrich amendment sets forth the policy of the United States in reenacting a tariff law to discriminate against countries which fail to offer reciprocal advantages in return for a free entry to the markets of the United States. It empowers the President, when in his view the advantage of a free United States market has not been reciprocated by the admission on similar conditions of the agricultural and other products of the United States, to reimpose a specified duty on sugar, rubber, hides, and coffee. These are all the articles now specified, but before the amendment is introduced in the Senate others may be included.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

Under the dominion of the passion which controlled him, the voice and language of the Senator became more elevated.

His features assumed an air of somber dignity and imposing grandeur.

A slight shade of paleness passed over the lovely face of the young woman, and a slight frown contracted her forehead.

By an effort, which in a better cause would have been sublime, she quickly mastered the rising weakness, and, coldly pointing out to her husband the draped door by which he had entered, said:

"Very well, conceal yourself there!"

"You will never forgive me?"

"You know little of women, my dear, if you do not know that jealousy is one of the crimes that they not only pardon but love."

"My God, I am not jealous!"

"Call it yourself what you will, but station yourself there!"

"And you are sincere in wishing me to do so?"

"I beg you to do so! Retire in the interval, leave the door open, and when you hear Eugene enter the hall, return."

"No!" said the Senator, after a moment's hesitation: "since I have gone so far"—and he sighed deeply—"I do not wish to leave myself the least pretext for distrust. If I leave you before he comes, I am capable of fancying——"

"That I might secretly warn him. Is it not so? Nothing more natural. Remain here, then. Only take up a book; for our conversation, under the circumstances, cannot be lively."

He sat down.

"But," he mused "what mystery can there be between you two?"

"You shall see," she said, with her sphinx-like smile.

The Senator mechanically took up a book.

As she liked terror, danger and dramatic incidents to blend with her intrigues, she should have been content; for at that moment shame, ruin and death, were at her door!

But, to tell the truth, it was too muc for her; and when she looked, in the midst of the silence which surrounded her, at the true character and scope of the perils which environed her, she thought her brain would fail and her heart break.

She was not mistaken as to the origin of the letter. This shameful work had been planned by the private secretary.

To do him justice, however, he had not suspected the force of the blow he was dealing.

Of course he did not really believe in the lady's virtue; for during the perpetual surveillance he had never relaxed, he had not failed to see the exict nature of the intercourse between Eugene and Cora.

But it must not be forgotten that he was himself in love with Mrs. Elliston, and that he dreamed of securing for himself the succession to his master's place.

He had let matters go on thus long because he had not seen how he could very well stop them without making an enemy of Cora, and that he did not wish to do; for, notwithstanding her intimacy with Cleveland, he still loved her, so far as such a creature is capable of loving; and then there was the vast wealth that would be hers at her husband's death, and of this he was perfectly willing to assume the charge.

But being in Washington, and remembering what he had seen just before leaving the house in New York, his jealousy and hatred of the rival who now had the field all to himself, got the better of him, and he determined to act. To awaken the distrust of the Senator toward Eugene, so as to cause his doors to be closed against him, and to hasten the lady's coming to Washington, was, however, all he meditated at that time.

He wrote the letter, dated it a day ahead, sent it to a confidential friend in New York to be remailed, and so it reached the Senator's hand.

But, like most villainies of the kind, this anonymous missive was a more fatal and murderous weapon than its base author imagined.

Eugene would soon arrive. How could she warn him?

In the present state of their relations it was not impossible that the very first words of Eugene might immediately divulge their secret, and once betrayed there was not only for her personal dishonor—a scandalous fall, poverty, retirement—but for her husband or her lover—perhaps for both—death!

When the door-bell rang, announcing Eugene's approach, all of these thoughts crowded into Cora's brain like a legion of phantoms.

But she rallied her courage by a desperate effort and strained all her faculties to the execution of the plan she had hastily conceived, which was her last hope. And one word, one gesture, one mistake, or one carelessness of her lover might overthrow it in a second!

A moment later the door was opened by a servant, announcing Mr. Cleveland.

Without speaking she signed to her husband to gain his hiding-place.

The Senator, who had risen at the sound of the bell, seemed still to hesitate, but shrugging his shoulders, as if in disdain of himself, retired behind the curtain which faced the door.

Eugene entered the room carelessly, and advanced toward the fireplace, where Cora was seated, his smiling lips half opened to speak, when he was struck by the peculiar expression on Cora's face, and the words were frozen on his lips.

This look, fixed upon him from his entrance, had a strange, weird intensity, which, without expressing anything, made him fear everything. But he was becoming accustomed to trying situations, and was as wary and prudent as he was intrepid. He ceased to smile, did not speak, but waited.

Raising her right hand, she made a gesture intimating that he must preserve silence.

"Either she is mad," he said to himself, "or there is some great peril!"

A searching glance into her eyes increased his alarm, and a sudden and heretofore unknown feeling of dread seized him and almost stilled the beating of his heart.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE ORDEAL PASSED.

With the rapid perception of her genius and of her love, Cora Elliston felt that Eugene understood her; and not leaving him time to speak and compromise her, instantly said:

"It is very kind of you to keep your promise."

"Not at all," he replied, slowly seating himself.

"Yes, but it is! For you know you come here to be tormented."

There was a pause.

"Have you at last become a convert to my plan—to my fixed idea?" she added, after a second.

"I am not sure of that. It seems to me you have a great many."

"Yes, of course. But I speak of the plan—my best idea, in fact. In a word—of your marriage."

"What! again, my dear friend?" said Eugene, who, now assured of his danger and its nature, marched with a firmer foot over the burning soil.

"Yes, indeed, and I promise you that until you consent you will never hear the last of it."

"Oh! have mercy, I beg."

"There's no mercy for you; and I will tell you another thing—I have found the person."

"Ah! Then I shall run away!"

She cut short his smile with an imperious glance.

"Then you still adhere to it?" he said, with a forced laugh.

"Most firmly! I need not repeat to you my reasons—having preached about it all winter—in fact so much so as to disgust my husband, who suspects some mystery between us."

"What! My uncle? Is it possible?"

"Oh, nothing serious, you must understand. Well, let us resume the subject where we left it."

"What! go over again that tiresome list of available persons?"

"Exactly. Miss Osgood will not do; she is too blonde—an odd objection for me to make, by the way; nor Miss Van Name—too thin; nor Miss Gould, in spite of her millions; nor Miss De Lancy—too much like the Umberfields and Thorndykes. All this is a little discouraging, you will admit, but finally everything clears up. I tell you I have discovered one—a perfect marvel."

"Her name?" asked Eugene.

"Flora Leland!"

There was silence. Eugene Cleveland experienced the same disagreeable sensation that had affected him the day when he saw the young lady's brother descending the broad steps of their father's mansion and saunter down the street.

"Well, you say nothing," resumed Cora, "because you can have nothing to say—because she unites everything—personal beauty, family, fortune, everything—almost like a dream. Then, too, her father and your uncle are old friends; they are connected in business matters—at the bank, you know, and in other ways. He also owns your old homestead, the place you loved so well, and which will thus come back to you. Ah, you see how I have thought of everything, my friend! But I cannot imagine why we never came to think of this before."

Eugene did not reply, and Cora began to be surprised at his silence.

"Oh!" she exclaimed: "you may look a long time—there cannot be a single objection—you are caught this time. Come, my friend, say yes. I implore you!"

And while her lips said "I pray you," in a tone of earnest entreaty, her look said with terrible emphasis, "You must!"

"Will you allow me to reflect upon it, Mrs. Ellison?" he asked, at last.

"No, my friend!"

"But really," said Eugene, who was very pale, "it seems to me you dispose of the hand of Miss Leland very readily."

"Miss Leland is very rich, and they court her on all sides; then her father is very proud. He is the president of a bank—the one from which I was discharged, and her mother has peculiar ideas about a husband for her daughter, while her brother——"

"I charge myself with all that," interrupted Cora, impatiently.

"But what a mania you have for marrying people!"

"Women who do not make love, Eugene, always have a mania for match-making."

"But seriously, you will give me a few days for reflection."

"To reflect about what? Have you not told me a thousand times you intended remarrying, and were only waiting a proper time, and the right chance? Well, now is the right time, and you can never find a better chance than this; and if you let it slip, you will repent the rest of your life."

"But give me time to consult my relations!"

"Your relations—what a joke! It seems to me you have reached full age; and then, what relations? Your mother's connection, Mrs. Morgan?"

"Doubless she is one of them. I do not wish to offend her."

"Do not worry on her account, I beg. Indeed, she will be delighted."

"Why should she be?"

"I have my reasons for thinking so;" and the lady smiled knowingly.

Eugene, to whom little by little the light fell stronger on the more obscure points of the terrible enigma proposed to him, saw the necessity of shortening a scene which had overtasked all her faculties to an almost insupportable degree.

He rose.

"I am compelled to leave you," he said, "for I have an engagement for this evening. But I will come to-morrow, if you will permit."

"Certainly. But you will take Flora?"

"Good gracious! Yes, if I can get her, for I really can see no reasonable objection."

"A thousand thanks! And you would like the Senator to broach the subject to her father?"

"I certainly would if he were here; but——"

"Don't disturb yourself, I beg. I expect him home on a brief visit, and, indeed, I know he would come if for no other reason than to oblige you."

"He is very good to me."

"He loves you well."

"I have had substantial proof of that."

"You will have further proofs. And now you will wish to meet the lady. Leave me to arrange that."

"I leave everything to you."

"Thanks again. You are a dear, good boy;" and she gave him her hand, which he pressed convulsively, and immediately departed.

It would have required a much keener vision than that of Sherwood Elliston to have detected any break or any discordance in the audacious comedy which had just been played before him by these two great artists.

The mute play of their eyes alone could have betrayed them, and these he could not see.

As to the tranquil, easy, natural dialogue, there was not in it a word which he could seize upon, and which did not remove all his disquietude and confound all his suspicions.

From this moment, and ever afterward, every shadow was effaced from his mind; for to imagine such a plot as that in which his wife in her despair had sought refuge, to enter into such a depth of perversity, was not in the Senator's straightforward and simple spirit.

When he reappeared before his wife, on leaving his concealment, he was constrained and awkward. With a gesture of confusion and humility, he took her hand and smiled upon her with all the love and tenderness he felt for her beaming from his face.

At this moment Cora, by a new reaction of her nervous system, commenced weeping and sobbing, and this completed her husband's despair.

Out of respect to this poor deluded man we shall pass over a scene the intererest of which otherwise is not sufficient to warrant the unpleasant effect it would produce on all honest people. We shall equally pass over without record the conversation which took place the next day between Cora Elliston and Eugene Cleveland.

Eugene had experienced, as we have observed, a sentiment of repulsion at seeing the name of Flora Leland appear in the midst of this foul intrigue. It amounted almost to horror, and he could not control the manifestation of it.

There were several reasons for this. In the first place, he had some acquaintance with the young lady, and liked her very much. He knew her to be a girl of lovely character and sweet disposition; high-minded and refined. But he did not love her—had never thought of loving her. Had he been at liberty to choose for himself—if, indeed, he must marry again—his choice undoubtedly would have fallen upon Meta Fielding. But tied as he was to Cora Elliston, he wanted no wife, and the idea of taking one seemed a mockery, as well as a terrible injustice to the woman selected for the position.

But there was another reason—an indefinable, a subtle reason, that he himself could not understand. All he knew was that in the presence of either of the Lelands—brother or sister—a feeling came over him that was akin to death—a sensation fearful to experience and that portended the blackest evil. Then, too, his conscience rose up against him and battled for his soul.

How could he conquer this supreme revolt of his conscience to the point of submitting to the expedient which would make his intrigue a safe one?

By what detestable sophistries he dared persuade himself that he owed everything to his accomplice—even this we shall not attempt to explain. To explain would be to extenuate, and that we wish not to do. We shall only say that he resigned himself to this marriage.

On the path which he had entered a man arrests himself as little as he can a flash of lightning.

As to Cora, one must have formed no conception of this depraved though haughty spirit, if astonished at her persistence in cold blood, and after reflection, in the perfidious plot which the imminence of her danger had suggested to her.

She saw that the suspicions of her husband might be reawakened another day in a more dangerous manner, if this marriage proved only a farce.

She passionately loved Eugene; and she loved scarcely less the dramatic mystery of their liaision.

She had also felt a frantic terror at the thought of losing the great fortune which she regarded as her own; for the disinterestedness of her early youth had long since vanished, and the idea of sinking miserably in the social world, where she had long reigned by her luxury as well as her beauty, was insupportable to her.

Love, mystery, fortune—she wished to preserve them all at any price; and the more she reflected the more the remarriage of Cleveland appeared to her the surest safeguard.

It is true, it would give her a sort of rival. But she had too high an opinion of herself to fear anything; and she preferred Flora Leland to any other, because she knew her, and regarded her as an inferior in everything.

And did she give no thought to her poor innocent victim in Roxbury? Alas, not one.

CHAPTER XX.

WARREN LELAND'S PROGRESS.

"Loosen the dog!"

This order was sufficient for Warren Leland. He was not a coward; he would not have budged an inch before an enraged tiger; but he would have traveled a hundred miles on foot to avoid the shadow of ridicule.

Profiting by the warning and a moment when he seemed unobserved he slid from the tree, jumped into the next field, and entered the woods at a point somewhat farther down than where he had scaled the hedge.

This done, he resumed his walk with the assured tread of a man who had a right to be there.

He had gone but a few steps when he heard behind him the wild barking of the dog, which proved his retreat had been an opportune one.

Some of the farmers he had noticed as he passed before were still standing at their doors.

Stopping before one of them, he asked: "My friend, to whom does that large house below there, facing the road, belong; and whence comes that sweet music?"

"You probably know that as well as I," replied the man, stolidly.

"Had I known, I should scarcely have asked you," said Leland, in a quiet tone.

The farmer—a poor one, by the way—did not deign further reply.

His wife stood near him; and Leland had remarked that in all classes of society women have more wit and good-humor than their husbands. Therefore he turned to her and said:

"You see, my good woman, I am a stranger here. To whom does that house belong? Probably to Nathan Metcalf?"

"No, no," replied the woman. "Mr. Metcalf lives much further on."

"Ah! Then who lives here?"

"Why, Amos Denton, of course."

"Ah, Amos Denton! But tell me, he does not live alone? There is a lady who sings—his wife?—his sister? And another—very beautiful. Who are they?"

"Ah, the first, no doubt, is his daughter-in-law, young Mrs. Denton. Mrs. Clara, who——"

"Yes, yes, and the other?"

"Is a young lady who is living with her. I don't really know——"

"Ah! thank you, thank you, my good woman! You have children? Buy them presents with these;" and dropping several pieces of silver in the lap of the obliging woman, Leland walked rapidly away.

Returning home, the road seemed less gloomy and far shorter than when he came.

As he strode on, humming the prelude of Bach, the moon rose, the country looked more beautiful, and, in short, when he perceived, at some distance down the ever gloomy avenue, his own house, bathed in the white light, he found the spectacle rather enjoyable than otherwise.

And when he once more ensconced himself in the maternal domicile, and breathed the odor of new damp paper and old moldy trees that constituted its atmosphere, he found great consolation in the reflection that there existed not very far from him two young women who posessed charming faces, delicious voices, and one, at least, a pretty name.

Next morning, after plunging into a cold bath, to the profound astonishment of Seth Gridley and his wife, Leland went to inspect the farm. He found the barns and other out-buildings well constructed, but not so picturesque as he could desire.

But he was amazed to hear the farmers he met arguing, in their peculiar Yankee drawl, on the various modes of culture and crops, like men who were no strangers to all modern improvements in agriculture.

The name of Metcalf frequently occurred in the conversation as confirmation of their own theories, or experiments. Nathan Metcalf gave preference to this fertilizer, to this machine for winnowing; this breed of cattle was introduced by him. Nathan Metcalf did this, Nathan Metcalf did that, and the farmers did like him, and found it to their advantage.

Leland found the Congressman had not exaggerated the local importance of this personage, and that it was most essential to conciliate him. Resolving, therefore, to call on him during the day, he meanwhile went to breakfast.

The duty toward himself fulfilled, the young man lounged on the veranda, as he had the evening before, and commenced smoking.

Though it was near mid-day, it was doubtful to him if the solitude and silence appeared less complete and oppressive than on the preceding evening. A hushed cackling of fowls, the drowsy hum of bees, and the muffled chime of a distant bell—these were all.

Leland lounged on the veranda, dreaming of his club, of the noisy crowd, of the rumbling stages and street-cars, of the playbill of the Madison Square Theater, of the drives in Central Park—and the memory of the least of these enchantments brought infinite peace to his soul.

The inhabitant of New York has one great blessing, which he does not take into account until he suffers from its loss—one great half of his existence is filled up without the least trouble to himself. The all-potent vitality which ceaselessly envelops him takes away, in a vast degree, the exertion of amusing himself.

The roar of the city, rising like a great bass around him, fills up the gap in his thoughts, and never leaves that disagreeable sensation—a void.

Now, Leland had within himself more resources than most men to conquer the blue devils; but in these early hours of his experience in country life, deprived of his club, his horses, and his French cook; banished from all his old haunts and habits, he began to feel terribly the weight of time. It therefore approached a delicious sensation for him to suddenly hear that regularly recurring beat upon the road, which to his trained ear announced the approach of several riding horses.

Next moment he saw advancing up the somber avenue and turning into his own grounds, three lovely females on horseback, one of whom was a mere girl in point of years.

Though quite amazed at this charming spectacle, Leland remembered his duty as a gentleman, and descended the steps of the veranda. But the ladies, at sight of him, appeared equally surprised as himself, suddenly drew rein, and conferred hastily together.

Then recovering, they continued their course, taking the private carriage way to a road in the rear, and disappeared in the direction of a lovely lake, a prominent feature in the neighboring landscape.

As they passed the corner of the house, Leland bowed low, and they returned his salutation by a slight inclination; but he was quite sure, in spite of the veils that floated from their riding-hats, that he recognized the lovely singers and the young pianist.

After a moment he called to Seth Gridley.

"Gridley," he said, pointing to the carriage way, "is this a public road?"

"It certainly is not a public road, Mr. Leland," replied Seth.

"Then what do those ladies mean by using it?"

"Bless me! Mr. Leland, it is so long since your grandfather's death, and since any of the family have lived here! These ladies mean no harm by passing through your grounds; and sometimes they even stop at the house while my wife gives them fresh milk. Shall I tell them that this displeases you, sir?"

"Displeases me! Why the deuce do you suppose it displeases me? I only asked information. And now, who are the ladies?"

"Oh, sir, they are very nice ladies, indeed! Mrs. Denton, her daughter Edith, and their friend Miss Mildred."

"Mrs. Denton—eh? And her husband, Mr. Denton, does he never ride out with them?"

"Great Scott! no, sir. He never rides with them." And grim Seth Gridley smiled a dry smile.

"Why not, pray?"

"Why not? He has been among the dead this ten years, as, no doubt, you very well know."

"Granting that I know it, friend Gridley, I wish it distinctly understood that these ladies are not to be interfered with. You comprehend?"

Gridley seemed pleased that he was not to be the bearer of so disagreeable a message; and Leland suddenly conceived that his stay at Roxbury would not only be prolonged indefinitely but at the same time be very agreeable.

Thinking thus, he directed his steps toward the residence of Nathan Melcalf, of which, at last, from Seth, he had obtained correct information.

He took the same road as the preceding evening, passed the quaint old dwelling that he believed held Mrs. Denton and her lovely friend, glanced his eye at the great oak that had served him for an observatory, and about half a mile farther on discovered the somewhat imposing house he sought.

He swung open the gate, sauntered up the well-kept path, and reached the broad veranda, which was shaded by climbing vines and rose bushes.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Why She Is Always Calm.

The extreme calmness and moderate habits of a certain handsome New York girl are remarked upon by her friends. She moves with the utmost deliberation, never hurrying under any circumstances, eats slowly and lightly and drinks nothing but a small quantity of cool water at her meals. If it were not for her brilliant powers of conversation and her continuous sweetness of disposition she would not be interesting, for she is never ready to go anywhere or do anything requiring any exertion, and she passes the greater part of her time with her mother.

Only recently I learned the cause of the pretty creature's lethargy, and her case is certainly a peculiarly unfortunate one. She is naturally of a white and pure complexion, but excitement or any undue exercise brings upon her face a blood-red mark of most significant formation. It is a perfect image of a small wineglass. Its slender stem runs straight down over the bridge of the nose, while upon the forehead the bell-shaped bowl spreads out with unmistakable vividness. There is not a sign of this mark while she is in absolute repose, except beneath minute examination, when a thread-like outline of the glass is faintly visible. But the moment the blood is driven to the head it converges at this single spot.

A romantic story is told in relation to this mark. The girl has had suitors, and one of them was favored by her above the others. He made his declaration one day while sitting by her side on the piazza of a summer hotel in the broad light of day. In the fashion of some timid men he did not fix the girl with his eyes as he put the tender words to her, but as she made no reply to him he stole a look at her face. She had a handkerchief pressed close to her eyes. As no one was by to see, he reached towards her and gently drew her hands away. The red wineglass burned like fire. He was amazed and the girl looked at him with a despairing gaze. He asked what it meant and she told him. But she herself did not know the whole truth. Her father, who was a fast and reckless man, had fallen dead before her mother's eyes while holding a wineglass aloft at a dinner party.

The lover was a true one. He will be married to the girl in a very few weeks.—New York Mercury.

Married in Rubbers.

A good little joke is told on a happy young Cincinnati bride who was married with her rubbers on. She was too happy to know it, or maybe to care. A winter-day wedding in a pretty little suburban church, nice decorations, sweet bridesmaids, the edifice filled with friends, the bride wearing a lovely gown, hand-painted, and all that, and she had just the loveliest pair of wedding slippers!

So "they say," for nobody saw them, for the dear bride, who is not supposed to remember anything in particular at that particular time, except to promise to love, honor, and obey, utterly forgot all about her slippers and rubbers! And the bridesmaids being about as much "wrought up" as the lovely party of the first part, didn't remember at all, and the bride marched to the platform in her rubbers to the soul-lifting strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," just as happy as a bride could be, and—well, the rubbers were new and shiny, and just as nice as they could be.

CYCLONES in the east now. The town of Lawrence, Mass. was wrecked by one last Saturday.

HONEY will be a failure in the Northwest, so say the reports. Bees work hard as ever, but the flowers have no honey.

THIRTY years of high tariff and prices of wheat, corn, etc, have been going down steadily. And the farmer is asked to vote for such a state of things!

CHICAGO is showing up over a million under the new census. Including the various additions and suburbs lately taken in, she shows 1,101,263. In 1880 it it was 503,185.

SOME of the Minneapolis census takers, it is claimed, swelled their lists with fraudulent names in order to beat St. Paul. One or two were caught at it, and skipped to Canada.

A REGIMENT of the grenadier guards, in London, rebelled against the excessive drilling they were forced to do, and as a punishment, have been ordered to Bermuda for two years.

THE employes of the C. B. & Q., road, Northern division have for some time been robbing freight cars, of various kinds of merchandise. A general overhauling has been commenced.

THE B. & O. is likely to get a new business from the great northwest. At Cicero, Ill., it is to be connected with the Northern Pacific, with which line it has made a traffic arrangement.

CENSUS takers missed an entire town down a few miles from Philadelphia, the town of Wayne, with about 1,500 people. The reckless way this census has been taken, has no parallel in the history of the country.

THIS administration is about to give the Union Pacific road a deed to over two millions of acres. Cleveland refused it, because the roads had no right to the land till they paid what they owed the government.

WABASH avenue residents in Chicago are fighting having a colored church established among them. These objectors are nearly all republicans. Now let us hear something about the outrages against negroes

GOLD discoveries at Ishpeming, Mich., continue to cause much excitement. It grows better and better, and the work of mining and working it up from the rock, will commence, as soon as they can get the machinery in place.

WE believe the tariff should be revised by its victims," is a resolution adopted by an Illinois Farmers' Alliance. That's right. The farmers have been its victims for nearly thirty years. Let them take a hand in revising it.

FREIGHT rates have been cheapened one half since 1860. We suppose republican papers will say this is one of the good results of a high tariff, which has prevented the importation of cheap paper-made railroads into this country.

THERE have been attempts made lately by members of congress to investigate Raum, the commissioner of pensions, for crookedness in his department. Republicans somehow object Why object, if Raum has done his duty?

REPUBLICANS are asking the people to elect a republican legislature so the tax levy can be made higher. That is the promise on which they hope to win. "Put us into power, and we will make your taxes higher." Will the people do it?

BLAINE is in favor of equal trade, or reciprocity with the South American states, but don't seem to care for the rest of the world. But if we have free trade with South America, what is to become of our "infant industries" that would be unprotected?

THE republican state convention will be held Sept. 10. They also give out that everything must be sacrificed for members of the legislature, so they can beat Dan Voorhees, and redistrict the state. Their candidates for state offices are displeased with this plan, of course.

SUPT. MACHAN, of Lagrange, is still the subject of discussion in the Lagrange papers. He is the school officer, who was in a conspiracy with those who were fighting a law he had sworn to obey, but which he disobeyed and defied. He should have been turned out and the place given to a law-abiding citizen.

BLAINE and McKinley are not agreeing very well. Blaine says a tariff is a tax that makes things higher in price. McKinley, taking his cue we presume from the republican editors of DeKalb county, Ind., says the tariff is not a tax, and that it makes the article affected cheaper. So these two frauds are enemies.

WINE is rather costly to put out a fire. A train loaded with wine, silks, tea and seal skins, was thrown from the track of the Sante Fe road, in the Mohave desert, and caught fire. There being no water, casks of wine were broken open and used to put out the fire, and silks used to smother it. The value of the train load was half a million.

HARRISON denies writing that letter to the farmers in which he warned them that "free trade meant hard times, a thing the people of this country had never seen." We do not know how such a letter got out, or who wrote it. We suppose the fact that Harrison had often said things just as untrue and ridiculous was what made them lay it to him.

BLAINE is not proving the big gun it was claimed he would. After quarreling a year and a half, it is found that the Behring Sea troubles stand exactly where Secretary Bayard left them when he went out of office. And when settled at last, it now looks as if we would not get as good terms as Bayard was likely to get had his term lasted thirty days more.

DONNELLY, the Minnesota man who thinks Lord Bacon wrote Shakespeare, is out with a theory that cyclones are caused by the Pacific railroad. He says that electricity formerly caused earthquakes in California, but now the railroad brings the electricity east of the mountains. Hence we get cyclones and California has no more earthquakes. Donnelly is a genius.

THE New York Star calls Porter, the superintendent of the census a "destroying angel" alluding to the fact that the census has "destroyed" by failing to get, about a quarter of the people so many towns and cities have been claiming. We see there are many towns in the state of Indiana, that have had a great many of their supposed citizens killed off in this very way.

THE surplus is likely to be entirely wiped out the coming year. The revenues from all sources will be about 450 millions. But a sum as great as this has already been appropriated, and there is likely to be a deficiency variously estimated at from thirty to fifty millions. Republican blundering and incapacity, to use no harsher terms, will have to answer for this state of things.

SILVER has advanced in price since the recent law passed, and may go higher than $1 for 271½ grains, the limit of price fixed by that law. If it does this, then by the provisions of the act, coinage of silver would have to stop. This was one of the reasons that made democrats vote against that bill. It was a bill gotten up by the gold bugs. Now, there will be another effort to get a free coinage bill passed.

THE Indianapolis Journal, the leading republican paper of the state seems to think that pension legislation is for republican advantage, and claims that Pension Agent Nick Ensley holds the same view. In an interview with him, printed in the Journal of July 25, we find this:

> At a meeting of the republican State central committee, Nicholas Ensley, of DeKalb, spoke encouragingly of the splendid feeling in the northeastern section of the state. DeKalb county, he said, was never in better shape for republican success than now. The pension legislation has aided in the good work, and if the republicans put their shoulders to the wheel Mr. Ensley was certain the state would show a handsome majority for them in November. The residents of his district favored a late convention, somewhere about Sept. 10 or 15.

How long will republican papers continue to mislead the people as to the cause of the state debt? Or do they themselves really believe what they are saying? If they do, they need a little help. They are trying to throw the blame of a state debt on the democrats. Democrats and republicans voted to make the expenses that created the debt, for they were things we needed. While we were finishing our state house, costing nearly two millions, we found we needed other expensive things. Because good men of both parties felt that we needed them, we built three expensive asylums. This took a vast sum of money. In the meantime, we have lost by fire, a large portion of several institutions, including the State Normal School building at Terre Haute, the State University at Bloomington, and the Soldiers' Home at Knightstown. All these were extraordinary expenses, over and above the ordinary running expenses of the state. But no one will deny but we had to have them. So both democrats and republicans agreed we must incur these expenses, and both parties in the legislature voted for them. The [illegible] at large, who knew of these things, were satisfied, for any man of business sense could see that such expenses must be met. No one thought of complaining till it came time to elect a new legislature, and one that would choose a United States senator. Now, all along the line, at the command of the bosses, the small republican editors are making complaint about the "democrat debt." The facts are as we have given them, and they cannot be disputed. Our debt is not a heavy one and will soon be paid, for the state is abundantly able to pay its debts. The only object is to influence votes.

But there is another phase of this debt business. To make it more plausible that democrats are to blame for it, they say we failed to levy a tax high enough. This is the kind of folks they are. They are moving heaven and earth to get tariff taxes higher, though they have been for years, higher than necessary. But suppose we admit that they are right, and that the levy for state taxes, should be higher. Now who is to blame? Not the democrats. In our assembly, the house of representatives must originate all bills for raising revenue. (See State Constitution, Sec. 113, Art. 4.) But in the legislature of 1887, the house of representatives was republican. Why did they not pass a bill to provide for these great expenses, if such a measure was as desirable as is now claimed? No democrat was likely to object. But they did not offer to do it. Will some one explain?

Thought it Pulled Hard.

It happened like this: A number of our enterprising K. P. boys went up to Corunna a week or so ago to visit the sister lodge. We can't remember all the names, but among them were Sheriff Plum, Frank Borst, Dr. Nusbaum, W. R. Smith, G. C. Ralston and H. C. Shull. There was nothing to mar the "harmony of the occasion," for all were good fellows, except the weakness of one pair of the horses. Borst, Ralston, Nusbaum and Smith had a pair of horses that went on a strike every little while, and refused to budge an inch. Then they would all get out and push the whole caravan along till the team got "willin" and went on. This happened a number of times and the men got sick of it. Finally, on the way home, they gladly sighted town. Sweet Auburn looked doubly sweet, and they fondly thought their trials were over. Not so. Once fairly within the city limits, the horses' weakness came on again. They stopped, and like grandfather's clock, refused to go again "till the old man died." But the boys couldn't wait that long, for it was getting late. So they unhitched the team and, while Coop and Smith took them home, Nusbaum and Borst assumed the contract of getting the buggy back to the barn. Both are workers, and so Borst took the tongue and pulled while Dr. Nusbaum pushed. The train started nicely, and then Doc. lightly sprang into the seat, and so the procession moved on down town. In some way, they came in sight of Plum and Shull, and a loud peal of (German) silvery laughter rang out on the night air. Borst, the pearly drops falling from his brow, looked around. There sat Doc. whip in hand playing pantomime coachman. "Gracious! I thought the blamed thing pulled hard," said Borst, and then recognizing the K. P. strawberry mark on Doc's left arm, they fell into each others arms in a shower of mutually forgiving tears.

Teachers' County Institute.

The county institute begins here on Monday, Sept. 1, and closes Friday evening of the same week. Good teachers have been secured by Mr. Merica, and we are assured of work, equal to the best ever done at previous institutes. The lecturers are of more than ordinary ability. Dr. T. J. Bassett lectures Monday evening; Prof. Chas. DeGarmo, of Normal, Ill., lectures Tuesday evening; Miss Lucie May Wiant gives an elocutionary entertainment Wednesday evening and on Thursday evening we have the famous Frank Beard, the caricaturist, of whom every body has heard. He is at present doing this line of art work for the "Judge" magazine. Friday evening is the lecture by Geo. R. Wendling, one of the very best in the field. Bassett and DeGarmo will do work all the week. We also will have president H. B. Brown of the Valparaiso Normal, a part of the time. All in all, it will be a grand institute. We hope to see every teacher present, and as many of our citizens, here and elsewhere, as can spare the time to attend. It will richly repay anyone.

HENRY J. MOSSEY,
WILLIAM KRUGER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

No burglars here during the past week.

Dr. Yeagy visited the county seat last Wednesday.

Last Wednesday Dr. Barnett, of Butler, was in town.

Mrs. Charlie Reed took a trip to Ft. Wayne last Tuesday.

A few days since A. R. Hite went to Ft. Wayne on business.

Mrs. E. P. Dickinson had a lady friend visiting her from Toledo, the first of this week.

Last week F. N. Beidler sold a very large quantity of wool to parties in Ft. Wayne.

Mrs. Ryan Clutter, now a resident of Ft. Wayne, was up here last week visiting the old neighbors.

Mrs. Ryan came last week Thursday, on the Angola train, for a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Weaver.

The social of the M. E. church last Tuesday was well attended, the supper was inviting, and well served.

Mrs J. A. Barns, of Auburn, was the guest of Mrs. Dr. Winslow at the Locke Hotel on Tuesday of this week.

Will Getts goes right on at work just as if he had not failed to "get there" at the convention. Will is a worker.

Mrs. Charles Bassett Jr. who has been in Ft. Wayne for some days visiting friends, returned home last week.

Mrs Wm. Fisher and son Wallie, who have been visiting in Findlay, Ohio, returned last Friday to their home.

Mrs. H. Bartholomew, has a sister visiting her, who now expects to return to her home in Bradford, Pa., shortly.

Ralph, son of Prentis and Mary Gill, aged about two years died quite suddenly on Tuesday morning, of asthma.

Curt Klotz, is agent for the excellent road carts made by Kain & Rinehart at Auburn, as well as for other makes.

Last Sunday evening Rev. L. A. Rhetts united in marriage Mr Tom Baxter and Miss Ella Jackman, in the vicinity of Waterloo.

Speer & Co. are keeping the famous Pillsbury flour, of Minneapolis. It costs extra, but will make more than the difference in bread.

Dr. Yeagy occupies the barn vacated by Robinson Bro's. as a feed and infirmary barn. His office is in the front of barn, on Wayne street.

Monday J. B. Taylor's family moved to Kendallville where they expect to make their home for the present, for the convenience of Mr. Taylor's business.

Bird Dickinson is able to be out again after his long sickness. He had typhoid, and when he was able to get out, took cold and had a relapse. Hence his long confinement.

Quite a number of persons are quite sick, among them Miss Shoner and Miss Niswandar. Mrs. McClure still continues in a precarious condition with little hopes for recovery.

Mrs. Wm. Preston Smith and daughter Lillian, of Chicago, are visiting Mrs. Winslow. They came to Waterloo last week from Evenston, Ill., where they have been spending some weeks.

W. H. Leas is building up his law practice in good shape. He don't have to have an office in order to make a living. He is not afraid of hard work that will win bread and golden opinions.

Tuesday evening of this week the Epworth league gave a free entertainment, consisting of recitations, music and an address from Dr. Broughten. This is the first of a series of similar entertainments by the league.

The United Brethren society are about to build a new church on the farm of trustee Blake of Smithfield. They have a live board of trustees, and a good subscription under headway. Rev. J. H. Grouse secured over one hundred dollars in Waterloo and vicinity for their benefit during the past week.

At about 9 o'clock last Saturday night two horses hitched to a buggy ran away just south of the railroad on Wayne street and ran into a buggy that was standing just south of DeKalb Bank, badly demolishing it. Not much damage was done to the runaway rig. Both rigs belong in Auburn we are told.

F. W. Willis has had a man employed in writing up the business firms. We, the inhabitants, think Waterloo is a desirable place in which to live on many accounts. If there is no splurge, or much of a boom, there is a steady healthy growth, some building constantly, the streets and walks being greatly improved.

Some of the gardens in town are suffering for want of water, noticeably in the northern part. All however, are hoping for rain to lay the dust, cool the atmosphere, and fill the cisterns, that have been cleaned in anticipation of showers. For many days clouds would gather, with every appearance of dropping upon us, the needed rain, but soon the sun would come out bright and hot as ever and so remain.

Quite a number of persons were compelled to work on the railroad track last Sunday, and a number of men we learn were discharged who refused to work on the Sabbath day. It would seem that there is great need of reform when railroad "bosses" can not only violate with impunity the laws of our land, but compel others to do so also, under a threat of losing their position. What would be said of the burglar or horse thief who could, not only openly ply their vocation, but compel others to do the same thing and a threat of taking away their livlihood? Laboring men who work hard all week these hot day have great need of the one day's rest, not taking into consideration the moral phase of the matter.

BUTLER.

A soldiers reunion is advertised for Butler August 21 and 22

Mrs. J. P. Jadwin, of Orland, is visiting friends in Butler, and vicinity.

A few of our old soldiers are talking of going to Boston to attend the grand encampment at that place in August.

Isaac Bollinger, who recently returned from Kansas is erecting a new house in the southwest part of Butler.

Henry Showalter has given Canada the cold shoulder and crossed the briny deep to the shores of France in order to get a fine horse or two direct from the parent source of these animals.

The Brotherhood of Odd Fellows of, Butler, have secured a rate of $4.20 to Chicago and return over the Wabash, August 7 to 10, to attend the grand gathering of that fraternity at that time.

Last Sunday was a red letter day for the U. B. friends of this place and vicinity. Both liberals and radicals united in one grand communion service, Rev. Lilly officiating and much interest was manifested in the gathering. A few such meetings on the different charges would wipe out this schism that threatens the very existance of this useful and aggressive foe to evil in high as well as low places.

The writer visited Warsaw with the Pleasant Lake excursion last week. The excursion was but slimly patronized, but the deficiency was amply made up by trains of dozens of coaches from other places that filled the spacious grounds and auditorium to completion. The speakers of the day were Hon. Will Cumback, of Indianapolis, and old Bill Gibson, of Tiffin, Ohio. It being G. A. R. day the latter held the vast audience for nearly two hours. The display of fireworks in the evening on the lake was brilliant and very attractive. The grounds are beautifully laid out and will soon be as attractive as any point in northern Indiana.

CONCORD.

Murt Johnson steps high, it is a girl.

Mrs. Gifford was at Spencerville last Sunday.

There will be quarterly meeting here, August 3rd.

Daniel Herrick's little baby is very bad with cholera infantum.

Ella Williams and son, of Garrett, visited friends here last week.

Mrs. Joseph Link, of Auburn Junction, is here visiting relatives.

The dunkards had a large attendance to their grove meeting last Sunday.

James Wyatt lost his pocketbook on the evening of the social. It contained $35,

The building committee went last Monday to purchase the brick for the new church.

Something is going to occur! Charlie Kosh was to the picnic and did not bring a girl from No. 4.

The picnic was a success socially and financially. The day being fine a large crowd of people were in attendance.

Fairview church looms up quite nicely. It is built on elevated ground, and the contractors are rapidly pushing its completion.

Last Monday they commenced work on the new church. The farmers are getting on with their farm work so they can now give the church work their attention.

SUMMIT.

Wheat 87, Eggs 13, Butter 7.

Wm. Mortorff is happy, it is a girl.

H. D Snowberger went to Hillsdale, Michigan.

One of S. Mortorff's boys has the scarlet fever.

Mrs. Henry Lawson's sister, of Auburn, visited her last Friday.

H. D. Snowberger and wife went to Turkey Creek last Sunday.

Miss Della Hornberger visited Miss Cara Grambling last Sunday.

Grandma Dole, of Hudson, called on friends in this place last Saturday.

Mrs. Martin, of Turkey Creek, is visiting friends in this vicinity at present.

Sol. Greer's children, who had the scarlet fever are getting a long nicely.

John Hornberger and wife were the guest of Frank Hilt and wife Sunday.

Milton Barker and wife were the guest of F. N. Rose and wife on Sunday last.

Miss Margaret and Freddie Mortorff visited the family of A. Forney last Sunday.

A. Sweigart and C. Oberlin and their families were guests of William Mortorff and family last Sunday.

AUBURN JUNCTION.

Sunday school is still moving on slowly here.

Auburn Junction against the world for opposition.

Newton Mathews is back on the railroad again at his old place.

Any one wanting fine furniture and household goods, call on or drop a card to J. E. Gouser.

We understand our young friend David Greenwald, will leave for Ft. Wayne soon where he will attend school.

Anyone wanting a good building for store use, call on F. Huelsenbeck, as his saloon-keeper has left this place.

This place consists of 150 inhabitants of which two-thirds of the people are engaged in patent medicine and liver pills.

The frogs will not keep the people awake by their sweet music from 7 til 12 much longer, as the swamp will soon be cleaned out.

The Eagle Iron Works, of this place, are doing an immense business this summer. Any one wanting good work call on them.

G. H. Oberholtzer, of this place is a very business-like man. He wants to see everything rushing. Any one wanting first class meals give him a call.

Notice to Contractors.

The undersigned will receive sealed bids for the erection of a brick school house for District No. 5, the Center in Smithfield township, up to 2 o'clock p. m. of Monday, August 4, 1890.

Plans and specifications can be seen at my office. I reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

It can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it, effecting a speedy and permanent cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been cured who have taken the Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and today believe they quit drinking of their own free will. No harmful effect results from its administration. Cures guaranteed. Send for circular and full particulars. Address in confidence, GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race street, Cincinnati, O

Constipation,

IF not remedied in season, is liable to become habitual and chronic. Drastic purgatives, by weakening the bowels, confirm, rather than cure, the evil. Ayer's Pills, being mild, effective, and strengthening in their action, are generally recommended by the faculty as the best of aperients.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills. I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"I have been taking Ayer's Pills and using them in my family since 1857, and cheerfully recommend them to all in need of a safe but effectual cathartic."—John M. Boggs, Louisville, Ky.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in excellent health."—S. L. Loughbridge, Bryan, Texas.

"Having used Ayer's Pills, with good results, I fully indorse them for the purposes for which they are recommended."—T. Conners, M. D., Centre Bridge, Pa.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician will be in Auburn at the Hollister House, the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his service in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. tf

Some boys last week threw a hard base ball into the buggy of a gentleman residing in the country. The top was down in such a way, that the hard ball went clear through it. Boys know of course, that a game of ball can be played without such a result as this, for they were no doubt to blame for the accident. They should be warned to stop this, and failing to stop, should be properly punished.

It is no news to people here, but may be to our readers at a distance, to know that for once, DeKalb county suffers from dry weather. Potatoes will be a failure, and corn too, unless we have rain in a few days. It has been about six weeks since Auburn had rain enough to lay the dust. At Waterloo, and north of there, and a few miles south, they had one shower since we had. North of Kendallville they have had fair rains, and crops are in fair condition.

The editor of the Press has been informed by postmaster McBride that it is triple boxes that cost fifty cents at the postoffice, and not double ones, as the editor had supposed. So now, there is peace and contentment in the Press office, and the editor will not only refrain from moving to Lagrange where postoffice boxes are cheaper, but even favors having Waterloo still "remain at the front," at least as far as cheapness in box rent is concerned. It was a master stroke of diplomacy on McBride's part, to make that little turn from double to triple.

See our call for the joint representative convention for the three counties of DeKalb, Noble and Elkhart.

The young ladies who had the lawn social last Friday evening were very successful. They cleared about $25.

Among the Waterloo people, who were over here last week, were I. J. McFadden, A. C. Gruhlke and wife, and Henry Willis.

While there is a slack in work Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sheets will go to Butler the latter part of this week to visit friends and relatives for a time.

Miss C. E. Strickland of Washington, D. C., is expected here soon, we understand. She will visit with Mr. and Mrs. Swineford and other friends.

Hicksville Independent: Milo Husselman, Elmer Bechtel and Ed. Robbins, of Auburn, spent Sunday in Hicksville. They came over on their bicycles.

The Press can't help being jealous. It says the new paper, The Campfire Companion, lacks original matter." But it has at least double the amount of original matter the Press has.

The Daughters of Rebekah will give a social Friday evening August 1, in the building formerly occupied by Mr. Bowman. Supper from 5 to 7 p. m. mite 15 cents. All are invited to be present.

Two of Columbia City's bright young ladies came over last week to visit young friends here. Miss Flora Jones, and Miss Zadie Wallace. They are the guests of the editor's daughter Nellie. Miss Wallace went to Angola Monday, where she has relatives.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

Samuel Williams who will succeed G. M. Crane as recorder of DeKalb county was here last Saturday. He is not in very good health at present. In fact, he finds that three years active service at the front, and a long confinment in Libby prison, don't make a man's health much better.

We understand that S. R. Heberling has taken the agency for the Western Reversible Road Grader, which is perhaps the best and most common sense machine ever offered for sale in this part of the country. All who contemplate buying a road grader, should give this machine a trial before buying elsewhere. 31-33

James Hazzard, well known here as the brother of the noted George Hazzard, was in town Monday evening on his way to Butler where he expects to get a job on the railroad. He was at one time, the cashier of the First National Bank. For many years we believe he has been a fireman on the road. His present home is Huntington.

We last week received a late copy of the Anaconda, Mt. Standard. We did not see anything in it about our friends, Lee Goetschius and wife, but in the Phillipsburg items, we noticed that "Judge Shull has resigned as justice of the peace." That is all well enough for Josiah to resign. He's a republican. If he had been a democrat he would never resign an office.

Kendallville is evidently making a political machine out of their fair. They advertise that Gen. Alger, who is well known to be working every card for the presidency, will be there. On the same day, also Clem. Studebaker, of South Bend, another high mogul of high protection, is to be there. All this may draw a crowd and bring in money, but to us, it seems a little foreign to the objects of a legitimate fair.

C. F. Roberts, writes from Antwerp, Ohio, that their gas well has proved to be an oil well, that is now flowing a barrel an hour. Experts have examined it and say that when it has been properly cleaned out, it will probably produce about 100 barrels a day. A stock company has been organized with a capital of $30,000 in order to put down more wells. Speculation on the strength of the prospect for oil has already commenced.

Findlay, Ohio, May 6th, 1890.

J. M. Loose Red Clover Co.,

I had a very troublesome and painful sore on my face of about one year's standing, and which several physicians pronounced a cancer. I had tried a good many different kinds of salves, plasters and blood purifiers, but none of them seemed to help me very much. I found one of your circulars recommending your Extract of Red Clover, so went to the drug store and bought a bottle and small box of the Solid Extract. I took the medicine according to directions and used the Solid Extract as a salve, putting it on fresh twice a day. About the third day it began to heal, so I continued the use of it for about three weeks, both internally and by outward application and am very happy to state that it has entirely cured me. I cheerfully recommend Loose's Extract of Red Clover as the greatest and best blood purifier on the market, I have tried them all. Your medicine is a God send to suffering humanity. Yours joyfully,

J. H. Kirbler.

Will Williams of Ft. Wayne spent Sunday with friends here.

Mrs. Frank Myers and children are visiting relatives in Kendallville this week.

Why will you suffer from indigestion and dyspepsia? Simmons Liver Regulator is pleasant and cures.

A baby boy gladdened the home of Eugene Trout on Tuesday morning of this week. Mother and child are doing well.

The ladies of the Lutheran church will give an ice cream social next Saturday evening Aug., 2, on public square. All are cordially invited.

L. J. Miller has been kept on the jump lately to handle all the wheat that has come in. He seems to be in the lead in this business by several lengths.

Mrs. Post came home Saturday from her two-weeks' visit with friends at Hanover, Mich. She was accompanied on her return by Mrs. Freeman, who is a relative.

A. J. Shutt was in town last week settling up all matters of his township. He has served his people faithfully as trustee for about four years and four months.

Dr. Nusbaum will take a vacation from the duties of his practice as a physician for three or four weeks now, after which he will again be at his post to wait on his patients as usual.

Study carefully the new election law. We publish the substance of it to-day, and will do this now and then to make sure that all understand it. About a year ago we gave it in full.

M. K. Heur, of the Ft. Wayne Journal, was in town last week, in the interests of that paper. He succeeded in getting about forty subscribers. It will be delivered every morning by Orr. H. Lewis.

Edith Treutman, Myrtle Dills, Flora Bachtel, Zadie Wallace and Flora Jones of Columbia City, and Nellie Barns picnicked in the woods north of town Saturday. They report an enjoyable time.

George Crowl has moved to Auburn, and will make this place his home. He has been a resident of the north part of the county for many years, is a steady, desirable citizen, and we welcome him to Auburn.

Francis Picker is likely to get a pension under the recent law, on account of the son who was in the service. We hope he may as it will come good to relieve the needs of a worthy couple in their old age.

C. C. Shaffer is building a brick store room on the north end of his lot next to the marble shop. Even his big addition of last year, it appears was not big enough. There are few establishments the size of Mr. Shaffer's.

Read Geo. E. King's address to the K. P. lodge, It is full of meat, and will apply to other bodies, as well as to the lodge he addressed. Mr. King is a young man of ability and we judge by this article, he is a valuable member.

Send a postal card to W. L. Meese, Auburn, and have him bring a Favorite Washer to show you what nice work it does, and how much hard work it saves the women folks. He has just received a new supply of these favorites. He has wringers also. Buy a washer that has been used about here for years and has proved satisfactory.

Chiesman, the republican central committeeman had an itching for office, and wanted to be joint representative. But his party did not see it in that light. The Arford bribery case is a little too fresh. But as I. M. Diehl, another of those interested in the case is running for surveyor, we don't see why they object to Chiesman.

Miss Alice Palmer who is well known to the W. C. T. U. ladies of the town, will conduct a school at Island Park, from July 31, until August 6. The object of this school is to give instruction in the various departments of W. C. T. U. work. All who are interested in this work are urged to attend and will, no doubt, be greatly benefited. 30 31

Miller & Forsythe, in Jackson township are making a specialty of tile at their brick yard. They have some fine pieces on exhibition at Davis' hardware store, one especially, a 10-inch tile, twelve inches long, that weighs 29½ lbs., and is as solid as a rock. As far as we are able to judge it has no superior. Farmers should see their make before buying.

We had the pleasure to meet yesterday Judge James McCabe of Warren county, who who is a candidate for attorney general on the democratic ticket. Mr. McCabe is not wholly unknown here, and the fact that he is the author of the election law on bribery, under which we prosecuted the Arford case, ought to render him popular with our people. It is the only law that we have that will reach these corrupt practices, and the people should feel grateful to him for this great service.

Dr. Nusbaum returned Monday from a flying trip to Washington. While there he called on Congressman McClellan, of course, and found him up to his eyes in work, and always at his post. He says that leading members of both Houses speak in highly complimentary terms of our member, and agree that no more useful or faithful man is found in congress. He has done more for his district, they say, than has any other democratic member, for in almost every instance he has succeeded in getting his work completed. It is a fact that some work that J. B. White failed to get, Judge McClellan has succeeded in getting passed. Holman, Voorhees, Turpie, and leading members from New York, like Roswell P. Flower, all agree that the Judge has the tact and the good fortune to fetch what he goes after, nearly always. And from all over the country he has been complimented on his powerful and unanswerable speech on the tariff. Calls for copies come in from all directions

Mrs. Frank Hogue is visiting friends in Indianapolis.

Dr. Harry Chamberlain of Waterloo, was in town yesterday.

Mrs. Emily Dills and Mrs. A. J. Little went to Lakeside yesterday.

Best cabinet photos in the county for $1.50 per dozen at Davison's, Waterloo. 22 33

The Arion Quartet were at Angola this week, and go to Hicksville next Monday. They sing for public meetings.

A letter from F. P. Blair at Laporte, states that the berry crop for which that region is noted, is not as abundant as usual.

There will be another meeting of the W. C. T. U. on the public square, at 4 p. m., August 10. Good speakers. All invited.

Mrs. Dr. Johnston and Mrs. Tena Zent went to Ft. Wayne Tuesday. Mrs. Zent will remain for a few days and visit friends.

A young German not far from here had his best girl come over from Germany this week. He bought a license and a cradle on the same day, and they are now married and happy.

Joseph Leeson with his wife, daughter, daughter-in law and son were up yesterday to see how the COURIER's are made. We are always glad to meet our old friends and show them around.

The Camp Fire Companion and the COURIER have a clubbing arrangement. The Companion is a monthly at 75 cents a year, and at club rates both papers for $1.85. Samples of each can be seen here.

If the Dispatch will read our article on the first page it will see how Judge McClellan voted on the silver bill. But we shall not try to explain how he found out what letters were sent here to the Judge.

We had heard that Charles McClellan jr., had been married, but had no authority to confirm the report. Dr. Nusbaum brings word that such is the case. He has secured a most worthy young lady, a member of one of the most respectable families of the District. We are glad to record this piece of news, and send our best wishes.

We were especially pleased last Friday, to greet again, Mrs. C. C. Hoffman and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. H. A. Hoffman. Both ladies honored us with a brief call. The former is still residing on the old home farm just north of town, and our readers in different states will, be glad to hear that she enjoys good health. The latter has been staying a part of the summer at her old home, Monticello in White county, and will now remain awhile with Mrs. Hoffman here. Her husband Prof. Horace Hoffman is still at Athens, Greece, studying the language and will remain some months. He finds his stay there, one of absorbing interest, and has visited many noted points. Old Troy made famous by Homer, is one of the points he has seen, having made a special trip to the site of what Dr. Schliemann has shown to be the real locality of that noted city. We hope soon to be able to give our readers a letter from him, detailing some of his interesting experiences.

If there is anything more remarkable about the Waterloo Press, than the ignorance of its editor, it is his consuming egotism—his colossal self-esteem. Last week, not being able to reply to a single question we asked, he says, "All that deserves answer is found in our issue of April 24. At that time the COURIER was satisfied." Big injun me! We have taken pains to hunt up that wonderful article, of which he feels so proud. It is a daisy. For utter nonsense it eclipses all his other efforts. He says a piece of plate glass that a few years ago cost $70 can now be bought for $35, and goes on to say that a high tariff brought down the price that much. He don't tell how. Such a plate glass as he mentions we suppose would measure about fifty square feet, and as the duty is about 60 cents a square foot, the duty would be $30 if it came from a foreign country. Some glass of this kind is imported each year. Now, how could paying $30 extra on each piece of plate glass imported, reduce the price from $70 to $35? That is what the Press says it does, and that is just what we want explained. But the Press gives the wrong reason. The reason almost all articles are cheaper, is that the methods of making them have improved. The tariff makes them higher, but improved methods make them cheaper. There was a time, when the Press office could not print the premium lists of the Waterloo fair at the price offered. Now it can do it. Will the Press contend that the tariff enabled it to print the books cheaper last year, than it could have done five years before? We think not, for there is no tariff on them. The Press has improved machinery, and that which was once impossible is now easy. Now how silly it would appear to everyone if the Press should say the tariff did it. But that is just what all its other assertions amount to. We find its article of April 24, full of such nonsense, and as we have time and space will notice it again. It is good low tariff pasture.

Now is the Time.

Now is the time when you need a medicine for that bad cough, remember to delay is dangerous, as most fatal cases of consumption have originated out of only a slight cough like yours. Auburn Stove Works.

This establishment at the Junction is better known perhaps, by its name, Eagle Iron Works. But we noted at a recent visit, more especially its work in stoves. We presume few of our people really know, that first-class stoves are made at this place. Yet such is the fact, for we found the people of the establishment working on some stoves of really beautiful pattern. They have been making both cooking and heating stoves, and for all we can see they are the equals of those brought here from a distance. They are sending out a good many, and we have no doubt our own people, when they see what they are making, will also take the home stove by preference. They also make a speciality of iron culverts like the one they put in on the Avenue here. They have within a week or two put in one of these in Steuben county and another in Noble county.

Island Park Assembly.

The 12th annual meeting at Island Park, Rome City will open July 30 and close August 13. There will be also, a camp meeting beginning July 23, and lasting a week to July 30, closing at the time the regular Assembly begins. For the Assembly a full program is made out providing for lectures by some of the best talent in the country. There will of course be classes of instruction in various sciences and all the work that has usually been done at the assembly. Special rates on the railroads. Willis, at the book store near the postoffice in Auburn, has a supply of catalogues for all who wish to get them. Call on him.

LIEUT. PERAL, the inventor of the submarine vessel which has created such a sensation in Spain, was accorded an almost royal reception on the occasion of his arrival at Madrid. Upward of 25,000 people, with bands of music and banners, met him and cheered themselves hoarse in his honor.

A CURIOUS fashion has come into vogue in Paris. In all the cemeteries metal boxes with a slit in the lid are placed on the tomb-stones to receive the cards of visitors. The relatives of the deceased are thus enabled to see who among the living still cherish the memory of their departed friends.

THE Roumanians have completed the erection of a statue at Jassy in honor of a journalist named Asaki, who was the first to bring out a newspaper in Moldavia, and who also founded the first theater and the first music school in Jassy. He was a civil engineer, an architect, a painter, a mathematician and a dramatic author.

COLLIS P. HUNTINGTON, who is many times a millionaire, is said to have made the statement that if he were a young man with $100,000 he would go to Africa and make millions in the rubber trade. A man with $100,000 can make money in a thousand ways. If Mr. Huntington can inform the young man without a penny how to make a fortune it will be worth while speaking out.

A CITIZEN of Selma, Cal., who had two lazy boys on his hands induced them to plant a vineyard and cultivate it with their own labor for three years, with the promise that he would pay them a bonus of $1 for every pound of raisins that would be raised in that length of time. The boys went to work with a zeal that nearly took the old gentleman's breath away, and from present indications this year's crop will cost him $2,000.

A METHODIST church at Lowell, Mass., has decided to use water instead of wine in the communion service. One of the members, who has been a drunkard, according to his own statement, and had twice returned to his old habits through the temptation placed in his way at the communion service, was the cause of the change. The minister said he could never pass the wine to him again, and the church unanimously consented to use water instead.

THE courts in England are stern and unsentimental. One of the fashionable guests at Stanley's wedding who stole several valuable silver spoons from the room in which the wedding presents were exhibited was arrested and sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment. She was a widow with great wealth and a prominent light in the highest circles of London society. In the United States her theft would have been called by the fashionable name of kleptomania and she would have been handed from the court room to her carriage with a humble apology.

KATE FIELD has robed the character of the immortal Washington in still brighter hues by her discovery of an interesting agreement made by the father of his country with the gardener Philip Bater, who was sadly given to the bowl. She says: "Washington doubtless valued Bater and wanted to keep him sober. With this aim in view, the agreement allowed Bater a 'dram in the morning and a drink of grog at dinner and at noon.' Then Washington promised to give Bater '$4 at Christmas with which to be drunk four days and four nights;' $2 at Easter to effect the same purpose,' and '$2 at Whitsuntide to be drunk two days.'"

FEMININE toilets in England have this year reached a hitherto unheard of luxury of costliness. Natural flowers have been entirely discarded for imitation blossoms made of jewels. At a recent state ball Lady Brooke had a Nile satin dress veiled with transparent white silk muslin, all sewn over with shattered diamonds, and having on the shoulders epaulets consisting of two big fish made entirely of large diamonds, with sprays of smaller brilliants gushing from their mouths down over her arms. The Duchess of Leinster had serpents of diamonds coiled all over her bodice and others erect rampant on her shoulders, and chains upon chains of these precious stones were about her throat and arms. Nothing like it has ever been seen among English women before.

AN agricultral colony for idiots has been established near Kharkov, Russia, on a piece of land of about one hundred acres, which the Citizens' Council of that Government has bought for the purpose from the Countess Shoovalova. Two large pavilions have been built for the accommodation of forty-five men and thirty-five women. Seventy-two patients have already been received there. The land is laid out in gardens, orchards and fields for sowing grain, and the patients will be trained to cultivate them. The outside appearance of the place is that of a wealthy farm, and the pavilions are fitted out with all that is required for the care and comfort of the patients. Besides agricultural work they will be trained to take care of cattle and fowls and to light manual work, such as spinning and weaving of baskets in the winter time. A staff of three physicians and men and women superintendents have been engaged to take care of the institution.

A MAN in a Brooklyn boarding house who had missed a gold watch from his room, and suspected some one of the boarders of stealing it, took a way of his own to discover the thief. He got a wooden box, painted it green, and, placing it in a dark room, asked the boarders to go in one by one and touch it. The man who had stolen his watch, he warned them, would drop dead as soon as his finger touched the box. Everybody went in, and all came out alive, triumphantly holding up a finger smirched with green paint, save a backroom boarder, whose stainless finger showed that he had not touched the box, and was accepted as damaging evidence of his guilt. His arrest was the next thing in order, but the evidence did not go down with the police magistrate. He unfeelingly ridiculed the trick and discharged the prisoner. The boarder has got a green box, with a collection of finger marks on it, but he is still short of a watch.

IT it said that the Italians have a method of preserving citrus fruits in sand. An excavation of from four to seven feet is made, and a board floor is put in it. Upon this floor about three inches of clear dry sand is placed. The orange or lemon is carefully cut from the tree and wrapped in tissue paper. The fruit is then laid upon the sand in such a manner that the wraps do not touch each other. Three inches more of the sand is then spread on the oranges and another layer is then put down in the same manner as the first, and so on until there are three tiers of either. If more than three tiers are laid down the underneath oranges are crushed. Sand to the depth of seven or eight inches is then spread over the whole. Oranges are often kept for months by these and kindred methods. All authorities are agreed that oranges and lemons, which are intended to be preserved should be cut, not torn from the tree. A simular method has been adopted by a grower of oranges in South Africa, and the fruit comes out of the "silo," as he calls it, in famous condition, at a time when oranges are scarce and yield good prices. Sweet potatoes may be preserved in the same manner.

The Birth of a Word.

Richard Daly, proprietor of the Smoke Alley Theater, Dublin, in the year 1791, had an extraordinary propensity for making wagers. Hearing an actor described in French as un fagotin, a term for which it was argued there was no English equivalent, a discussion arose, in the course of which he offered to bet twenty guineas that within forty-eight hours a perfectly new word should be in the mouths of nearly all the people in Dublin, and within a week begin to be commonly used, with a new and definite meaning attached to it.

The bet was accepted by Alderman Moncrieffe, in combination with three others who were present, and the stakes were duly deposited. After the performances of his theater were over, Daily wrote a word on each of a dozen or two cards, and giving one to each of the call-boys, scene-shifters, carpenters and supernumeraries, with a lump of chalk, directed them to perambulate the city until day-break, chalking the word upon as many doors and shutters as they could. The next day was Sunday, and upon the doors of shops, warehouses and private dwellings, this one word appeared, in every direction, creating no little wonder and alarm.

Some believed it to be the watchword of a secret society, and the signal for some unlawful slaughter-house doings; some believed on first seeing it that it was a nickname for themselves; all over Dublin it was talked about, discussed and wondered at. After a few days the general conclusion was that it meant nothing more than a joke, a mere trick to set people talking, only the hoax of someone who wanted to humbug and laugh at the entire population of the city.

But the word was never forgotten, and it is now in common use, with a well-defined meaning attached to it, in India, Australia, America, Canada, in short, wherever the English language is spoken. The word was the now expressive, but at first meaningless, one —Quiz.—New Castle (Eng.) Chronicle.

A Musician's Complaint.

"Happy the man who doesn't know one note from another," said an accomplished New York composer to the reporter a short time since. He explained that as life was short and a man could hear only a very limited amount of good music, he could more easily afford to forego that than suffer the refinement of torture that a creature possessing super-sensitive musical nerves must endure in our large cities.

"What to the ting-tang of the cracked fiddle, and the toot-too, pum-pum of the peripatetic brass band at the corner, must be added the grind of the ubiquitous hand-organ, the law of compensation is sadly at fault." The speaker continued. "For every tuneful, pleasurable sound, you suffer the agony of a thousand discords. If I were not so unfortunate as to have an acutely sensitive musical ear, don't you suppose I'd be a happier man? What difference would it make to me whether Madam Caterwalui sang on the key or not? I could regard her complacently without being possessed of an insane desire to murder the poor woman. Is it any wonder that musicians are nervous? It is, to my mind a greater wonder that we are not a community of lunatics!"

"I know a most estimable woman," he went on, "a person of cultivated tastes and much refinement of character, who says: 'Give me a hand-organ, and I am happy; I don't care if it's old and wheezy and asthmatic; let it be played with any number of jerks, and it is still to me an inspiration; it quickens my pulses, and actually gives me an appetite.' I envy that woman. She can be happy where I would endure the most cruel torture."

PLUNDERS THE PEOPLE.

A HIGH PROTECTIVE TARIFF CRUSHES THE TOILER.

Colonel Snow Shows Who Pays the Tariff Tax and Who Profits Thereby—An Iniquitous System Maintained by the Republican Tools of Monopoly.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

Colonel H. W. Snow, of Sheldon, Ill., addressing the Democrats of Ford County at their convention, not long ago, thus exposed the iniquitous nature of the tariff system and the contemptible attitude of the Republican party in maintaining such a policy:

Less than two years ago a Democratic administration, though sustained in the Presidential election by a popular vote of almost 100,000 majority, turned over the Government of the country to the Republicans with a Treasury overflowing with millions of money. These millions, wrung from the toiling masses by unequal, unjust and oppressive tariff laws, the Democratic administration had labored in vain to have reduced by lowering taxation and not by extravagant expenditures. The Democrats had urgently recommended that these war tariff laws should be amended, the taxes largely reduced and the money left in the hands of the people, to whom it of right belonged. They did not want it piled up in the national Treasury, to be squandered in wasteful appropriations, wild schemes, and measures of at least doubtful utility. They had again and again called attention to these things, but in vain, because while the administration was Democratic one branch of the law-making power, the Senate, was in the hands of the Republicans and refused to allow any reductions to be made. Why? Was it because the money was needed? No. The national debt had been largely reduced, and all outstanding bonds that were due had been paid. The interest had also been paid as it matured, and many of the bonds not necessarily due had been called in and redeemed, and still the Treasury was overflowing. Was it because the people were so prosperous that they could afford to indulge in the luxury of taxing themselves to please their lawmakers? No. The people were not prosperous. It is true that vast fortunes were amassed by a few manufacturers, importers and railroad magnates, who had fattened on the protection afforded them by the tariff laws, but the people, the laboring masses, and especially the employes in the great factories and trades, were pressed by biting poverty.

BUYING THE PRESIDENCY.

Deprived of the necessaries of life, unable to suitably clothe, house and feed their families, the poor toilers were compelled to strike for higher wages, and did so in great numbers. At this juncture came the Presidential election of 1888. The Democratic administration had not passed laws to relieve the people—it could not. Bill after bill had been introduced and quickly passed by the Democratic House, only to be blocked in the Republican Senate, which was determined that the Democrats should not reduce the tariff and thus relieve the people. What did the Republican leaders do? They issued a secret circular to their more prominent supporters, laying down the plan of wringing campaign funds out of the manufacturers and importers for the corruption of the voters, and determined to "fry the fat" out of the millionaires who had grown rich out of the protection afforded them by the war tariff laws; and this they did. If there is any doubt I can exhibit the circular. These manufacturers, lumber and iron kings, were notified that if they did not respond in large sums (since they were the ones chiefly benefited by the war tariff), this tariff would be repealed by the Democrats, should they carry the day, which was likely, and large sums of money must be had and had at once. These manufacturers and bond-holding magnates, frightened by the prospect of losing their hold upon the public teat, which they had been sucking so long, and on which they had fattened so exceedingly, did respond, and did suffer some of the "fat to be fried out" of them. This money was placed where it "would do the most good," and expended largely in purchasing floating voters. More secret circulars were issued, put into the hands of pimps, gamblers, bribers, and procurers, and these floating voters were marched in "blocks of five" to the polls, and for the first time in our national history the degrading spectacle was witnessed of success attended by open bribery. The Presidency of these United States was bought with a price. What use of the Prætorian guards to sell a Roman empire, when these men could purchase the Presidency with money wrung from the people by a war tariff under the disguise of protection?

THE FAITHFUL ARE REWARDED.

These faithful lieutenants were, of course, duly "remembered." Wanamaker was rewarded with a seat in the Cabinet. Dudley was given an honored chair at the White House until his shady doings were exposed, when to save appearances he was allowed to move off a few blocks to a lucrative position as pension auctioneer with fourteen clerks, where he now is. Quay, already in the United States Senate, by reason, as is openly charged, of a misuse of the public funds while Secretary of State and Treasurer of Pennsylvania, fearing exposure, openly boasted of having burned his campaign books, and is still continued as Chairman of the Republican National Committee, and from this position, with a wink or a nod, rules the President, who is seeking a renomination. The President dare not ignore him; Quay knows too much! Clarkson received the appointment of First Assistant Postmaster General, and in spite of his and the President's open indorsement of civil service reform removed 30,000 Postmasters in eighteen months for the sole crime of being Democrats. Sitting in his purchased chair of state, the President raises his pious eyes to heaven and humbly thanks Almighty God that he is not as other men! For the credit of the nation, I am glad that most other men are not like this sham civil-service reformer. Wanamaker, conscious of loss of character, is teaching a Sunday-school class, and trying to redeem himself by teaching Quay the commandment: "Thou shalt not steal." But Quay insists that he does not believe the statement, either as a business proposition or as sound moral philosophy, and wants the President and Wanamaker to understand that bribery and stealing do pay, and the only crime about either arises wholly from detection; and points to them as living monuments of his assertion. Dudley smiles at splitting hairs over such little things as the ten commandments, suggests an object lesson in "blocks of five," and offers to instruct and furnish the blocks.

REPUBLICAN CORRUPTION AND ROBBERY.

Corruption, unabashed, sits in a high place, and injustice and robbery stalk unrebuked through our legislative halls. Members duly elected to Congress are turned out because they are Democrats and favor reducing the war tariff, and senatorships are stolen with a boldness not even displayed by Quay. Let the Montana outrage bear witness. In vain have the people cried "Halt!" and "About face!" to their leaders. The stomachs of Quay, Dudley, Clarkson & Co. have been surfeited with the delicacies of foreign countries beyond waters once whitened with the sails of our American commerce—now, alas! covered with English vessels—but the dinner-pails of the miners at Streator and other places have been empty; their wives cowering in rags, and their children crying for bread. The doors of the Pension Office, once open only to the brave and unfortunate soldier, are now open to the skulker, the coward and the deserter. The farmer, the mechanic, the laborer, at once the muscle, lung and blood of the land, are covered with taxes from the soles of their feet to the crowns of their heads, and on these taxes the iron, the lumber and the coal kings have grown rich; and it is to the prosperity of this class that the high-tariff Congressman points you when he speaks of the wealth of our nation. These are the men who have built the railroads, watered the stock, plundered the farmer, the widow and orphan who subscribed stock along their lines, and they are the ones who are protected and who profit by the tax on poor man's lumber and iron; his salt and sugar and coal; his shoes and stocking and pantaloons; his shirt and vest and coat; his cravat and collar and hat; that they may roll in wealth and luxury.

WANTS HONEST LAWMAKERS.

Our Congressman for this district has said he wanted the Republicans to make the laws for this land. I do not. I should not wish them to do so were I a Republican. I am a Democrat, but I do not wish the Democrats exclusively to make the laws of my country. It would not be for the interests of the people that any one party should have the making of our laws. Laws of that character will always degenerate into laws made to perpetuate party control, rather than to preserve the liberty and welfare of the whole people. I wish the laws of my country made by the best and wisest men of all parties, and while carrying out the demands of the majority as far as possible, yet so limited as to preserve the rights of the minority, and thus command the respect of all good men of all parties, which alone will insure a faithful execution of the laws. I do not wish the laws made by any man who votes to reimburse himself out of the public treasury for his private losses, as the Congressman from this district is reported in the press to have done. If Congressmen let Silcott draw their salaries out of the Treasury, I think it a public scandal that they should vote themselves a second salary out of the people's money for services already paid for. It is due to the people to vacate any Congressman's seat who is guilty of such a crime.

THE TOILER IS AT FAULT.

You farmers, you laborers, you miners and workingmen, you are the ones who vote to continue these things. A blind adherence to party behests leads your officers to the belief that they own the offices and to forget that they are the servants of the people and that a public office is a public trust. Your late President told the people that the Treasury was overflowing, that he had too much money to run the nation, and asked you to send men to Congress who would vote to reduce the tariff and leave the money in the hands of the people—in your own pockets. Why should the wives of our protected manufactures and millionaires dress in silks and satins whose sheeny luster rivals that of the midday sun? Because you vote it to them. Why should they wear diamonds and jewels that outflash the lightnings of heaven? Because you vote that way. Why should their children speak French at foreign courts, dance the german in gilded halls, and drink wine, play whist and sing Italian at European watering places? Because you vote the money out of your pockets into theirs to enable them to do it. In the meantime the present spring has seen the farmer selling his corn at 20 cents a bushel, his oats at 16 cents, and his live cattle at 2 cents a pound in the splendid home market that these tariff sharks have made for him. His wife, worn and weary, in the midnight hours with tottering limbs walks her baby screaming with colic, or doses it with castor oil that pays a tariff of 194 per cent. I run no tilt, I urge no crusade against the wealthy. They do as you would do under similar circumstances. They simply avail themselves, as they have a right to do, of the laws which your Congressmen have made. They reap the profits and you pay the bills. The fault is yours, not theirs. Do not for a moment, my friends, imagine that I think the mass of the Republicans guilty of the things of which I complain. I do not. I only hold them responsible for a too blind belief in their leaders after it is plain that they have betrayed the people's interests by their lying assertions that the consumers do not pay the tariff. The discussion of this question has at last aroused the people as never before to the importance of this question. They are getting the cobwebs out of their eyes. They now know that their leaders have deceived them, and that the Democrats were right when they told the people that they themselves, the consumers, paid the tariff. To the people I say: If you again suffer yourselves to be deceived by the shallow trick of inducing you to pay no attention to your personal interests; if instead of voting for yourselves and your families you vote on the old dead issues of a quarter of a century ago and thus divert your attention (as was done two years ago) and induce yourselves to leave the tariff laws as they now are, you will deserve, as you will receive, the lash of poverty applied to your backs by your masters, the men protected by the war tariff, and each of you should at once have a collar made with your name on it, and wear it the rest of your natural lives, telling us whose dog you are.

GROSS DECEPTION PRACTICED.

I have repeatedly warned the people, in the press and on the stump, of the gross deception practiced upon them. I have urged and besought them to look at the folly of attempting to tax themselves rich. The Republican leaders say you can, and as a proof, point to the increased miles of railroad, and the increased wealth of your white masters and trust bosses. They might as well point to the mighty trees of Calaveras County, California, or to the increased number of our babies, and say we owe it all to the war tariff. The Democrats say no, we owe our big trees and babies to natural causes. We owe our increased schools and colleges and churches to the intelligence, morality and energy of our people. We want a tariff for revenue only. We do not want, and will not have a protected class of millionaires to fatten on our scanty crops and scantier wages, under the thin guise of a "home market." We do not want to have the whole land plastered with mortgages that the protected nabobs may eat turtle soup, sail in yachts, and buy up Congressmen to still further rivet the chains upon our necks.

THE POOR MAN PAYS THE TAX.

When the war tariff was needed we cheerfully submitted to it. When it was not needed, and our national Treasury was overflowing, we asked our Congressmen to reduce the tariff, as they agreed to do time and again. Did they do it? No. They took the income tax off the rich man's income and left the tariff on the poor man's salt and sugar. They took the tax off of bank deposits and left the tariff on lumber, lime and coal. They reduced the tax on whisky, wine and liquors, but left the tariff on woolen shirts, coats and vests. They have legislated for the rich man and against the poor man. Let me call your attention to some of the present tariff absurdities and monstrosities. Attar of roses for the rich lady's handkerchief is imported free. Soap for workman's hands pays a tariff of 20 per cent. Agates for the rich child are imported free; dolls for the poor child pay a tariff of 35 per cent. Feathers and down for the rich man's bed are free; blankets for the poor man's bed pay a tax of 10 cents a pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem. Undressed furs for the rich man's wife are free; woolen cloaks for the poor man's wife are taxed 45 per cent. and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem. Meerschaum for the rich man's pipe is free; clay for the poor man's pipe pays a tax of 35 per cent. Mineral water, ivory, gold and silver medals for the rich are free; but salt, sugar, wool, lime, lumber, hair and cement are all heavily taxed. Here are a few of the more common articles out of the more than 4,000 articles on which the American is taxed, all taken from the tariff act:

	Per cent tax paid.
Castor oil	194
Woolen blankets	79
Combs	30

THIRTY-SIX PER CENT. FOR THE MILLIONAIRE.

Farmers, consider these things: The manufacturers of the whole United States made over and above expenses on their invested capital for the year 1879 an average of 36½ per cent. net. How many farmers have made on their invested capital a net 3 per cent? Now, where do you find your millionaires? Among the manufacturers and protected industries, of course, and not among the unprotected ones, like the farmers and common people. Is it not stupendous folly for men making less than 3 per cent. to vote money out of their own pockets to add to the wealth of those who make over 36 per cent.? You do this very thing every time you vote for Congressmen who refuse to reduce the tariff. Their promises to the people in the past have not been kept. Will you trust them for the future? Yes; with our Treasury overflowing, and the Democratic party crying "Halt," "Reduce taxation," and President Cleveland urging you to keep this money in your own pockets, you keep on voting for high-tariff Congressmen! Surely the fool-killer is asleep! The tariff protects the farmer exactly as the wolf protects the lamb. It protects the poor man as the vulture protects the dove.

THE DEMOCRATS CRY "HALT."

The Democrats want the excess of the war tariff remitted—left in the hands of the people, by reducing the tariff. We want to raise enough tariff taxes to pay the expenses of the Government, economically administered, and no more, for more is robbery. We want a faithful watch-dog at the national Treasury, a reformed ballot, and a fair count. We want the greatest amount of personal freedom left to the individual consistent with public safety. We want a faithful execution of good laws and a repeal of bad ones. We want the tariff left on the luxuries of life and taken off the necessaries of life. We think the property and not the poverty of the country should pay the taxes, and our country enjoy a front rank among the nations of the earth, as it once did, when every sea was burdened with our commerce, and every American could point to his flag with honest pride and satisfaction, and on this platform the people will sustain us.

CLAMORING FOR GREATER ROBBERY.

The Republican leaders insist on a high tariff, but they want it low on the robes of the rich and high on the rags of the poor. They want to further overflow the national Treasury to enable them to corrupt Congress, to build post-offices and public buildings in Republican cities, to bribe voters, and undermine public morals. They insist on cutting off competition when the farmer's wife wants a woolen blanket or a cheap cloak, but they open wide the ports of the United States to the serf and Chinaman to come here with their cheap labor to compete with our free American labor.

HE NEEDS NO PROTECTION.

It won't do for the high tariff Congressman this year to tell the farmer he is protected on his corn and oats, his rye and barley, his eggs and cabbages. He knows that he lives in an agricultural country, and that no nation on the globe can compete with him in those articles, with or without a tariff. He knows they need no protection at home, and if he ships them abroad that he is compelled to sell them in the open markets of the world, where American tariff laws cannot offset him. Now, if he knows, as he does, that these tariff laws are a sham, and fail to protect him on what he has to sell, is he not justified in thinking the war tariff on what he has to buy is also a sham? That it is only made to allay his distrust and soothe his suspicions? Would not common sense dictate that he should look into the effect of the war tariff on some of the 4,000 articles he is compelled to buy, and consider whether it would be better to vote for a Congressman pledged to reduce the tariff and absolutely cut it off on all the common necessaries of life, and leave it mainly on the luxuries of life; raising our revenue from the silken robes of the rich and not from the tattered rags of the poor? Since the rich are the ones mainly benefited by the tariff dollars plucked from the pockets of the poor, it would be a righteous restitution to raise the revenue largely from them in return. I refer, of course, to the millionaire lumber and iron robbers who have profited by this national swindle. The farmer is beginning to look into the workings of this gigantic anaconda that is squeezing the life blood out of the nation to enrich a few. To examine is to understand, and to understand is to correct the evil.

THE PEOPLE PAY THE BOUNTIES.

No free people, once seeing how they are swindled under this tariff, would for a moment tolerate it in its present state, nor tolerate its voters in Congress. Are the Republican leaders trying to reduce taxation? No. They have introduced a bill known as the McKinley bill, placing certain sugars on the free list, which the Chicago Tribune, a Republican paper, says will reduce the revenue on that article $60,000,000, and $10,000,000 more on tobacco, making a reduction of $70,000,000. But the same bill, it says, will increase the tariff on other goods to the amounts of $235,000,000, leaving as the net result a tax of $165,000,000 more than they now have to pay. This is a reduction with a vengeance! It further admits that while it reduces the tariff on sugar the same bill gives a bounty out of the National Treasury of 2 cents a pound on all the sugar raised by the producer in this country. Who pays this bounty? The Government, of course. Where does it get the money? From the tariff it levies on the articles used by the common people. Then the people have to pay this bounty, after all? Yes, that is it exactly. Did the McKinley bill, while giving the sugar producer a bounty on his sugar, also give the corn grower a bounty on his corn or other productions? Oh, no! Thus the farmer and laborer are swindled on every side.

THE TARIFF IS A TAX.

In conclusion, gentlemen, this war tariff is a taxgatherer that stands ever at your side demanding his share of the proceeds of the farmer's labor, of the miner's toil, of the sailor's danger. You cannot avoid him. Closer than a shadow he follows you, your wife, or child to the merchant's counter. The shadow may leave you as you enter the door. But this silent, grasping, terrible tax thug is ever with you, holding out his itching palm, and never failing to collect. You may reap or sow, sit down or rise up, groan or laugh, cry or pray, but he is there, silent but inexorable. You may wander on the plains, delve in the bowels of the earth, climb the snowy mountains or search the frozen north as far as the limits of your country extend, but he is still there, still silent, still inexorable. Weary of being forever haunted, you may seek the friendly quietude of the grave; but he is still there, perched upon your coffin, demanding his tax upon the pick and mattock of the grave-digger, the rope and gloves and hearse of the undertaker and the paper upon which your last will and testament is written, of your administrator, and always getting it. He stands beside the robed priest and taxes his vesture, his prayer-book and Bible. He stands like a doubly damned shadow of hell, beside the agonized widow and taxes her very weeds of woe, the veil of sorrow over her swimming eyes, the bonnet upon her bowed head, the shoes on her feet, and the tear-stained handkerchief in her trembling hand. He lays his sacrilegious hand upon the sobbing child, hisses his hot breath into her startled ear, and says: "A tax of thirty-five per cent. on the doll that comforts your poor, broken heart for papa's death, and twenty-five per cent on the black bordered letter to your absent brother; but tears, groans and anguish are on the free list."

The Republican leaders have said that high tariff shall stand, and the McKinley bill increasing it shall pass. What have the people to say?

Is It a Small Thing?

Senator Hawley has read with amazement the remarks of Bishop Potter at Harvard, and "deeply deplores to hear men of eminent position and scholarly attainments speaking hopelessly of this great and wonderful nation—this good nation, as I believe it to be—picking up incidental occurrences and slight tendencies among small fragments of the people."

Is the subjection of the whole power of the administration to the debauch of the civil service a slight tendency? Is the reckless and wicked pension legislation of the party in power a slight tendency? Does Speaker Reed represent merely a slight and unimportant tendency? Is the spirit shown by the National House of Representative in passing the infamous force bill only a slight tendency which is not of the least concern to the country? Is the fact that the Chairman of the National Republican Committee is an embezzler only a slight tendency in morals at which Bishop Potter nor nobody else should be disturbed?—Chicago Herald.

Subsidies for Everybody.

Vermont farmers who have maple sugar groves insist that the Federal Government ought to give them a bounty on the sugar they make from trees, just as much as the planters in Louisiana who make it from cane or the growers in Kansas who get it out of sorghum, and Congressman Grout, of that State, insists that the Ways and Means Committee shall, even at this late day, rectify the blunder. Mr. Grout and his constituents who have sugar maples are entirely right; if any producers of sugar are to receive a bounty, all producers of sugar should. But why should only the owners of trees which are sugar maples be subsidized? If it will promote the prosperity of the nation to pay a bounty to the Vermonter who has a grove of maple trees, why will it not enhance that prosperity still more to give a bounty to the Vermonter who has no maple sugar "bush" but who has an apple orchard?—New York Evening Post.

A Painful Lack of Delicacy.

Either Pension Commissioner Raum should resign or his son John should go out of the pension business. There ought to be sufficient sense of the proprieties of life in the family to force one of them to quit.

It appears that a man named Wilkinson and Mr. John Raum have gone into the pension and bounty claims business, the senior partner having an office in the little village of Mount Carmel in this State, and the junior partner having one in Washington, and looking after cases before a bureau where his father is Commissioner and one of his brothers a clerk. The firm is advertising over Illinois and probably over the country.—Chicago Tribune.

Tadpoles.

Sown in the blue heavens and as plentiful as the sands along the sea, roll worlds in the endless, endless void of space, and they are no doubt peopled with intelligent beings that expressions in figures cannot number. What is a man, or even the greatest one among men, but an atom! What is fame?

> A giddy whirlwind's fitful gust,
> Which lifts a pinch of mortal dust.

The most humble and devout of mortals were such spirits as Plato, Dante, Angelo, Milton, and Newton. With genius which made them colossal figures among their kind, they were simple and child-like in character, and saw farther and deeper than others into the "works of God." With his vast accumulations of knowledge, Newton said: "I am only like a child who has gathered a few pebbles on the sea-shore." What of the masses of mortals who do the ordinary work of this world! They are atoms, molecules, which go to make up a whole of which they know no more than so many tadpoles. They are only caterpillars, and a few of them may change into butterflies.—Pullman (Ill.) Journal.

Weeds Flourish.

Young man, do not be deluded with the notion that intelligence, energy, fidelity, and competency will have much, if anything, to do with your advancement as a hired man in politics. You must be fully prepared to see incompetency and ignorance put in places of trust, and must learn the common lesson that merit doesn't weigh much in securing temporary power and position. It will be another generation before worth will stand a fair chance of recognition, in face of the jobs and misrepresentation and deception which are the present means of accomplishing the best results for unscrupulous schemers. Men will weary of politicians, and to-day's political methods and the reign of the boss will depart to the region where the woodbine twineth.—Ex.

A CORRESPONDENT asks: "What is the meaning of the expression, 'hoi polloi,' which I occasionally see in the papers?" It is an expressive Greek phrase, meaning, the many. It really means those to whom Carlyle referred when he stated the population of Great Britain to be "twenty millions, mostly fools." Our common expression, "the masses," or as a typographical error once made it read, "them asses," covers the case. Every language has a like expression for that portion of its speakers who only figure in the census reports. In the language of Sam Weller, "hoi polloi" is a "more tenderer" expression than rabble, herd, mob, or voting cattle would be, but many editors use it as synonymous with any of these words, their readers possibly fancying it on a par at least with "fellow citizens," their knowledge of Greek not being above their other acquirements in intellectual wealth.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure
The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE SCIENCE OF COINS.

RELATION OF NUMISMATICS TO HISTORY AND EDUCATION.

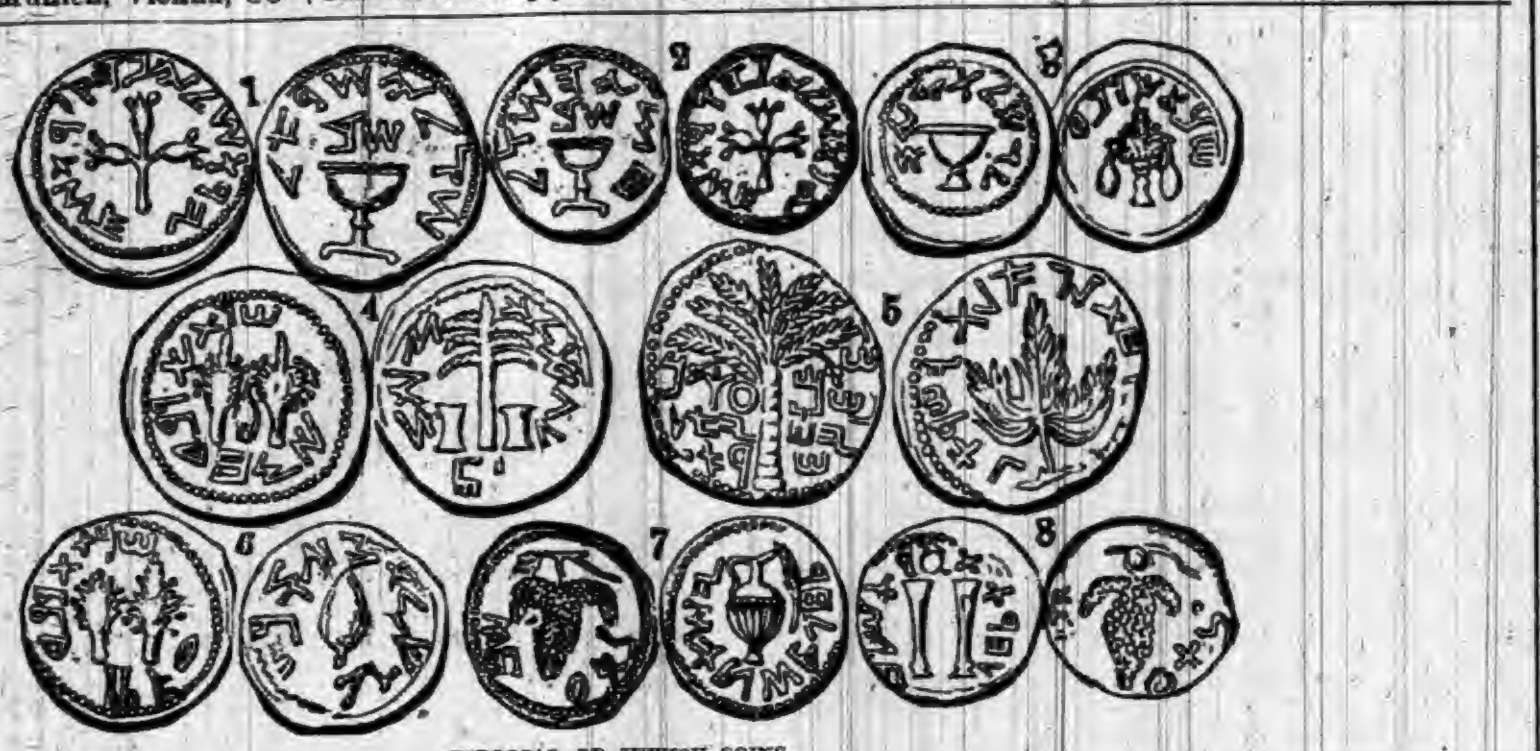
Noted Coin Museums—Collections of Incalculable Value—Importance of Numismatics as an Aid to the Study of History—Ancient, Mediæval and Modern Coins—The Widow's Mite.

THERE is no more fascinating and advantageous study than that of coins, ancient and modern; to one versed in the science of numismatics there is ever open an exhaustless field for investigation and discovery.

To the young the suggestions of a coin, its origin, the devices and legends upon it, lead a romantic tinge to imagination, and this prompts the study of history and its kindred branches, leading to the acquirement of information such as the routine of schools will never furnish. As measures are now being taken to change designs upon all coins of the United States, the numismatic knowledge of the metallic currency now in circulation in our country is most important.

The word numismatics, from the Latin, numisma, a coin, relates not to the actual metal value of any piece, but to its connection with history as illustrated by the image or superscription thereon.

The science of numismatics is, in Europe, considered of such importance and interest that most of the principal cities possess immensely valuable numismatic collections. Paris, London, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Munich, Vienna, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Florence, and Madrid all have noted coin museums, the collections being of untold value; and numismatic societies the members of which are the most renowned among the learned men of the earth. The incentive which is given, by cultivation of this taste for study of history, as well as the assistance thereto afforded by it, has been always appreciated by advanced teachers as an invaluable aid to education, and not only in illustrating but also in confirming history, no science has borne a more important part.



BIBLICAL OR JEWISH COINS.

Coins are divided by numismatists into three grand classes:

Ancient, from earliest existence, 700 B. C., to the deposition of Romulus Augustus, A. D. 476.

Modern, from the Reformation to the present time.

The mediæval and modern are, almost without exception, imitations of the ancient, and the coins of these later centuries show little or nothing of superiority in our civilized artists over the magnificent coinages of Greece and Rome, struck more than 2,000 years ago.

Every range that mind may take into the far past is furnished with substantial and abundant suggestion, and reliable information by study of the coins of antiquity.

The rulers, male and female; their births, marriages, triumphs, their victories in art, love and war, their deaths are all recorded upon these pieces of metal. Religious sentiments and changes, manners of dress and ceremonials, equipages, weapons, furniture, etc., etc., are plainly delineated upon their coins and medals. Even the character of the individual of whom the piece is commemorative may be closely arrived at. Some place but their plain effigy, or have it in connection with members of their own family; others celebrate their triumphs, and appear proudly crowned with laurels, while still others deify themselves and pose as Jupiter, Hercules and gods of their time.

Mythology largely lends its aid in beautifying these coins and medals, and its fascinations increase the romantic interest which their possession or the knowledge of them through illustration and description excites.

The Bible student finds much to carry his mind back to the very earliest period and subsequent growth of revealed religion in this pursuit, for coins of the Christian types, such as the labrum, or standard bearing the cross, are found from the date of the reign of Constantine onwards, and on one coin of Vetranio is seen the celebrated legend, "In hoc signo victor eris."

The Greeks excelled in the beauty and idealism of their coins, and most of the Roman pieces were struck from dies made by Greek artists, and these latter are more valuable, on account of the faithfulness with which they portray individual likenesses, such Nero, Antonia, the Antonines, Faustinas, Cæsars, Alexander, and others, and in recording events celebrated historically, as the crowning of Ptolemy Epiphanes by Lepidus, the introduction of elephants into Rome by Metellus, the construction of the Colosseum by Nero and Vespasian, the overthrow of Judea by Titus, and all grand changes in the history of the world.

The Roman coinage commenced about 230 or 240 B. C., with the massive copper æs grave, and about 170 B. C. gold and silver coins were issued by various Roman families under permits from the state. An immense number were also struck in the provinces conquered by Rome.

With Julius Cæsar commenced the imperial series, which lasted until A. D. 476. After that ruler the Senate reserved to itself the right of striking copper money, which was for a long period marked S. C. (Senatus Consultu).

The word "money" is claimed by many authorities to be derived from the Latin Moneta, because the Roman mint stood in the temple of Juno Moneta; but though the mint employes here numbered tens of thousands of men engaged in striking coins, yet an immense amount was produced elsewhere.

When we remember that the Romans possessed no banks of deposit, and had to secrete their accumulated metal wealth in the earth and elsewhere, and that the vast legions of Rome once occupied all the countries in the then known inhabited earth, we can understand how excavations, now continually being made, furnish us with the plenteous supply of original pieces in our possession to-day.

A collection is within the reach of almost any one. Reliable numismatists furnish truly original ancient coins at a low price. Electrotypes are made of the very rare pieces, but these are sold as such, not as veritable coinage.

NUMISMATIC TERMS.—A coin is a piece of metal bearing an impressed device, and designed for circulation as money.

Medals and medallions are large metal pieces struck in dies, on both sides, not for use as money, but to commemorate some event.

A medallet is a small medal, usually, though not always, inferior in beauty or design to a medal.

A token is generally of the size of a current coin of the time and country, issued by a private person or firm.

The obverse of a piece is that side which bears the portrait or principal design indicating the country, nation, or object for which it was struck.

The Reverse, of course, means the opposite side. The Head or Portrait, on a piece is said to face to the right or left, with reference to the observer's right or left hand.

Types are differences in design on coins struck for the same general object and purposes.

Varieties means where the variation in two coins of same value and period is very slight, as in size of letters or distances between them and such trifling variations.

The Field, on a coin or medal, is the open space on the piece not occupied by a device or inscription.

The Legend is any inscription other than the name of the person represented on the piece.

The Inscription means all names, legends, titles, etc., on the coin or medal. It is a general term.

A Mint Mark is a private mark placed on a coin by the mint issuing it, to indicate its genuineness, place of coinage, or other purpose.

The Size of Coins in this country is determined by a scale of sixteenths of an inch; thus, a medal "of size 24," measures 24 sixteenths of an inch in diameter across its face.

A. M. Smith's Authorative, Standard Classification of Coins: Poor coins are those on which the design, lettering or date are almost undecipherable, in the least degree visible.

Fair, are those well worn, but which still show every portion of the design, all letters and entire date.

Very Fair, applies to those on which every mark, letter and figure is well defined, with only the high, fine hair lines (such as hair, feathers in wings and like very delicate points) are worn off.

Fine coins are those barely worn, but which, under critical examination, show traces of wear in the rubbed surface of the finer lines. No scratches or "nicks" are permissible in "fine" coins, unless mentioned before examination.

Very Fine, means that a coin has the well-defined lines and surface of a piece that has been little in circulation or contact, and that it shows very slight traces of wear and is not scratched or nicked in the least.

Uncirculated, implies that the coin is free from wear or scratches, and has the appearance of a piece just dropped from the coining press.

Brilliant Proof coins have a burnished, mirror-like, reflective surface; the dies and planchets both being polished before striking these coins, which are made exclusively for enthusiastic collectors. As soon as soiled or tarnished, even by much or careless handling, they are no longer to be classed as "Brilliant Proofs," but are still called "Proofs."

COINS OF THE BIBLE.

The Jewish people possessed no positive coinage until the time of their subjection to the kings of Syria, of the Seleucidan dynasty, about B. C. 312, when Greek currency, established throughout the East since the Macedonian conquest, circulated also in Judea, until the tyranny of Antiochus Epiphanes, in B. C. 176, caused the revolt of Mattathias, the chief priest, when his son Judas Maccabæus headed the revolt, eventually re-established the long-lost independence of Judea, and to his successor, Simon, was conceded by Antiochus, the son of Demetrius, the right of coining national money, the earliest of which was issued about B. C. 144, in pieces of one, two, and four silver shekels, bearing different types, but all relating to the ceremonial of Judaic worship.

What Bacteria Are.

The great majority of these microscopic plants are what botanists call bacteria, the smallest form of vegetable life, says Fred D. Chester in St. Nicholas. So small are they that it would take, in some cases, as many as fifteen thousand of them arranged in a row to extend an inch. They have different forms, some being round, some oval, some rod-shaped, and others much the shape of a corkscrew, or spiral. In all cases they are so small that one needs a powerful microscope to study them, and in no case can we perceive them singly with the naked eye.

When countless millions of them are grouped together in a mass or colony, we can see them about as we are able to see at a great distance an approaching army, of which we are totally unable to distinguish a single soldier. We have said that these bacteria move about; and this is true of most of them, although there are some which do not appear to move at all, but remain fixed where they find a good feeding-place. Those that have motion behave in a very peculiar manner; some wobble about in one place without moving forward in the least; others dart hither and thither, back and forth, at an apparently furious rate, rocking and twirling about, and turning a hundred somersaults as they move along.

Bacteria multiply very rapidly, and they do this in a strange way. A single one breaks itself in two; then each half grows to be as large as the first. Then these, in turn, divide up again, and so on, until from a single one we have many thousands in a short time. To give you the figures, such as they are, a single one can multiply at so enormous a rate that in forty-eight hours it can produce something like 280,000,000,000 of bacteria. Great consequences follow this enormous increase of bacteria, for while one so small in itself can do little, the army resulting from the multiplication of one is able to accomplish much.

That Mischievous Phonograph.

George Osborne's marital infelicity dates from the day on which he first became fascinated by a phonograph. He had read a great deal about the wonderful possibilities connected with the instrument, but he had never seen one. He was persuaded by an eloquent canvasser one day not long ago to rent a phonograph for use in his office. He spent several hours learning how to manipulate the machine, and on the afternoon it arrived the clerks and office-boys deserted their work to watch Osborne with his new toy.

At noon that evening Osborne described to his wife the remarkable achievements of his phonograph; how it reproduced a song sung by his head clerk and a banjo solo performed by one of the boys. Osborne was always an entertaining talker at dinner. He believed that jesting and digesting have a very close connection with each other. His wife was very much impressed with his description of the phonograph, and determined to go to the office on the following morning.

Osborne told his wife he was going to spend the evening at the club. Instead of so doing, however, he went to his office and played with the phonograph until midnight. He had never been so happy since the day his wife accepted him. During the evening he sang into the instrument some verses of a love ditty that he had recently heard at his club.

When Mrs. Osborne reached the office in the morning she found that her husband had gone out on a matter of business. One of the clerks offered to operate the phonograph for her. She was delighted with the instrument. The comic song and the banjo solo pleased her extremely, and she laughed heartily to hear her husband reciting "Bingen on the Rhine." Then he began to sing. Mrs. Osborne's face grew grave. "I stood by her side to-night." "Did she know—that fair-haired woman—she had made me curse my fate?" This was awful. Mrs. Osborne burst into tears and left the office hurriedly.

All this happened some weeks ago. Osborne is still trying to convince his wife that no fair-haired woman ever sang to him in the gloaming, and that he has no personal acquaintance with a love that came too late.—Washington Post.

SPARKS OF WIT.

A TWO-FOOT rule: Stand on your own pins.

A BURNING question—have you a match?

A LEARNED judge—the literary critic.

A GOOD time for farmers to get in their hay is when it rains pitchforks.

"YOU can't eat your dinner and have it, too," said the sympathetic steward to the seasick passenger.

IT is not always proper to address the young man behind the soda fountain as doctor, even though he is a fizzician.

COLONEL YERGER—Well, how did you like the picnic? Gilhooly—I was so glad to get home again that I was glad I went.

MISS DE PRIDE—I wouldn't marry him if he were the last man on earth. Rival belle—Indeed, you wouldn't. I'd take him myself then.

MAMMA—Now, don't you want to be good, Johnny, and go to heaven some day? Johnny (doubtfully)—Yes'm; but I'd rather go to the circus first.

"GOING camping out this year?" "No; I camped out last year." "Why don't you camp out this year?" "I just told you. I camped out last year."

JOHNNY's mother writes: "Do you think it best to let a boy learn to whistle?" Certainly; some day you may want him to hull the strawberries.

YOUNG husband—Who is that fellow you have been chatting with all the evening? Pretty wife—Oh, he isn't anybody—merely one of my old lovers.

STRANDED: "Yes, the yacht was completely wrecked; but the captain saved himself by clinging to the bight of a rope." "H'm! His bark appears to have been worse than his bight."

SMARTFELLOW (anxious to poke fun at an old maid)—Let me see. It's a long time since we last met, is it not, Miss Antique? Miss Antique—A very long time. How well that suit of clothes has hung together?

YOUNG husband—My dear, some of my garments are sadly in need of buttons. Young wife—Yes, my love, I noticed that, and have sent for my mother. She is a splendid hand at sewing on buttons.

FLORIST (to committee)—You want an appropriate floral design, do you? What was the decedent's business? Spokesman—He was an attorney. Florist—How would something in the shape of a lyre strike you?

"AH, I see you have your son with you in business. This must make it very pleasant for you." "Yes, it does. There is nothing like it. He can take a few days off at any time, and the business runs right along, as usual."

FARMER's son—Pa, I'm convinced that my mission in life is to save souls, and with your permission I'll begin the work at once. Old farmer—Well, if you've concluded to learn a trade, go ahead. I s'pose a sole business is as good as any!

"GO WHERE there is the most sin, sir," said the old clergyman's coachman, when asked which of two calls the dominie ought to accept. The good man thought over it, and concluded that where there was most money there would be the most sin. So he accepted the call which offered the most substantial salary.

THE SENTIMENTAL LOVER AND THE PRACTICAL MAIDEN.

Come, let us walk, love, 'neath the moon,
Which brightly beams on high,
Enjoy the balmy breath of June,
And list the zephyr's sigh.

I would not walk beneath the moon,
However bright her beam;
I'd rather go to a saloon
And eat a dish of cream.

Impressions of President Lincoln.

Gen. Henry G. Thomas, U. S. A., in a speech, recently delivered in Portland, Maine, thus gives his impression of President Lincoln on his visit during the war to the Army of the James. At 10 a. m. the President appeared, Gen. Weitzel riding on his left. I had command of the First Division, Twenty-fifth Corps, that day, and the first to be reviewed, and as the President halted to receive the salute his eyes lighted for the first time on that uniformed mass of freedmen, and his rugged face was illuminated by a smile the like of which for benignity I have never seen. President Lincoln, as we know, was one of those who 'saw visions and dreamed dreams,' and I have always believed, such was the light of his countenance, that he had a prophetic vision that very day that all his love and labor for the slave was not to be in vain. He managed his horse well, and sat with ease upon him, but rode loosely, carelessly, letting his legs sway and his arms flop up and down. He had evidently ridden a good deal and never given thought as to how he rode or looked. His wonderful appearance of length struck me very forcibly. He was only two and a-half inches taller than Gen. Weitzel, who was thin even to meagerness, and yet Weitzel looked actually stubby in comparison. Add to this loose way of riding that his tall hat had settled down behind almost on to his neck, and showed his forehead and a tuft of hair like a zouave, and that his trousers had worked up nearly to the tops of his stockings and that he wore low-cut shoes, and you can appreciate Capt. Bob Lincoln's remark after the ceremony was through, as his father approached a group of which Admiral Porter was the center. It was, "Well, father doesn't seem to handsome much, does he?"

Not Related.

Thus the Louisville Courier-Journal answers an inquiring subscriber: The supposition among newspaper proofreaders that Miss Susan B. Anthony is a sister of the late Mark Antony, of Rome, has led to a frequent error in spelling the name of the Roman leader. While Miss Anthony's name is always spelled with an h, her supposed brother used no h's whatever. At least, none can be found in his name on any of the hotel registers of his day. The h in Miss Anthony's name may be merely a bit of feminine affectation. Mark Antony's name should no more be spelled with an h than Samson's should appear with a p.

A Tried Remedy for Biliousness.

Those who suffer from disorder or inaction of the liver will never get the upper hand of the unruly organ so long as they use such irrational remedies as blue pills, calomel, and podophyllin. But from the tried and popular medicine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they may expect relief with a certainty of obtaining it. The influence of the Bitters upon the great biliary gland is direct, powerful and speedily felt. The relief afforded is not spasmodic, but complete and permanent. The sallowness of the skin, furred appearance of the tongue, indigestion, costiveness, headache, nausea, pains through the right side and shoulder, in fact every accompaniment of the obstinate complaint, are entirely and promptly removed by a course of this inestimable medicine, in behalf of which testimony is constantly emanating from ever quarter, and from all classes of society.

An Unfortunate Text.

The congregation sat expectant. The minister had just been married, and his bride was coming out to the services. When they finally made their appearance there was a hush, followed by whispered comments. The gallant clergyman escorted his young wife toward the front and then proudly ascended the pulpit steps. The singing proved unusually good, and the prayer was made with much fervency. But the minister himself altered the happy condition of affairs. As his hearers settled back for the discourse, he read the following text: "Behold, I have played the fool and erred exceedingly!"—Texas Siftings.

Too long deluded — the unhappy victim of catarrh in the head. He's been told that it can't be cured. Don't you believe it. It can be, and it is—no matter how bad or of how long standing. It has been done for thousands—by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Other so-called remedies may palliate for a time; this cures for all time. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, it conquers the worst cases. Its makers offer, in good faith, a reward of $500 for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. They are able to pay it. Are you able to take it?

The symptoms of catarrh are, headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases terminate in Consumption and end in the grave, without ever having manifested all these symptoms. Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. 50 cents, by druggists.

K. P. ADDRESS BY GEO. E. KING.

How to promote the interests of the Lodge.

Everything whether great or small, whether it requires the labor and attention of but one person for a short time, or requires the united efforts of many for years to complete, whether undertaken by the Supreme Ruler, or by man, everything in whatever land, or clime, or among whatever class of people it may be found, is designed and intended for some purpose.

An institution to promulgate Friendship, to teach the practice of Charity and Benevolence, to lay before us lessons that will tend to make us all better, that will have influence in elevating the moral standing of us all.

An organization in which men could meet on an equality and exchange thoughts and ideas, and stimulate and exercise their minds and so broaden and deepen their intellectual faculties and become more liberal minded.

An institution to aid the friendless and the destitute.

An institution to make us careful and watchful.

These are some of the designs and purposes of the man whose portrait occupies so conspicous a place in our Hall, whose life was devoted to advocating and advancing the principles in which he had so firm a faith, who when living, was honored and respected by hosts of the best citizens throughout this broad land, and whose death was deeply mourned on the entire continent.

These are some of the objects he had in view when he founded the order of Knights of Pythias—an Order which we all love well, an Order to which no man need be ashamed to acknowledge allegiance, but to be admitted as a member of which is an honor of which he may well feel proud.

Are not his purposes grand, noble, sublime?

We are his followers, it is now our duty to do all that we can to promote and advance the work which he has so well begun.

How these objects may be best attained, how they may be most highly developed, and farthest advanced will be the chief aim of my remarks. Not that my suggestions if carried out would actually insure the successful completion and attainment of the purposes of this Order, but it will simply be the opinion of one whose qualifications are more suitable as a listener to others than as a speaker especially on a subject such as this.

Much of this talk was written little by little, thought by thought, just as they occurred to me, and was afterwards revised and arranged. And I find that it runs largely on this literary work which we have just begun.

But in regard to the promotion of the principles of Friendship, Charity and Benevolence, I wish only to say—practice them. The old adage the world over, is, that "Practice makes perfect." An adage than which, none is more true. Practice them! Practice them as a lodge, as a body. Practice them individually. Practice them conscientiously, consistently, at home and abroad, among ourselves and among people who are not members of the Order, wherever oportunity offers, occasion requires, or circumstances demand. The result will go far toward breaking down and crushing the prejudice now existing among the people against secret societies. It will bring in to our midst many who are not members of the Order, but who are yet worthy of becoming such. It will bring to us that prosperity, that lively interest which is always manifest and which goes hand in hand with the initiation of good members and it will bring credit to our Order and raise it in the opinion of the world.

As the town increases in population, and as the young men of the town grow up, we ought to be able to admit at least twelve new members every year. That will give us one per month, giving us work in one of the three degrees on three meetings each month, and with the talent, ability and willingness we have among our members, we certainly can make that one night remaining in each month entertaining and instructive.

In oder to make it so, however, the lodge must be in good working condition. By that I mean, we must have harmony. There must be a unity of action, a deep and earnest interest and enthusiasm manifested by all the officers and members. A constant and regular attendance of members.

Our hall is beautifully furnished and decorated, designed to make it home-like and attractive, and thus induce the members to attend. But a long line of vacant chairs on either side of the hall is not a very attractive sight, is not very encouraging to those whose duty it is to conduct the business of the lodge; it seems to show that their work is not appreciated. And so, when a majority lose interest and fail to attend, the few who do attend lose their interest also, simply because it is impossible for a few to maintain an interest.

I would like to see every K. of P make it his bounden duty to see that he occupies one of these chairs each evening if possible.

I would like to see every K of P. take hold of this literary work. Each one can do something, and if all do something it will require only a little from each to make our meetings entertaining and instructive.

We have now 100 members in good standing. Suppose only half of them were here each evening and each would occupy only a minute of time in all, they would occupy 50 minutes, making nearly an hour of lively discussion on some subject, and when it would be over, each one would go home benefited.

It is the one who takes right hold of this literary work who is really benefited by it. As exercise of the muscles of our bodies stengthens and develops them, so every effort to compose something to present here, increases our power and ability to prepare something in the future. Every time we address an assembly we improve in our manner of delivery, we gain control of our voices, and become more proficient in every other qualification necessary to good speaking.

This work in order to be most beneficial should be original.

The one who prepares an essay or oration to give here, by the study he gives his sbbject, or by the investigation of some subject in books, will have created on his own mind a more lasting impression than he will be able to create in other minds. He will gain such control of his own mind as will enable him to apply it to any subject he chooses, and to hold it on that subject until he becomes its master, and he will, by the experience and practice which this work affords enable himself to address an audience without embarrassment, and in a few years if this work should continue, which I hope it will, we can become a lodge of orators, of speakers with talent and ability, suitable to any occasion.

If the committee which has been appointed to manage the literary work do not come to you with a request for work of some kind which will be entertaining, instructive, or amusing, either something original, some appropriate selection, a song, or music; if they do not come to you, go to them and volunteer your services, or prepare something at any time, and speak it here without saying anything to the committee. It makes no difference whether you have a place assigned you on their program, whether you have been announced at a previous meeting or not. Anything and at any time will be acceptable.

If I could say anything which would render every Knight absolutely without an excuse for not participating in this work, I would gladly say it and think I would be doing the lodge a great service. We have a noble order, we have grand purposes in view, exalted lessons to impress, undying principles to practice among ourselves and to inculcate in others.

Let us continue in this good work, let us endeavor by all the means that are honorable to keep up the interest, to keep up the attendance, to work in harmony and unison. We will then be able to accomplish something.

The dull months are not before us. The brightest, most enjoyable, most entertaining and instructive meetings are to come. This literary work can be made more interesting than initiations. We have the talent with which to do it.

Let those who are enthusiastic in this work, who have the good of the order at heart, who truly and earnestly desire the the success and prosperity of this lodge, show by their example that they are not only willing, but anxious to do all in their power to promote its interests, and gradually others will be drawn into the work, and in a short time the greater part of the lodge will be busy. When a member has nothing to do here he remains away two or three nights. When he does this he loses interest, don't care whether he comes at all any more, perhaps forgets entirely when Friday night comes that there is a K. of L. lodge in town and that he is a member. We must see those members, get them here if possible, and get them interested again and further trouble with them need not be feared.

A poor attendance at lodge is indicative of a lack of interest in its welfare, a want of harmony among the members, an absence of brotherly feeling, or some other like cause. Let us show to the neighboring lodges of our Order, and to the lodges of other Orders in our town, by our prompt, constant and regular attendance that we are not lacking in any of these respects, but that we are on the high road to success and that we expect to continue on in the same course.

In Memoriam.

The following appropriate lines were written by Mrs. Wheeler, and dedicated to the memory of Hattie E. Swander, who died May 30th, 1890, aged 15 years, seven months and six days:

To-day we cut the firm green sod,
With trembling hands asunder,
And laid this gentle form of God,
Our darling Hattie, under.

Tenderly we folded her hands
Across her peaceful breast;
Her sufferings are over now,
And Hattie is at rest.

But had she lived a few more years,
In all her beauty bright,
Her eyes would oft been dimmed with tears,
Her heart been touched with blight.

'Tis sad to part with those we love,
And nature sheds a tear;
But lift thine eyes to heaven above,
And griefs will disappear.

But she has gone to dreamless sleep,
'Mid tears and heart-wrung sighs.
Oh! do not for that angel weep,
Whose home is in the skies.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

ALAS!

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? Of course; but at the same time feel assured that in a measure he is to blame for the bad state into which he has fallen. A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. No mercury or deleterious drugs, not unpleasant to the taste, and always reliable—just such a remedy as you can pin your faith to without a shadow of disappointment. Read the testimonial, don't take our word for it:

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel, which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator which gave me relief, without any interruption to business." J. HUGG, Middleport, Ohio.

SANTA CLAUS SOAP—made only by N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Chicago.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO?

It is a solid handsome cake of scouring soap which has no equal for all cleaning purposes except in the laundry. To use it is to value it...

What will SAPOLIO do? Why it will clean paint, make oil-cloths bright, and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. It will take the grease off the dishes and off the pots and pans. You can scour the knives and forks with it, and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a clever housekeeper and try it.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles found herself sound and well, now does her own house work and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at Robbins & McCords drug store, large bottles 50c and $1. 2

The following letter from W. A. Thomson, of Columbus, Wis., is peculiarly interesting: "My wife," says he, "has been treated for her head, stomach, and nervous prostration by three doctors in New York, two in Chicago, one in Philadelphia, one in Cincinnati, and at the large institute in Buffalo for 16 months. They all failed. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine helped her wonderfully." A Young Man Cured.

Mr. John W. Webster, of Atlanta, Ga., says: I was confined to my bed with rheumatism for a month, part of the time I was unable to move myself, nor could I be moved by any one without severe pain. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was reccommended to my father. He bought me one bottle, and when I had taken about half of it I was sound and well, and am still so, and heartily recommend Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure. For sale by druggists at $1 per bottle. DRUNKENNESS—LIQUOR HABIT—In all the world there is but one cure, Dr. Haines' Golden Specific.

It can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it, effecting a speedy and permanent cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been cured who have taken the Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and today believe they quit drinking of their own free will. No harmful effect results from its administration. Cures guaranteed. Send for circular and full particulars. Address in confidence, GOLDEN SPECIFIC Co., 185 Race street, Cincinnati, O.

Now is the Time.

Now is the time when you need a medicine for that bad cough, remember to delay is dangerous, as most fatal cases of consumption have originated out of only a slight cough like yours. Why let that cough run on when you have a remedy like Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup within reach. No trouble to take it, and will positively cure any cough or cold. Sold by F. Davenport.

Effect of McKinley's Bill.

(Chicago Herald)

From all branches of the mercantile world the cry continues to go up against the McKinley bill, not simply because it interferes with the successful conduct of those branches for the dealer, but because every patron of the retail dealer is a sufferer by reason of the provisions of the measure. Here is a sample of the circulars which are being sent out by the biggest importers of musical instruments of the country:

"In consequence of the McKinley administrative bill having been passed by congress, also approved by the president of the United States, and which becomes a law in active operation on and after the first day of August, 1890; and, as to the provisions of this measure cause customs duties to be chargeable not only on the value of goods as heretofore, but also upon the value of cartons, packing cases, wrappings, etc., in addition to what was formerly charged; and as the importation costs as at present will be materially increased by the operation of the law above referred to, we are, therefore, compelled to advance our selling price to a proportionate extent from and after Aug. 4, 1890.

This advance is mutually agreed upon and ratified by the importers of musical merchandise of the United States."

This circular was shown to Emil Wulschuer, the big importer of musical goods on Pennsylvania st., last night, and he said:

"Oh, yes, that's right, I'm in on that, and I think that portion of the McKinley bill the purest nonsense. Not only does it charge us an increase of from 25 to 45 per cent., but we are compelled to pay that high rate on our invoice. You see, in the old countries they charge us for boxes, packing and cartage; they charge us sometimes as high as $6 and $8 for a box we couldn't sell here for 25 cents, and this bill makes us pay an additional charge of 45 per cent., duty on the cost of that box. Now every man in business is in it to make a profit. The cost of that box to us has added to the cost of the goods we sell, and the purchasers of these goods have to pay us that much more than they otherwise would, so you see the expense finally falls, on the consumer. If, however, by imposing this tax a great American industry was protected we could not complain so much, although even then the few would be benefited at the expense of the many; but such is not the case. The great bulk of our musical goods comes from the old countries, where they are more adept in the arts. For instance, I am the sole agent in the United States for a London make of band instruments, with which nothing made in this country pretends to compare. They are so much higher priced than American instruments that they do not come in competition with them, except when people are willing to pay a good deal more for a superior instrument. Of this class of goods I sold a cornet to-day for $160, which amount would buy several American cornets. Under the provisions of the McKinley bill I would have to sell that instrument at over $200 to make the same profit I now make. In order to get the sole agency for this goods I had to sign a five-year contract to take a certain number of instruments per year. If the law goes into effect it will be very hard on me, because there is a limit to even the most enthusiastic musician's pocket.

For Twenty Years.

Mr. Geo. Frank, ex-commissioner of Adams Co. Ind., says: I have had a bronchial cough for about 20 years and used all the different cough medicines, and found nothing that has given me so much relief as Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. I can heartily recommend it to all of those who are effected with a chronic cough and guarantee that it will give entire satisfaction. Yours,

GEO. FRANK.

SUBLIMEST TRAGEDY.

AWFULEST SCENE IN HUMAN HISTORY REPRODUCED.

Destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum by Volcanic Eruption—Story of That Awful Tragedy—How the Buried Cities Were Dug Out After Sixteen Hundred Years.

Pompeii was destroyed by an eruption of the volcano Vesuvius, in the year 79 after Christ. The city was very old and very rich. It was situated at the base of Vesuvius, within less than a mile of the present crater, upon the beautiful bay of Naples and the river Sarno. Herculaneum, a smaller place, was the seaport. Pompeii was surrounded by a wall with many towers, except toward the sea, where the wall was removed to allow the city to grow. At the time of its destruction Vesuvius for many centuries had been quiet. It was covered with vineyards, and its slopes were dotted with villas and cottages. The mountain bloomed with flowers. In the year 63 there was an earthquake that broke the pillars of the temples and so injured the public buildings that many were rebuilt, and some were still being repaired when the doom fell. But the earthquake was general all along the mountainous coast, and gave no sign. Nevertheless there were omens. For several months before the eruption now and then the river mysteriously boiled in places; cracks showed in the rocks of the mountains; some springs disappeared; some gave sulphurous smells; in the depths of a cave were heard mutterings in the earth; and a crevice showed fire and smoke. But all nature seemed so serene that none took alarm. In the amphitheater Christians were given to the wild beasts, and there were gladiatorial combats.

The city was small, but rich with public buildings. On the forum were the temple of Jupiter, partly ruined by the earthquake of 63; the Pantheon, or temple of the twelve gods; the Curia, or city senate hall; the Basilica, the largest building in the city. Four other temples were inside the walls. There were two theaters near together, and an amphitheater, 430x335 feet, with quarters for gladiators, etc.

Cassius writes that masses of people were in the theaters attending the plays and games. It was a lovely afternoon or early evening. Suddenly there was a horrible convulsion, attended by an awful roar. The whole top of Mt. Vesuvius heaved upward and broke off. The atmosphere seemed filled with fire. Buildings shook, and some crumbled. Everybody started to fly. The people ran out of the theaters, because no bones are found in them. There poured up from Vesuvius a mile high, that spread out at the top like a palm tree. In a moment the most impenetrable darkness fell, broken only by fearful flashes of lightning with incessant thunders. The river boiled, the sea heaved, the earth rocked, the heavens were blotted out, violent gusts and eddies of wind rushed fearfully about. The terrified multitudes rushed for the sea, hoping to escape in the shipping, or poured out of the gateways to fly, they knew not where. But now, all in another moment, stones and ashes fell out of the sky, and the city was buried 18 to 20 feet deep by small, hot stones, dust and ashes. Herculaneum was buried still deeper under tuff (lava cooled into light pumice in the air) and ashes. This was so sudden that the process of uncovering the ruins has found the skeletons of victims in all shapes—the miser, buried just as he was flying out of his door with a bag of gold; the servant maid who lingered a moment to rob her mistress' room of a jewel that she died clutching. The destruction on the mountain slopes was still swifter. In one villa were found 17 skeletons still inside the building. But most of outside of the city walls. After the fall of ashes came the flow of lava. So vast was the mass that the sea was filled, and the shore is now a mile distant from the ancient wharves, and the bed of the river is two miles from where it then flowed. Ships fifty miles away, writes Pliny, had their decks covered with three inches of sand and ashes. Sixty miles away, the sun the next morning was totally hidden by dust. Vesuvius changed its shape.

For several days the mountain and vicinity were unapproachable. When, at last, the dense and terrible clouds blew away, and the earth ceased shaking, and the surface cooled, and the mountain fires cease to spout high in the air, and men could approach, the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum, the flower and vine-blooming mountain, the rich villas, the temples and palaces were all buried, and the scene so changed that none could tell where their graves were.

So for over sixteen centuries the lost cities lay forgotten and unknown. Then, in 1748, in digging a well, some peasants broke through the chamber of a palace. Their find excited much attention; and it was at once suspected that they had discovered the site of the buried cities that the learned Cluverius had vainly searched for the previous century. In 1755 systematic operations were begun to dig out the buried cities. This has continued ever since.

In 1861 the Italian government took up the work; and, under Signor Florelli, it has been reduced to a system. The ashes of Pompeii packed close about their victims and preserved everything, even the most fragile articles. The picks of the excavators often broke into the moulds of men and animals. Plaster of paris was poured in and thus casts were taken of men, women and children, cats, dogs, rats, etc., just as they died. But the grandest figure of all is that of still standing erect at his post, with grimly resolute features. If this devotion was merely discipline, it would not be so admirable. Strong and armed, he might have escaped, and could do no good guarding a prison, a temple, or a post. But, probably, the brave fellow was heroically trying to save the people by keeping order and crying out at the gate, so as to give the women and children and all an equal chance to find and get through the narrow space, when a great mountain of ashes fell upon him.

At the Detroit International Fair and Exposition, the greatest pyrotechnic drama ever produced, The Last Days of Pompeii, with an immense quantity of fireworks, will be produced nightly as a free exhibition. Its cost is over $2,000 per night. It has a complete dramatic company, and shows the gladiators in the amphitheater, the thronged palaces and temples, and the sudden overwhelming by the mountain, which is part of the scene, and the mad rush to escape. Be sure and see this sublimest and most exciting spectacular play ever exhibited.

Old Time R. R. Kickers.

(Goshen Democrat.)

Here is a song handed to us by the venerable Adam Swartzbaugh, of Goshen. It was gotten up some 60 years ago, when the first railroads were just built in portions of the east. The opposition to voting aid is a little different now-a-days, and we give the following to show the contrast between then and now:

THE WAGONERS' CURSE ON RAILROADS.

Tune—"Green on the Capes,"

Come all ye bold wagoners, turn out man by man,
That's opposed to the railroads, or any such plan;
Its' once I made money by driving of my team,
But the goods are now hauled on the railroads by steam.

May the Devil get the fellow that invented the plan,
It will ruin the poor wagoners, and every honest man;
It spoils our plantations, wherever it does cross,
And it ruins our market, we can't sell a horse.

If we go to Philadelphia, inquiring for a load,
They will tell us directly, "it's gone on the railroad;"
The rich folks the plan may justly admire,
But it ruins us poor wagoners, and makes taxes higher.

Our States they're in debt, to keep them in repair,
Which causes us poor wagoners to curse and to swear;
It ruins poor mechanics, what think you of it then?
And it fills our country full of fighting Irishmen.

It ruins our landlords, and makes their business worse,
And upon every nation it has been a curse;
It ruins wheelwrights, blacksmiths and every other trade,
And it damns all the railroads, that ever have been made.

The ships they come in with Irishmen by loads,
With their picks and their shovels to work on the railroads;
When they get on the railroads, its then they are fix'd,
They'll fight like the Devil, with their cudgels and their sticks.

They violate our laws, and our officers defy,
Appealing to their clubs all other rule deny;
Saying Shelalahs, damn your eyes, is the only Judge we know,
And be Jasus knock 'em down and lay the buggers low.

The Americans with safety can schrely ever pass.
For they'll black both his eyes for a word of his sauce;
If it wasn't for the torment I'd as leave be in hell,
As upon the railroad or upon the canal.

Come all ye bold wagoners, who have got good wives,
Go home to your farms, and there spend your lives;
When your corn it is cribb'd and your small grain is sow'd,
Then you've nothing else to do but to damn the railroads.

Obituary.

Maple, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Harkey died July 17, 1890 at the tender age of 4 months, and 21 days. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Cedar Chapel, in Butler township July 19, Rev. Mr. Hens of the Lutheran church at Avilla officiating.

Dearest Maple thou has left us,
Thou art numbered with the blest:
Never shall thou know a sorrow,
Sweet and peaceful be thy rest.

Weep not, dear friends, and parents,
To God your sorrow tell;
Although your loss you deeply feel,
He doeth all things well.

Far too sweet, fair and lovely
For this wicked world was she;
She has crossed the silver waters,
With God to dwell eternally.

On the golden shore she's waiting,
And a starry crown she wears,
Where we all soon hope to meet her,
And free from all our cares.

Then Maple dear has passed away,
She sleeps where grasses wave;
Where summer flowers will sweetly bloom
Above her lonely grave.

Then cease fond parents, cease to weep,
But with submission bow;
And think, oh, think, with grateful hearts
She is in heaven now.

Picnics.

Almost any boy or girl can tell you what a picnic is like, but I wonder how many know why it is so called, or that the custom is said to date only from 1802, not a hundred years ago.

Then, as now, when such an entertainment was being arranged for, it was customary that those who intended to be present should supply the eatables and drinkables. Originally the plan was to draw up a list of what was necessary, which is an excellent one to follow, for often, when there has been no previous agreement, it is discovered, when too late, that there is too much of one kind of food and not enough of another.

The list was passed round, and each picked out the article of food or drink he or she was willing to furnish, and the name of the article was then nicked off the list. So it was from these two words, picked and nicked, that this form of out-of-door entertainment first became known as a "pick-and-nick," and then as a picnic, the old-fashioned name for the basket parties of to-day.—Harper's Young People.

A Fortunate Woman.

Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., has reason to be very thankful. She was a great sufferer from heart disease for years. Was short of breath, had hungry spells, pain in side, fluttering, faintness etc. After taking two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, she says, "I am better than for twenty years. My mind and eyesight have improved wonderfully, I advise all persons thus afflicted to use this great remedy." F. E. Davenport the druggist, recommends and guarantees it. THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World—Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

An Awful Crash.

London special: An accident occurred at Atherstone, Warwickshire, injuring a great many people but providentially killing none. An immense grand stand had been erected from which to view the military tournament in progress at that place, and at the time of the accident it was occupied by 15,000 people, while 10,000 more were closely packed on either side. Suddenly a crash was heard and a section of the stand fell, carrying with it over a thousand spectators. It was fortunate that the fall was not very great, as many people might have been killed, but as it was a large number of them were injured, some of them seriously. When the crash came the immense throng became panic stricken and trampled upon the prostrate ones in their frantic endeavors to escape from danger, the extent of which they were not aware of. Several cool-headed men were successful in allaying the fears of the fleeing ones, and turned them back to render assistance to the injured ones. Dr. Parke, the surgeon of Stanley's exhibition, was present, and he, with several local physicians, dressed the wounds of the injured.

Kentucky Battle.

A desperate fight occurred at Burnside, Ky., in which pistols were freely used. Police Judge Smith, and John Chestnut, and Town Marshal Coomer were seriously injured. The Chestnuts had become intoxicated and were trying to take the town, when the Marshal attempted to arrest them. He warned them not to come near, as they were armed to the teeth. The Marshal secured the judges assistance. They then drew their revolvers and fired. The Chestnut men at the same time discharged their weapons, the result being that all the principals were more or less wounded. Excitement is at fever heat, and further trouble is feared, as friends of the Chestnuts swear that they will make things warm for the Marshal.

A Suspicious Case.

Springfield (Ohio) special: The city is excited over a possible case of murder by poisoning, a case savoring strongly of foul play. Christian Frantz, a highly-respected citizen of Clark County, died. During his illness his wife protested most vehemently to calling a doctor, and would give the sick man no care at all. Dr. Lisle will soon complete the autopsy. The stomach is yet under the action of chemicals. Traces of arsenic have been developed, but Dr. Lisle says they may have been due to the embalming fluid. It is stated that on several occasions the unnatural sons have made the venerable patriarch march up and down a floor at the point of a gun just for amusement, and that he was often deprived of his meals.

Costly Incendiary Blaze.

Fire was discovered in Rohen & Wildner's furniture factory at 420 and 422 Maxwell street, Chicago. The flame spread so rapidly that the entire property was destroyed, involving a loss of $75,000. The firm carried no insurance and their loss is complete. It is not definitely known whether the fire started in the factory or the barn adjoining, which was also destroyed, but Mr. Rohen is firmly convinced that a recently discharged employe is responsible for it. Two fine horses were roasted to death in their stalls.

Absenteeism to be Punished.

A Washington paper says Major Holmes, Sergeant-at-arms of the House, said that he had not yet received orders to dock absent members of their pay, but admitted that there is a great probability that such a course may be taken if certain members notorious for their absenteeism persist in absenting themselves without leave, although protecting their vote by private pairs. This dockage will be the last resort to compel attendance and secure and hold a quorum. It has not been enforced for many years.

A Boy Poisoned.

Charley Rocks, son of Samuel Rocks, of Jackson, Ohio, died from an overdose of morphine. The boy was taken with cholera morbus. Dr. Tuttle, of Crofton, was called to attend him. The doctor prepared his prescription on a table. In some way a paper containing the morphine slipped from his case. Some time after the boy's mother filled a teaspoonful from the paper and gave it to the child. It was nearly six hours before the mistake was discovered when the little fellow was past all aid.

Manitoba Wheat Fields Destroyed.

Fuller accounts of the damage done in Manitoba by the storm have been received, and show the loss to the wheat crop to be greater than at first reported. At Deloraine, 200 miles south of Winnipeg, the hail belt is said to have been four townships wide, narrowing down to a mile and a half as it proceeded eastward, leaving destruction in its wake, one hundred thousand acres of wheat having been totally ruined.

Fatal Error of a Young Girl.

Amelia Kerhoff, an accomplished girl living near Humboldt, Ia., accidentally shot herself through the heart while attempting to take a forty-eight caliber self-acting revolver from a pocket in her brother's coat. She was just 20 years old.

Quaker Preacher Killed.

The Rev. Exam Cox, aged 60 years, a quaker preacher at Coloma, Ind., was killed by a train at Leatherwood, crossing of the Indianapolis, Decatur & Western Railroad. He leaves a wife and six children.

A Boy Drowned.

Hoadley Vicroy, a 5-year-old boy, was drowned in the Miami River, below Miamisburg, Ohio. Another boy with him was rescued after nearly drowning.

A BRAVE ACT.

An Express Train Saved from Destruction by a Woman's Thoughtfulness.

Mrs. Emily Branson, of North Wakefield, N. H., saved the Boston & Maine express train from a serious disaster. A terrific storm of wind and rain was raging, but the heavy train was running at high speed in an endeavor to make up lost time. Hardly had the North Wakefield station been left behind when the engineer saw a woman upon the track just ahead of him frantically waving a white cloth. The train was stopped, with the cowcatcher almost in front of the woman. "The track around the curve is all covered with trees," she said. "I came toward you to warn you." Just ahead there was a turn in the track so sharp that after an obstruction upon it had come into the engineer's view, no human power could have prevented an accident. Mrs. Branson said that from her house near the track she saw the wind hurl several huge trees across the rails. She was alone with her two children, but she knew that the express was due, and that the trees were on such a curve that they would be hidden from sight until it was too later. "I hated to leave my children alone in the storm," said she, "but I knew there was nothing else to be done. So I caught up a towel and ran out to meet the train."

ADRIFT AMONG ICEBERGS.

Terrible Experience of a Shipwrecked Crew.

A special from Quebec, Can., says: The bark Askow, from Hamburg, which has arrived here had on board Capt. Anderson, the mate, and four of the crew of the Norwegian bark Speranza, which was sunk off the Grand Banks in collision with an iceberg. Capt. Anderson, in his story of the accident, says: The ship had several very close shaves, and one day did actually run into an iceberg, but without doing any great damage. The incident made them more cautious. Two nights afterward, when in a thick fog, a stiff northwest wind blowing, and the vessel making very good time, she ran plump into an iceberg as tall as her spars and, Capt. Anderson believes, fully a mile long. He says it was running into the face of a cliff. The bark's bows were crushed in as if she were an egg shell, and before those aboard could collect their senses the vessel began settling in the water. Capt. Anderson gave orders to work the pumps, but only a half-dozen strokes had been taken before it was found that to save their lives the crew must desert the ship immediately. One side of the vessel was still crunching against the side of the berg, and the foretopmast with its rigging and the forward yards were strung over both bows, where they had fallen when the vessel struck. The watch below rushed out of the forecastle in their trousers and shirts when the shock came, and all hands at once took to the two boats. The second mate took command of the smaller boat, while the Captain and the first mate, with three others of the crew took the larger boat. The smaller boat has not been seen since the day after the collision, three weeks ago, and they are all thought to be lost. The Captain's boat had very little provisions in it, and the next morning an attempt was made to lay a course for the Newfoundland coast. But they had apparently struck the eastern edge of a great field of ice and icebergs, for they rowed and sailed about for three days in the fog and ice before finding a passage safe enough to justify their going on toward the coast. The small boat became separated from them in the fog, and was probably crushed to pieces among the great bergs. Capt. Anderson's boat had many narrow escapes, but weathered them all safely. On the sixth day starvation stared them in the face. They had cleared the icebergs, but their provisions and water were nearly all gone. On the eighth day the last drop of water gave out, but on the afternoon of the ninth day the Askow hove in sight and picked up the unfortunate men. A boy in the Captain's boat had his feet badly frozen, and the seamen were all more or less exhausted by their privation and intense cold.

Count Le Archeville Publicly Castigated.

Chicago special: There was quite a sensation enacted in front of the Palmer House by the attack of two women, who used horse whips in a most skilled manner upon the alleged Count Le Archeville Le Verdaille. The pedestrians were startled by hearing the words: "Take that, and that," and a moment later there was a sound of stinging blows, and the sudden disappearance of the alleged count around the corner. At his heels were the two women, who rained showers of blows upon the big man's head, neck, and back. Through stores, through alleys, across streets his coat tails beating a wild tattoo around his shoulders, his mustache distended, his eyes lighted up by a baleful fire, flew the large man. Hundreds of men and boys chased after him, and a sigh of regret went up from the crowd when his coat tails disappeared like magic through a rear door in the Palmer House. The women were Mrs. Price and sister, who claim to have been cruelly imposed on by the alleged count.

Almost a Lynching.

Racine (Wis.) special: Adam Young, a tramp telegraph operator, was dragged through the streets with a rope around his neck, by an enraged mob that was looking for a place to hang him. He is about twenty-six years of age, and says his home is in Emmettsville, Ind. He arrived in town in search of work, but got drunk, and then went around begging for food. He applied at the house of Rev. Father Fessler. The priest, perceiving the man's condition, ordered him off the premises. Instead of going he waded into the divine. Before the latter could dodge, the tramp struck him on the neck. The priest ran out of the back door with Young in pursuit. He was overtaken by his assailant, knocked down, pounded on the face and his nose smashed. By this time a crowd had congregated. Some one shouted "Hang the brute." A rope was placed around the neck of the tramp, and but for the timely arrival of policemen he would have been dangling in the air from a large tree near by.

Rossa in a New Business.

New York special: Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, the once ferocious advocate of dynamite and physical force, whose very name has been for years a terror to the British people, has become a traveling salesman. He admits that since the present hot spell came in there has been a decided slump in the dynamite business and he has given such unmistakable evidence of his desire to turn from thoughts of blood and war to the pursuits of peace, that Francis B. Thurber has taken pity upon Jerry and given him a birth in his big establishment down in West Broadway. Rossa is now engaged and has been for the last two weeks in a strictly legitimate business enterprise, that of selling cigars and other specialties dealt in by Thurber's firm to his friends and acquaintances upon the usual commission basis, as Mr. Thurber says.

A Family Set-to

Wilkesbarre (Pa.) special: Judge Woodward has refused to grant a divorce to Henry D. Spencer. His deposition was that his wife, Sarah, knocked him down, split his lip, blackened his eye and tried to choke him while asleep. The husband weighs 121 pounds and his wife 214. The defendant denied the charge and said her husband was worthless and let her attend to all business. One day she challenged him to be a man or get out. It was decided to settle the difficulty with bare fists in the parlor. The woman came out first best, knocking her husband out in the fourth round. Mrs. Spencer then said: "Now I am boss, and am going to run the business." Spencer got mad and sued for divorce. The parties are well connected.

Fire Among Oil.

A disastrous fire broke out on the Watt farm, two miles south of Lima, Ohio. The farm is owned by the Buckeye (Standard) Pipe Line Company, and is filled with 35,000 barrel oil tanks. The farm is surrounded by a field of hay, which the hot weather has cooked dry, and it took fire from a spark from a passing engine. The fire spread rapidly and threatened the destruction of the tanks, and the company called out 100 men to fight the flames, which consumed everything in the field and got among the iron tanks and threatened serious trouble, but after many hours fighting the flames were subdued. The loss is about $5,000, and is total, including damage to the tanks.

A Terrific Tornado.

Hammond (Ind.) special: The damage in the town by the late storm was great. Huge trees were torn up and carried away, fences swept out of existence, orchards obliterated and everything in the path of the tempest destroyed. The rotary velocity of the wind was terrific and it progressed forward at a rate of sixty miles an hour. The west wing of the building leased by the Chicago Axe Company, was blown over and completely destroyed. The roof of the Lutheran Church was badly damaged. The ice house at Wolf Lake, owned by the G. H. Hammer Company, two miles from here, was lifted from its foundation and destroyed, and it is reported that several people who sought shelter there were killed and injured. A man named Fisher was struck by flying timber and his leg broken and he was internally injured.

Desperate Safe Blowers.

Burglars entered Coles' brewery at Peru, Ind., to blow the safe. On people reaching the brewery they found John Lewis lashed to a bench unconscious from a severe blow on the head at the hands of two men who had entered the place for the purpose of blowing the safe. Watchman Wendell Biel, hearing the noise started to learn the trouble, when he was met at the head of the stairs as he was coming from the bottling rooms. He was assaulted with a wagon spoke in the hands of a large man. The first blow not being sufficient to fell him, he was repeatedly struck over the head, receiving no less than nine terrible wounds, one a gash seven inches long across the side of the head and face, which fractured his skull. Both injured men are in a critical condition. The burglars have not been found.

The New Squadron.

New York special: Commodore Wm. P. McCane has taken command of the newly South Atlantic squadron, and becomes Rear Admiral by the appointment of Secretary Tracy by hoisting his flag on the old sloop-of-war Pensacola. The ceremonies were entirely official. The officers and crew were assembled on the quarter deck in full dress uniform; the new commandant read his orders of appointment and then his broad pennant was hoisted at mizzen and saluted with thirteen guns and two long ruffles of the drum. The vessel will probably sail for her station in about a week unless it is ordered that she, with part of the squadron, shall accompany the Baltimore, with the President on board, to Boston.

Jay Gould to Purchase the Grand Palace of Chapultepec.

A San Antonia special says: The report has reached here from the city of Mexico that the famous and magnificent Castle of Chapultepec, which is one of the grandest and most imposing structures of its kind in the world, is about to be sold to Jay Gould. The castle is owned by the Mexican Government. Mr. Gould, during his visit to that country a few months ago, made an offer, it is said, of $5,000,000 for it. The offer was at that time refused, but as report now has it, the Government has, after consideration, decided to accept it. If the castle is purchased Mr. Gould and family, so the rumor goes, will make it their winter home.

North Dakota Republicans.

On the ticket nominated by the North Dakota Republican State Convention are: Governor, A. H. Burke; Lieutenant Governor, Roger Allin; Congress, M. N. Johnson; Auditor, John P. Brack; Treasurer, L. E. Barker, Secretary of State, John Flitter; Attorney General, C. A. M. Spencer; Superintendent of Public Instruction, John Ogden; Commissioner of Agriculture, H. T. Helmson. In the platform a reduction of duty on binding twine from 2¾ cents to 1¼ cents is wanted; Blaine's reciprocity policy is endorsed, and an amendment to the McKinley bill relating to sugar and agricultural products is approved.

"Ratted" the Office.

The proprietors of the Evening Herald, Nashville, Tenn., notified their force of union compositors that their services were no longer required, and have put on a complete force of "rats." The Evening Herald was started Jan. 1, 1889, by Col. D. Cooper, who had an understanding with the printers that one-third of their wages was to be paid in stock of the paper, which the printers accepted. Some time ago the Herald asked permission from the Nashville Typographical Union to use plates, which was refused, and they locked their doors on the men. The Typographical Union will immediately begin a vigorous boycott.

Crop Ruined in Central Kansas.

It is admitted at last by all that the corn crop of Central Kansas is ruined. No matter how much rain falls, hot winds have blown for so long that stalks are shriveled. Only local rains have fallen for over a month, and the prairies are so dry that fires break out daily. The hay crop is an entire failure as well as the fruit crop. A large acreage of wheat will be put in if it rains enough to plow. Stock is being rushed to market in fear of lack of food. The drought is considered the most severe in twelve years, and there is no sign of its being broken.

To Defend the Island from Wreckers.

Halifax (N. S.) special: Cabled instructions were received by naval authorities ordering that Her Majesty's ship Comus shall instantly proceed to Anticosti to drive off the piratical wreckers who are plundering the wreck of the steamship Idaho of its valuable cargo. An Ottawa dispatch states that the Canadian cruiser Wakeham was sent to the wreck, but her officers and crew failed to drive off the wreckers, who, numbering nearly one hundred, are exceedingly bold and laughed at the commander of the cruiser.

Land Rights of Aliens.

The old principle that an alien cannot acquire public lands under any of the land laws was asserted by Secretary Noble in a decision rendered in the appeal case brought by Henry Booth and James P. Robson, who had located homestead and pre-emptive entries in lands within the grant of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in the Salt Lake City land district, Utah. The Secretary denied the appeal, holding that the settlement and residence of an alien upon the lands does not except the same from the grant.

A Big Strike in Prospect.

Pittsburgh special: Two strikes, involving over ten thousand men, are threatened within the next two weeks. Next week about four hundred plasterers will go out on a strike for the control of the apprentices. The strike will cut off all work in the building trades and will throw 7,000 men out of employment. Unless their demands for a nine-hour day and Saturday half-holiday are granted 3,500 machinists working in the seventy shops in Pittsburgh and vicinity will also quit work.

Fleeced Men for Millions.

S. W. Gill, the lawyer, who some years ago fleeced several Pittsburghers out of over half a million of dollars is said to have been found in Colorado. His adventures have been very remarkable. When he left Pittsburgh he spent a year in Brazil, where he succeeded in stealing another half million. A journey to Europe followed with similar results. Detectives from three different countries were on Gill's track.

Poisoned an Entire Family.

The attempt of a colored preacher named W. H. Boone, in Gordon County, Georgia, to poison a family of ten persons, three of whom he succeeded in killing, has created intense excitement, and the prisoner and his wife are carefully guarded in the jail. Boone put rat poison in the food of a colored family named Lalley. Boone puts the crime on his wife, saying she was jealous of Mrs. Lalley's affection for him. The wife accuses her husband, saying he sought to obtain possession of Lalley's crop. The other victims are not yet out of danger.

Town Sacked.

San Antonio (Texas) special: An attack was made on the town of Shafter, Presidio County, Texas, by twenty-five Mexicans. State Ranger J. F. Graves was killed and Sheriff Lee seriously wounded while endeavoring to arrest the Mexicans. A posse of rangers and deputy sheriffs have left Marfa to capture the marauders. It is reported that Shafter was sacked and burned. No further particulars have been received here.

School Book Bids Rejected.

The Ohio State School Book Commission rejected all bids received from publishers for furnishing school books, and determined to take no further action until the defects in the law of last winter can be remedied at the next session of the Legislature. State School Commissioner Hancock will notify all Boards of Education in the State to continue the books now in use.

Grief Awaits Her.

John J. Roberts, a chainmaker in the employ of the Briggs Rolling Mills at Findlay, O., was run over and instantly killed by the midnight passenger train on the Lake Erie and Western road. A sad feature connected with his death is the fact that his mother left Liverpool, England, last Sunday, to join her son in Findlay, and is expected soon. Roberts was about twenty-six years old and unmarried.

Caterpillars After the Cotton.

Millions of caterpillars have invaded the fields in Texas, and planters and farmers are busy poisoning them. They are reported very bad along the Brazos River, and it may be that the cotton crop of that State will be seriously injured. The pests are at least three weeks earlier than usual and they are in great numbers and make the atmosphere very offensive with their peculiar odor.

No Sympathy for Counterfeiters.

"It would be a good thing, madam, for your father and the people of this country," said Chief Brooks, of the United States secret service, "if he would die in the penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio." The young woman addressed was the daughter of Pete McCarthey, "king of the counterfeiters." Miss McCarthey came to ask pardon for her father.

Pool Room War Over.

The pool room war at Chicago is at an end. Down town bookmakers decided to close as the city officials threatened to jail every one and destroy their furniture if they did not immediately quit. It is more probable, however, that a truce has been effected between the west side race track people and the down town rooms.

Will Go to the People.

The joint resolution to amend the Constitution of Illinois so as to enable Chicago to issue $5,000,000 in bonds for World's Fair purposes, has passed both houses of the Legislature and has been sent to the Governor for his proclamation to the people submitting it for approval or rejection at the November elections.

A Boy Fatally Burned.

Coldwater (Mich.) special: Willie Sharp, a 15-year-old boy, fell in a fit and knocked over a kerosene lamp. The oil caught fire and the lad was so badly burned that he will die. William Sharp, the boy's father, attempted to extinguish the flames and was frightfully burned. Sharp is a prominent business man here.

Alabama State Election.

The Alabama State election passed off quietly. Indications point to a large Democratic majority, only a light Republican vote being polled. The Legislature elected will elect a successor to Senator Pugh. Thomas G. Jones is the new Governor.

Made Homeless by Fire.

Forty-one dwelling-houses were destroyed by fire in Braddock, Pa., and more than three hundred persons were, for the time being, rendered homeless. The loss on buildings and household goods will aggregate $60,000. The insurance is estimated at $25,000.

Fremont's Will.

The will of Gen. Fremont was offered for probate in the Surrogate Court at New York, where it had been deposited according to the statute many years before. It was executed August 19, 1854, and leaves the entire estate to his widow.

Two Families Poisoned.

The families of Paul and Elias Brent, of Kirkwood, Ill., were poisoned by eating beef tongue for breakfast. All are still in a critical condition, and it is not thought by the physicians in attendance that Mrs. Elias Brent can recover.

A Battle with a Blacksnake.

E. M. Baldwin, an estimable citizen of Martinsville, was out fishing a day or two ago with some friends from Indianapolis. He was walking along the water's edge, in quest of a better place to fish, when he had to pass under the overhanging boughs of a buckeye tree. When under these he felt something drop on his shoulder. Thinking it a dead limb he passed on through the tall horse-weeds. Nor did he notice that the "dead limb" was a real live blacksnake until it began to tighten its coil about his arm and swish its tail angrily about his face, and hiss. Dropping his minnow-pail and other paraphernalia, he endeavored to throw the reptile off, but without success. It brought a second coil about his neck, and he was beginning to wheeze for breath before he thought of a heavy clasp-knife he had luckily brought with him. With his disengaged right hand he succeeded in getting the knife open, and amputated his snakeship a few inches back of the ears. Not a moment too soon, however, for the snake had already bitten him three times on the hand, and Baldwin was getting weak. The autopsy held by Baldwin and his Indianapolis friends disclosed that the snake stood six foot four in his stockings, and measured nine inches around the waist. The bite of a blacksnake not being very poisonous, Eben sustained no further injury than a severe scare and a slightly sore hand.

Minor State Items.

—The Sunday-schools of Montgomery County will hold a union convention at the Shades of Death on August 22.

—John Candes, of Indian Creek Township, Monroe County, fell in front of a mower he was driving and was fatally mangled.

—At South Whitley, Mrs. A. Bunce and her young son were seriously injured by being thrown from a buggy in which they were driving.

—Two men were killed and others injured by the bursting of a boiler at the Sand Creek Lime Stone Quarry, two miles south of Greensburg.

—A movement is on foot to establish a creamery at Crawfordsville. It will take $108,000 worth of cream per annum to supply the capacity of the works.

—William McClelland, who had resided in Montgomery County since 1823, died at the age of 84. He was a native of Pennsylvania and was a Universalist.

—The 7-year-old son of William Stewart, living south of Brazil, fell from a tree, breaking an arm and injuring him internally, which may result seriously.

—Robert Mitchell, aged 72, was found dead in a corn-crib on his premises, about three miles beyond Canan, Jefferson County. Apoplexy is supposed to have been the cause of death.

—Mate Quidore, for thirty-five years on the Wabash road, dropped dead from heart disease at Fort Wayne. He leaves a widow and two sons. Quidore was widely known among railroad men.

—As an express train East on the Fort Wayne road was leaving the station at Fort Wayne, Richard Horn, a traveling salesman from Cleveland, tried to get on the train, but was thrown under the wheels, and so badly injured that he will die.

—A team belonging to James Baker, of Jamestown, got frightened at a threshing-machine, near New Ross, and ran away, throwing Baker out and into a barbed-wire fence. Three of the wires were broken, and he was badly cut in the neck and on the hand.

—A small boy named Smith was killed at Cordonia. He was playing with a number of children in the road when a loose horse passed by. Wheeling quickly, when the party was reached, the horse kicked at the Smith boy, striking at the back of the head, breaking his neck and causing instant death.

—During the progress of an Indian show at Bloomington a crowd of boys got into a quarrel, in which B. A. Shaw and a colored boy named White were the principal participants. Some words followed, when Shaw drew a revolver and shot White, inflicting what will likely prove a fatal wound. Shaw has left.

—At Brazil Lafe Johnson, a 14-year-old boy, while stealing a ride on the Pea Vine, a part of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, jumped from the rear end of the caboose, while the train was making thirty-five miles an hour, alighting upon his head and crushing his skull, from the effects of which he died in a few minutes. The conductor, it is said, had much to do with his jumping.

—While Elliott Palmer was threshing oats near Rushville, a spark from the engine set fire to a wagon-load of oats. The horses became unmanageable, and ran off, running the fiery load into a straw-stack, firing that and the thresher. The horses were badly scorched, as were Elliott Palmer and John Cassidy in trying to unhitch the team from the burning lot. A large lot of hay also caught fire and burned. Total loss, about $1,500.

—The District Convention of the Good Templars of the counties of Benton, White, Tippecanoe, Clinton, Montgomery, Fountain, Vermillion and Putnam will be held at Lafayette on August 19 and 20.

—Nannie, the young daughter of Joseph Young, a farmer near Windfall, was very seriously if not fatally injured by being thrown from a buggy. Her shoulder and arm were broken, the latter in two places. She was otherwise seriously hurt.

—Another casting-hall, 180x360 feet, has been added to the Diamond plate-glassworks at Kokomo, giving employment to two hundred additional workmen. This mammoth industry gives constant employment to a force of eight hundred operatives.

—Hon. P. S. Kennedy has been employed by the City Council of Crawfordsville to look up the law and water-works ordinance, and ascertain what can be done in regard to the insufficient supply of water at the late two disastrous fires. Also, to see if any of the parties burned out can bring action for damages.

—Jacob Markle, a young farmer living in Adams Township, in Madison County, was driving home on a load of logs in a severe thunder-storm, and, when near Whitechapel Church, Markle, with one of his horses, was instantly killed by lightning. He leaves a young wife, to whom he was married four weeks ago.

—Muskrats have become so numerous in the vicinity of what is known as Nagle's ice-pond, a mile north of Jeffersonville, and have become so destructive to growing corn that William Frank and others have employed a man to shoot the animals. They invade a field of growing corn and carry off the tender ears. The little pests are quite vicious, and will show fight when their houses are attacked by man.

—Some twenty carpenters were engaged in putting in large girders at the Atlas Engine Works, Indianapolis, when the supports gave way and three girders fell to the ground, carrying the men with them. E. L. Long was badly crushed about the shoulders and breast, and is fatally hurt. Caleb Ernest received fatal internal injuries, and Peter Alba, Allen Harris and a colored man were seriously injured.

—Fred Butler, a young clerk in a clothing store at Garrett, has got into trouble for inducing a 15-year-old girl, named Edith Young, to go to Adrian, Mich., with him and get married. The youthful's bride's parents have now taken a hand in the matter, and have Miss Young securely locked in her room at Garrett, while her husband, young Butler, languisheth in the city bastile, arrested for swearing falsely about her age.

—A Lake Shore freight train was attacked by tramps the other night near South Bend. Brakeman Charles Miller was killed, but not until he had slain his assailant. The name of the latter is unknown. The Lake Shore is having trouble with an apparently organized band of tramps. Of late several trains have been attacked and several of the trainmen seriously injured. It is probable that an effort will be made to break up the gang.

—Jerry Oakley, a Constable of Howard Township, Howard County, was accidentally shot by his brother-in-law, who was trying to extract the bullets from an old revolver The ball entered Oakley's back near the shoulder-blade, and lodged in the left breast. Oakley was holding his infant child in his arms at the time, its head lying over the spot where the bullet lodged. Oakley lies in a precarious condition and will probably die. The family is distracted over the sad occurrence.

—A little town is to be at once started on James W. Ball's farm, on the southern extension of the C., W. & M. Railroad, about half way between Carthage and Rushville. By a contract with the railroad officials they get a long side-track and a neat depot. They will endeavor to establish a postoffice and a big general store, and other branches of business will be established. The station is to be called Henderson, after Mrs. Ida (Ball) Henderson, sister of Mrs. Ball, who is the originator of the project.

—David Logan, sr., of Fairfield, seized a sharp ax and attempted to chop off his left hand. He succeeded in breaking the bones and severing the tendons, making it necessary for the member to be amputated. As he is nearly ninety-four year of age, he will probably not survive the operation. He was one among the earliest settlers of the Whitewater Valley, and has accumulated considerable property, but for some weeks has fancied that he was coming to want and expressed a desire not to live longer, and a close watch has been kept upon his actions, his relatives being fearful that he would attempt suicide.

—At Liberty, a barn belonging to M. Gleason was discovered in flames, and the building was almost consumed befor it was noticed that little Louie Gleason, aged 4 years, was missing. A hasty search failed to reveal his whereabouts, and anxious workers at once began to pull out the burning timbers on the supposition that the child had met death in the fire. The horrible truth was revealed when the charred and blackened remains were discovered near one corner of the building. It is supposed that he started the fire himself and was then too frightened too make his escape. He was a beautiful curly-headed child, the idol of his parents, who are grief-stricken and almost distracted.

—A notorious desperate character, Jesse Trublood, in jail at Sullivan for larceny and wife-beating, escaped the other day. Deputy Sheriff Mills went in to clean the cells in the morning, and came out leaving the door to Trublood's cell unlocked so he could walk out into the corridor of the jail. Trublood made a dummy by stuffing a suit of his clothes with bed-clothes, laid it on the bed, threw a paper over the head of it, and went out into the corridor and hid. When Mills went in to take the prisoners water in the afternoon he went into Trublood's cell, and seeing him, as he thought, lying on the bed asleep, went out and locked the door to Trublood's cell, but left the main entrance door to the corridor of the jail unlocked, and Trublood quietly gave them the slip. A reward of $100 is offered for his capture.

—Burt Gibbens, aged 22, Jesse Stewart, aged 19, and Smith Miller went bathing at the lower bar at Rising Sun. Gibbens and Stewart were both drowned, and Miller was saved after sinking the third time.

—John Fitzgibbons, an old and well-known Irish citizen of Greencastle, was run over and killed by the west-bound I. & St. L. express. He was leading a couple of cows across the track, near the depot, and to save the cows lost his own life.

—George Krapt, one of the veteran engineers on the St. Louis division of the Big Four, was killed in the yards of the Evansville and Terre Haute road at Terre Haute. He had gone to the E. & T. H. yards to do some switching, and a switching train of the E. & T. H. struck his engine in such a manner as to crush him between his engine and the tank. He lived but twenty minutes after taken from the wreck. He was an active member of division No. 25 of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and from that organization his family will receive $3,000 insurance benefit.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

In the Senate, on the 29th ult., Mr. Sherman offered a resolution, which went over, for the daily meeting of the Senate at 10 a. m. The Senate Committee on Judiciary has practically concluded its consideration of the bill for the relief of the Supreme Court and will report it to the Senate in a few days. In the House, Mr. Cannon (Illinois), from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution providing temporarily (until Aug. 14) for such of the expenditures of the Government as have not been provided for by the appropriation bills which have already become laws. Passed. The House then went into committee of the whole, Mr. Burrows (Mich.) in the chair, on the Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. The House Committee on Indian affairs has decided to recommend that the House non-concur in all of the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and ask a conference. The House Committee on Commerce has ordered a favorable report on the bill providing for a steam vessel at Chicago, to cost $28,000, to be used under the direction of the Treasury to board and inspect incoming vessels. Representative Farquhar of New York has introduced a bill to create a commission, to be known as the United States Commission of the World's Congress of Labor, to consist of nine members to be appointed by the President.

The President sent to the Senate the following nominations on the 30th ult.: Thaddeus S. Sharrett, of Maryland, to be General Appraiser of Merchandise, under the provisions of the act approved June 10, 1890; Louis Desmarais, of Louisiana, to be Coiner of the Mint at New Orleans. Indian Agents—D. F. Royer, at the Pine Ridge Agency in South Dakota; George Steell, at the Blackfoot Agency in Montana. Postmasters—A. D. Lawrence, Tecumseh, Mich.; H. C. Bulis, Decorah, Iowa; Charles H. Schoregge, Sleepy Eye, Minn. Withdrawn—Mrs. Minnie B. Taylor at Hicksville, Ohio (at her own request). A favorable report has been ordered on the bill introduced by Senator Sherman to incorporate the Society of the Red Cross, with Clara Barton, George Kennan and other prominent people as incorporators. The Speaker laid before the House fifteen requests for leaves of absence. The bill taxing manufacturers and dealers in compound lard and fixing a tax on the article itself was reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass. The bill taxes compound lard 2 mills per pound and fixes the annual license of manufacturers at $96 per year, wholesale dealers at $24 per year, retail dealers at $1.92 per year, and requires that all lard be branded in all packages as "compound lard," and when sold in other than the original packages to be inclosed in wrappers or receptacles bearing such label.

An executive communication from Secretary Noble, inclosing a long letter from Major Powell, director of the Geological Survey, on the subject of irrigation and canal sites was laid before the Senate on the 31st ult., and Mr. Gorman asked to have it read. This led to a sharp discussion about printing such documents in the record, and some warm words passed between Mr. Gorman and Mr. Sherman. The former insisted upon having the letter read. Mr. Sherman objected to the further reading of the letter. Mr. Gorman remarked that if the Senator for Ohio had been in the chamber in time under his own resolution the document could have been read and the public business facilitated. Mr. Sherman resented the emphasizing of the fact that he had come into the chamber fifteen minutes after the hour fixed for meeting. He had been engaged during these fifteen minutes in public business, which he considered of more importance than listening to the reading of the journal. Mr. Gorman, with some warmth, resented the insinuation that because he wanted it read he was delaying public business. The Senate decided that the document should not be read. The presiding officer then said the letter would be printed as a miscellaneous document. The conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill was agreed to and then the tariff bill was taken up. In the House, Mr. Oates, of Alabama, as a question of privilege, offered a resolution for the investigation of the charges of corruption in connection with the passage of the silver bill, against members of the House, contained in a recent editorial of the National Economist. The Speaker decided the motion was not a privileged one. Mr. Oates appealed from the decision, which, however, was sustained by a vote of 95 to 71. The House then went into the committee of the whole on the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill and discussion of the irrigation clause was renewed.

The journal of the previous day having been read in the Senate on the 1st inst., Mr. Edmunds moved to correct and amend it by inserting the names of the thirty-two Senators who were present when the roll was first called. Mr. Sherman doubted whether this change ought to be made. If it were he would insist on having it applied to all the calls of the Senate. Such a rule, he said, would only incumber the journal. Finally, after fifteen or twenty minutes discussion of the question, Mr. Edmunds' motion was rejected. Mr. Blair offered a resolution looking to the incorporation of the previous question in the rules of the Senate, and asked for its immediate consideration, but on objection from the Democratic side the resolution went over. After a few moments spent in the reception of reports, bills, and memorials, at 10:45 consideration of the tariff bill was resumed. In the House, on motion of Mr. Taylor, of Illinois, a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of War for copies of the report of the engineers in charge of the work of improvement in Galveston harbor. The House then resumed consideration of the Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Senate joint resolution to permit Lieut. Col. Henry C. Corbin, United States army, to accept a civil position in the World's Columbian Commission was passed by the Senate on the 2d. The resolution offered by Mr. Blair instructing the Committee on Rules to report within four days a rule for the incorporation of the previous question or of some method for limiting and closing debate in the parliamentary procedure of the Senate was referred to the Committee on Rules. Mr. Morrill was granted unlimited leave of absence on account of the condition of his health. The House proceeded to the further consideration of the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill. The pending amendment was that appropriating $75,000 for a lightship on the North Carolina coast. The amendment was nonconcurred in—yeas, 136; nays, 27. One hundred and forty members were announced as paired on this vote. There was great difficulty in disposing of the remaining amendments owing to slimness of attendance, but after a resolution was adopted revoking leaves of absence, the bill was sent to conference, and at 2 o'clock the House adjourned.

RAILROAD NOTES.

The first elevated railway was projected in New York city in 1871 and completed in 1878.

The largest locomotive now in use weighs seventy-nine tons and has twelve driving-wheels.

It wasn't until 1820 that suitable machinery was devised for rolling rails into other than flat shapes.

On a "standard" gauge railroad the rails are four feet and nine inches apart.

Joseph Smith recently recovered $20,000 from the New York Central railroad company for injuries caused by a defective brake.

Where the Union Pacific railroad crosses the Black hills it is 8,248 feet above the level of the sea; the aggregate length of its tunnels is 6,600 feet; the approximate cost was $35,000 per mile.

A "horse" locomotive was once devised which was operated by a horse treading an endless platform. This drew a car at the rate of twelve miles an hour.

Some ten-wheel express engines recently constructed for an eastern road have without difficulty hauled seventeen passenger coaches up a 117-foot grade at nearly thirty miles an hour.

GANTER'S MAGIC —CHICKEN— Cholera Cure!

Thousands of dollars worth of chickens are destroyed by Cholera every year. It is more fatal to them than all other diseases combined. But the discovery of a liquid remedy that positively destroys the Microbes has been made. Half of the young chickens are killed by Microbes before they are fryers. A 50-cent bottle is enough for 100 chickens. It is guaranteed. If, after using two-thirds of a bottle you are not satisfied with it as a cure for Cholera, return it to the druggist from whom you purchased it, and he will refund your money.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

Leland awoke her, inquired for the master of the house, and was ushered into the hall.

Thence he entered a charming apartment, where a young lady in a garden hat was arranging bouquets in porcelain vases.

She turned at the noise of the opening door, and Leland saw—Clara Denton!

As he saluted her with an air of astonishment and doubt, she looked fixedly at him with her great eyes.

He spoke first, with, however, more of hesitation than usual.

"Pardon me, madam, but I inquired for Mr. Metcalf."

"He is in a distant field, but will soon return. Be kind enough to wait."

She led him into another apartment and pointed him to a chair, seating herself near the fireplace.

"But, madam, in the absence of Mr. Metcalf, can I have the honor of speaking with his daughter?"

"His daughter?" she said; "I am his daughter."

"You! Pardon me, I beg, but I thought—they said—I expected to find an elderly—a—person—that is a rather severe——" he hesitated, then added simply: "and I find I am in error."

Clara Denton seemed completely unmoved by this compliment.

"Will you be kind enough, sir," she said, "to let me know whom I have the honor of receiving."

"I am Warren Leland——"

"Ah! Indeed! Pray be seated, Mr. Leland. Then I have excuses also to make. It was probably you whom we saw this morning. We have been very rude—my friend, my daughter, and myself—but we were ignorant of your arrival, and the Sedley farm has been so long deserted, you know."

"I sincerely hope, Mrs. Denton, that you and the other ladies will make no change in your rides."

Mrs. Denton, by a movement of the hand, implied that she appreciated the offer, but should not accept it.

Then there was a pause long enough to embarrass Leland, during which his eyes fell upon the piano, and his lips almost formed the original remark:

"You are a musician, Mrs. Denton?"

Suddenly recollecting his tree, however, he feared to betray himself by the allusion, and was silent.

"You come from New York, Mr. Leland?" the young widow at length asked.

"I left the city only yesterday."

"You are acquainted with our friend, Mr. Sweetland, I believe."

"Yes; it was he who suggested that I should call upon you."

"We are charmed that you have done so, and what an excellent man our Congressman is!"

"Excellent, indeed, Mrs. Denton."

There was another pause.

"If you do not object to a short walk in the sun," said the widow, at length, "let us walk to meet my father."

Leland bowed. Mrs. Denton rose and rang the bell.

"Ask Miss Lester and Edith," she said to the old servant who answered it, "to be kind enough to put on their hats and join us."

A moment later Mildred Lester and Edith Denton entered the room.

On being introduced, Mildred flushed a little, seemed somewhat embarrassed, then smiled sweetly and frankly, and ended by giving the young man her hand.

Edith cast on him the steady, frank look of an inquisitive child, bowed slightly to him, and they all left the room by a door opening on the lawn.

Clara Denton, while responding courteously to the graceful speeches of Leland, walked on with a light and rapid step; her fairy-like little boots leaving their impression on the smooth surface of the gravel path.

Without knowing it, she walked with indescribable grace; with that supple, elastic undulation which would have been coquettish, had it not been undeniably natural.

Reaching the well-laid stone wall that inclosed the right side of the "home lot," she opened a little gate that led into a narrow path through an immense field of young corn. She passed into this path, followed in single file by Edith, Mildred, and by Leland.

The child soon became restless and excited; Mildred was calm and silent.

Leland, who was close to the latter, began to grow interested, as he watched her beautiful and tranquil features.

But he was also deeply interested in Clara Denton. He cast a glance toward her.

They were approaching the fence which ran at the end of the field. He was about to call to attract her attention, when, suddenly, half turning, and raising her hand, she said:

"My father, sir;" and Leland, looking in the direction indicated, saw a very tall man gazing at them over the fence and shading his eyes with his hand.

He was dressed in a suit of heavy tweed, and wore a soft felt hat.

Leland immediately recognized the white hair and dark eyebrows as the same he had seen bending over the violin the night before.

"Father," said Mrs. Denton, introducing the young man by a wave of the hand, "this is Mr. Warren Leland."

"Mr. Leland," repeated the old man, in a deep and sonorous voice, "you are most welcome;" and coming through the bars, he gave his guest a soft, brown hand, as he continued: "Your grandfather and I were neighbors. I knew your mother well in her younger days, and am delighted to have her son under my roof. Your mother is a most amiable person, young sir, and certainly you ought——"

The old man hesitated, and finished his sentence by a sonorous "hem!" that resounded and rumbled in his chest as if in the vault of a church.

"I received your note inclosing Sweetland's letter," he continued, after a moment; "was sorry you could not give us the pleasure of your acquaintance at that time. I have been looking for you ever since.

"Clara, my dear, whenever you are ready, we will follow you. Pardon me, Mr. Leland, for receiving you in this rustic attire, but I am a farmer.

"Agricola—a mere herdsman—custos gregis, as the poet says. Walk before me, sir, I beg. Edith, child, respect my growing corn."

"Is it really true, Mr. Leland, that you have the happy idea of quitting the great American Babylon, to install yourself upon your rural possessions?

"It will be a good example, sir—an excellent example! You will never regret taking such a step.

"Now you see my little domain—mea paupera regna—the retreat of the sage. Here I live, and live happily, like an old shepherd in the golden age—loved by my neighbors, which is not easy; and venerating the gods, which is perhaps easier.

"Ah, young sir, you read Virgil, I am sure, and you will excuse me if I quote him. It was for me he wrote:

> "Fortunate senex, hic inter flumina nota,
> Et fontes sacros frigus captabit opacum.

"And this as well:

> "Fortunatus et ille deos qui novit agrestes,
> Panaque, Silvanumque senem!

"Nymphasque sorores!" finished Leland, smiling and moving his head slightly in the direction of the ladies, who preceded them.

"Quite to the point. That is pure truth!" cried Metcalf, gayly. "Did you hear that, Clara?"

"Yes, father."

"And did you understand it?"

"No, father."

"I do not believe you, my dear! I do not believe you!" the old man laughed heartily. "Do not believe her, Mr. Leland; women have the faculty of understanding compliments in every language."

This conversation brought them to the house, where they sat down on the veranda to enjoy the view.

Leland praised judiciously the farm and well-kept lawn, accepted an invitation to dinner the next week, and then discreetly retired, flattering himself that his introduction had made a favorable impression upon Nathan Metcalf, but regretting his apparent want of progress with the fairy-footed daughter and her friend Mildred Lester.

He was in error.

"This young man," said Mr. Metcalf, when he was left alone with his daughter, "has some touch of the ancients, which is something; but he still resembles his father, whom I never liked. His eyes and his smile recall some traits of his admirable mother, but positively, my dear Clara, I am afraid of him. His principles, they say, are vicious."

"Who says so, father?"

"Current rumor, my child."

"Current rumor, my dear father, is often mistaken, and always exaggerates. For my part, I like the gentleman, who seems thoroughly refined and at his ease."

"Bah! I suppose because he compared you to a nymph in the fable."

"If he compared me to a nymph in the fable, he was wrong; but he never addressed me a word in English that was not in good taste. Before we condemn him let us see for ourselves. It is a habit you have always recommended to me, you know."

"You cannot deny, Clara," said the old man with irritation, "that he exhales the most decided and disagreeable odor of New York—of Fifth avenue itself! He is too polite—too studied! Not the shadow of enthusiasm—no fire of youth! He never laughs as I should wish to see a man of his age laugh; a young man should roar to split his waistband!"

"There, father, you don't mean all you say, I'm sure. And for my part, I repeat, I like him; his manners please me."

Mildred, Lester, and Edith had gone away together, Mildred holding Edith's hand. As they entered the door Mildred whispered in her companion's ear:

"Isn't he a handsome gentleman? I'm sorry he's gone. I like him so much."

CHAPTER XXI.

LELAND SECURES AN ALLY—THE RAGPICKER.

During the succeeding week Leland met Nathan Metcalf and the several members of his family more than once. And after the dinner to which he had been invited he determined, upon mature reflection, on a bold move—a move that had the effect of plunging Clara Denton in the most profound astonishment.

He asked her in a low voice, and with peculiar emphasis, if she would be kind enough, at her leisure, to grant him the honor of a moment's private conversation.

Clara Denton opened still wider those large eyes of hers, blushed slightly, and replied that she would be at home the next afternoon at three o'clock.

At the appointed hour he presented himself before her.

He found her in the garden, seated under a group of young trees, forming a rustic bower.

She was fond of this place; the most tender memories were associated with it.

She was seated at a small rustic table, covered with pieces of wool and silk, on a low chair, her feet elevated on a stool, and working on a piece of embroidery with great apparent tranquillity.

Warren Leland, an expert in all the niceties and exquisite devices of the female mind, smiled to himself at this audience in the open air. He thought he fathomed its meaning. Mrs. Denton desired to deprive this interview of the confidential character which closed doors would have given it.

This was the simple truth. This lady, who was one of the noblest of her sex, was not at all simple. She had not passed ten years of her youth, her beauty, and her widowhood without receiving, under forms more or less direct, some dozens of declarations, which had inspired her with impressions, which, although just, were not always too flattering to the delicacy and discretion of the opposite sex.

Like all women of her age, she knew her danger, and, unlike most of them, she did not love it. She had invariably turned into the broad road of friendship all those she had surprised rambling within the prohibited limits of love.

The request of Warren Leland for a private interview had seriously preoccupied her since the previous evening. What could be the object of this mysterious interview? She puzzled her brain to imagine, but could not divine.

It was not probable that Mr. Leland, at the commencement of their acquaintance, would feel himself entitled to declare his passion. However much the renowned gallantry of the young man rose to her memory, she thought so famous a lady-killer as he might adopt unusual methods, and might think himself entitled to dispense with much ceremony in dealing with a humble country woman.

Animated by these ideas, she resolved to receive him in the garden, having remarked, during her short experience, that open air and a wide open space were not favorable to bold wooers.

Leland bowed to Mrs. Denton, then seating himself, drew his chair nearer to hers, mischievously, perhaps, and lowering his voice into a confidential tone, said:

"Mrs. Denton, will you permit me to confide a secret to you, and ask your counsel?"

She raised her graceful head, fixed upon the young man her soft bright gaze, smiled vaguely, and by a slight movement of the hand intimated to him: "You surprise me; but I will listen to you."

"This is my first secret, madam. I desire to represent this district in Congress."

At this unexpected declaration, Mrs. Denton looked at him, breathed a slight sigh of relief, and gravely listened to what he had to say.

"Mr. Sweetland," continued the young man, "has manifested a kindly feeling for me. He intends to retire at the end of his present term, and is anxious that I should become his successor. He has not concealed from me, however, the fact that the support of your father is indispensable to my success as a candidate.

"I have therefore come here, by his advice, in the hope of obtaining this support; but the ideas and opinions expressed by your father at dinner yesterday, appear to me so directly opposite to my pretensions, that I feel truly discouraged. To be brief, Mrs. Denton, in my perplexity I conceived the idea—indiscreet, doubtless—to appeal to your kindness, and ask your advice—which I am determined to follow, whatever it may be."

"But, sir! you embarrass me greatly," said the lady, whose pretty face, at first clouded, brightened up immediately with a frank smile.

"I have no special claim on your kindness—on the contrary, perhaps—but I am a human being, and you are charitable. Well, in truth, Mrs. Denton, this matter seriously concerns my fortune, my future, and my whole destiny. This opportunity which now presents itself for me to enter public life so young, is exceptional. I would regret very much to lose it; would you therefore be so kind as to aid me?"

"But how can I?" replied Mrs. Denton. "I never interfere in politics, and that is precisely what you ask me."

"Nevertheless, I pray you not to oppose me."

"Why should I oppose you?"

"Great heavens, madam! you have a right to be severe. My youth was a little dissipated. My reputation, in some respects, is not overgood; I doubt not you have heard so, and I cannot but fear it has inspired you with some dislike for me."

"Mr. Leland, we live very retired here. We know nothing of what passes in New York. If we did, this would not prevent my assisting you, if I knew how, for I think that serious and elevated labors could not fail happily to change your ordinary habits."

"It is truly a delicious thing," thought the young man, "to mystify so spiritual a person.

"Mrs. Denton," he continued, with his quiet grace, "I join in your hopes, but as you deign to encourage my ambition, I believe I shall succeed in obtaining your father's support. You know him well. What shall I do to conciliate him? What course shall I adopt? Because, I cannot do without his assistance. Were I to renounce that, I should be compelled to renounce my projects."

"It is truly difficult," said Clara, with a reflective air, "very difficult."

"Is it not, madam?"

There was in the voice of Leland such confidence and submission that Clara Denton was quite touched, and even the very devil himself would have been charmed in the very depths of hell.

"Let me reflect on this a little," she said, and she placed her elbows on the table, leaned her head on her hands, her fingers, like a fan, half shading her eyes, while sparks of fire from her rings glittered in the sunshine, and her ivory nails gently stroked her smooth brow.

Warren Leland continued to regard her with the same submissive and candid air.

"Well, sir," she said at last, smiling, "I think you can do nothing better than keep on."

"Pardon me; but how?"

"By persevering in the same system you have already adopted with my father! Say nothing to him for the present. Beg Mr. Sweetland, also, to be silent. Wait quietly until intimacy, time, and your own good qualities have sufficiently prepared my father for your nomination. My role is very simple. I cannot, at this moment, aid you without betraying you. My assistance would only injure you until a change in the aspect of affairs. You must conciliate him."

"You overpower me," said Leland; "in taking you for my confidante in my ambitious projects I committed a blunder and an impertinence which a slight contempt from you has mildly punished. But speaking seriously, Mrs. Denton, I thank you with all my heart. I feared to find in you a powerful enemy, and I find in you a strong neutral, almost an ally."

"Oh, altogether an ally, however secret," responded Clara, laughing. "I am glad to be useful to you; as I like Mr. Sweetland very much, I am happy to enter into his views. Ah! There are Mildred and Edith, they are coming this way, I think."

"Apropos, who is Miss Mildred Lester? There is something peculiar about her; but she is exceedingly beautiful, and she interests me very much."

"Ah, she interests you! Well, I must tell you her story—so far as it is known to me; indeed, for reasons of my own, I have had it in my mind to do so for some days."

"I shall be charmed to hear it."

"You shall; but not to-day, see, they're coming. Heavens! What's that?"

It was a sudden rustling in the hedge close behind them that startled her.

"A listener! A spy!" exclaimed Leland, springing forward and dividing the hedge with his hands.

The next instant he uttered an exclamation of astonishment.

His rapid action had revealed the crouching form of an old man, with a gray beard, dark flashing eyes, and firm, white teeth.

"The rag-picker!" he cried, and a sensation of dread took possession of him.

CHAPTER XXII.

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN SNARE.

What are you doing here?" demanded Leland, sharply, as soon as he recovered himself a little.

"I came to see the lady," answered the old man, sullenly.

"Came to see the lady! What lady?"

"This one—Mrs. Denton. She knows me."

"What! is it you, Mr. Welch?" exclaimed Clara, now coming forward. "Did you want to see me?"

"I did, ma'am."

"Why didn't you come round through the gate, then?"

"Well, you see, to save time, I started 'cross lots, and, hearing your voice here, and being in a powerful hurry, I tried to force my way through the hedge."

"What! is there anything the matter? Is there any trouble? Is Jennie or the children sick?"

"That's it, ma'am, the children—they're powerful sick—both of 'em. And Jennie, she sent me for you."

"Go back at once and tell her I'm coming. I'll be there almost as soon as yourself."

The old man turned away.

Mildred and Edith had come up. Leland greeted them cordially, and then took his leave. He did not go home by the road, however, but hurried after the ragpicker.

He soon overtook him.

"How is it," he asked, "that you are here in Roxbury, and seemingly quite at home, when, only a few months back, you appeared to be a fixture in New York?"

"My daughter has lived in this place ever since her marriage. Her husband was a shoe-maker—not much of one, I suppose; but they owned a little patch of land and a hovel, a poor place enough, in all conscience, but still their own, and so, when her husband died, Jennie sent for me, and now, instead of picking up rags in New York, I am scratching the ground in Roxbury."

"Ah, something of a rise in life! I trust the change agrees with you."

"I am well enough satisfied."

"At least, you are with your own flesh and blood."

"Yes, I am that much better off, certainly."

"Your daughter has children, you said?"

"Yes—two."

"And they are sick?"

"Very sick."

"What is the matter?"

"I do not know—I cannot understand."

"Has a doctor seen them?"

"A doctor! Good gracious! How could we pay a doctor?"

"But you must have one. Here, go for one at once," and he offered him a five-dollar bill.

The old man stretched forth his hand to take it. Then a strange expression came into his eyes, and quickly withdrawing his hand, he said hurriedly, "No, no!" and turning abruptly, hastened away.

Leland gazed after him for a moment with a thoughtful air, and then, with bowed head, and his hands tightly clasped behind him, slowly made his way homeward.

With an effort, he at last succeeded in throwing off the disagreeable impression the quondam rag-picker had made, and by the time he had reached his own door had almost forgotten him.

In truth, he had something much more agreeable to think of, and could but congratulate himself on his campaign, which seemed to him, not without reason, to have been a masterpiece of stratagem.

By a clever mixture of frankness and cunning he had quickly enlisted Clara Denton in his interest. From that moment the realization of his ambitious dreams seemed assured, for he was not ignorant of the incomparable value of woman's assistance, and knew all the power of those small but cumulative efforts, and of those subterranean movements which assimilate feminine influence to the secret and irresistible influences of nature.

Another point gained—he had established a secret between that pretty woman and himself, and had placed himself on a confidential footing with her.

He had gained the right to keep secret their clandestine words and private conversation, and such a position cleverly managed could aid him to pass very agreeably the time necessary to gain a residence in Connecticut, and the period occupied in his political canvass.

Leland, on entering the house, sat down to write to Mr. Sweetland to inform him of the opening of his operations, and admonish him to keep quiet. From that day he turned his attention to following up the two persons who could control his election.

His policy as regarded Mr. Metcalf was as simple as it was clever. Profiting by his growing familiarity as a neighbor, he went to school, as it were, to the old gentleman farmer, and gave him up the direction of the Sedley farm. By this quiet compliment, enhanced by his captivating courtesy, he advanced insensibly in the good graces of the old man.

After some weeks of almost daily intercourse, Mr. Metcalf graciously praised his young neighbor as a good fellow, an excellent musician, an amiable associate; but to make him a Congressman, saw some things which might disqualify him.

Mrs. Denton had feared this and did not hide it from Leland.

The young man, however, did not worry himself so much about the matter as might be supposed, for his second ambition had superseded his first; in other words, his fancy for Clara Denton had become more ardent and more pressing than his love for political preferment.

We are compelled to admit, not to his credit, that he first proposed to himself to gain the affections of his fair neighbor as a simple pastime, as an interesting adventure, and, above all, as a work of art, which was extremely difficult and would redound to his great honor.

To accomplish his object, he trusted to his own principles, to the fascinations of his manner and his previous successes. Instinctively he knew that the ordinary forms of gallantry would not answer with her. All his art was to surround her with absolute respect, and to leave the rest to time and the growing intimacy of each day.

There was something very touching to Clara Denton in the reserved and timid manner of this mauvais sujet in her presence—the homage of a fallen spirit, as though ashamed of being such, in presence of a spirit of light.

Never, either in public or in their tete-a-tetes, was there a jest, a word, or a look which the most sensitive virtue could fear.

This young man, ironical with all the rest of the world, was serious with her. From the moment he turned toward her, his voice, face and conversation became as serious as though he had entered a church.

He had a great deal of wit, and he used and abused it beyond measure in conversations in the presence of Clara Denton, as though he were making a display of fireworks in her honor. But on coming to her he was suddenly extinguished, and was all submission and respect.

Every woman who receives from a superior man such refined flattery as this does not necessarily love him, but does like him.

In the shadow of the perfect security in which Leland had placed her, Clara Denton could not but be pleased in the company of the most distinguished man she had ever met, and who had, like herself, the taste for art, music and high culture.

Thus these innocent relations with a young man whose reputation was rather equivocal could not but awaken in the heart of Clara a sentiment, or rather an illusion, which the most prudish could not condemn.

Libertines offer to vulgar women an attraction which surprises, but which springs from a very blamable curiosity. To a woman of society they offer another, more noble yet not less dangerous—it is the attraction of reforming them. It is rare that virtuous women do not fall into the error of believing that it is for virtue's sake alone they love them.

Such, in brief, were the secret sympathies whose slight tendrils intertwined, blossomed and flowered little by little in this soul, as tender as it was pure.

Warren Leland vaguely foresaw all this; that which he had not foreseen was that he himself would be caught in his own snare, and would be sincere in the role which he had so judiciously adopted, as Clara Denton captivated him.

Seeing her every day, with that child-like intimacy which the country encourages enhancing the graceful movements of this accomplished person, ever self-possessed and equally prepared for duty or for pleasure—as animated as passion, yet as severe as virtue—he conceived for her a genuine worship. Mind, it was not respect, for that requires the effort of believing in such merits, and he did not wish to believe. He thought Clara Denton was born so.

A Detective's Experiment.

During the run of a highly moral play in one scene of which a real safe was blown open with real gunpowder by real burglars in five minutes, a noted detective went to the theater and told the professional gentlemen that they could not do it in so short a time. They declared they could. Thereupon he put $500 in the safe; they did the same, and he locked it with his own combination. "If you get the safe open in five minutes," he said, "the money is yours. If you don't, it's mine." He then stationed himself at the wings, watch in hand, and waited for the burglary scene. The cue given, they jumped through the window and set vigorously to work. In two minutes the diamond drill had bored through the steel door. Then a powder blower was inserted, the bellows set to going, the crevices around the door puttied, and the crank drill was cutting the hinges. The fuse was inserted; a wet blanket hung over the door, and the match struck. As the detective's watch showed the passage of three minutes and forty-eight seconds there was a flash from the safe, a cloudlet of smoke, a heavy jar, and the massive door fell on the stage. The detective remarked: "I've been chasing safe-blowers around the country for full thirty years, and I thought I knew something about the business, But this is the first time I ever heard of a safe being blown open inside of four minutes. The lesson is easily worth $500."

Do You Know a Good Cigar?

One great trouble is that so many smokers do not know what they want! They ask for Havana cigars, and declare that they want them, but as a fact there are many of them that do not want anything of the kind. I was in a store the other day when a well-known man came in and asked for a box of Havana cigars, saying price was no object so long as he was suited. The dealer showed him Havanas at 25 cents and 15 cents each; Sumatra and Havana 10 cents each, and finally a good Havana filler, with a Connecticut wrapper. This suited him, he paid twice its value and was content. If the ordinary price had been asked of him he would have declared them poor, and the dealer had no fine stock on hand. This is an absolute fact, the man wanted a sweet, mild smoke, and he got it and was suited.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

NEW YORK being short on the peach crop, has sent parties to Detroit to buy up the Michigan peach crop.

GUATEMALA has been having a little war with the republic of San Salvador. It will probably soon blow over.

THE American squadron, comprising all our new war vessels, has returned after a visit to several seaports of Europe.

REPORTS from the northeast say that Minnesota will raise forty million bushels of wheat this year, and Dakota, sixty millions.

ABOUT 150 members of Congress are reported absent. They are mostly republicans. Democratic members are sticking to their work.

SENATOR VOORHEES speaks at Peru next Thursday, Aug., 14, at the democratic county convention. There will be reduced rates on all railroads.

GOLD has now been found a few miles away from Ishpeming the place we reported the rich find a week or two ago. Northern Michigan is full of excitement.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN is to start from Tacoma to-day August 7, for another trip around the world. He thinks he can make it this time in fifty-seven days.

REPORTS have it that English capital has now bought up all the glass works in this country. Yet republicans say we must keep up a high duty on glassware to "protect American industry."

JUDGE ALLEN MORSE, of the supreme bench of Michigan, will probably be the democratic nominee for governor. He beat Judge Cooley in 1885 by 30,000, and many think he can carry the state now.

REBECCA NOURSE was one of the old time, genuine witches. Her descendants have formed a society, and last week held their seventh annual reunion at the old Nourse home at Danvers, Mass.

WHAT American labor needs is not a more restricted market, but a wider market for its products. We need the widest possible market, but republican policy is to keep making our markets narrower.

THE B. & O., has been getting still more new connections. This time they make a deal that will let them across Pennsylvania and into New York, reaching the city of Rochester. This is a new idea for the B. & O. folks.

THE largest lead firm in the country, with mines in Missouri paid a profit last year of 29 per cent., but the workmen got no higher wages. And yet republicans say we must have a higher duty to protect this infant industry.

GOVERNOR HOVEY, has been asking the attorney general whether the county commissioners must report to him, the new precincts just established, and the attorney general says it must be done. We presume our commissioners have already done this.

NORTH DAKOTA republicans have nominated a state ticket that is in favor of chartering the Louisiana lottery. This looks as if a legislature favorable to the project may be chosen. The lottery folks offer them a big sum of money, if they make a law permitting lotteries.

TARRIFF discussion goes on in the Senate. Republicans stick for higher rates, and democrats for lower. Take crockery for example: If a higher tax would make crockery cheap, as republican papers say—how would it benefit the makers of crockery? If the prices go down, how could they pay better wages? Submitted to Waterloo Press.

MANY have wondered how Cleveland lost the state of New York two years ago. It is now told with some show of authority, that Quay, the chairman of the republican national committee, made a deal through his secretary, who was a member of the Brewers' Association of New York City, and thus secured all the influence of that large and wealthy class to be turned against Cleveland, resulting in his losing that state.

THE BUTLER RECORD dares the democrats to make a comparison of farm prices now. Well here she goes. Previous to 1860 and high tariff, wheat ran at $1 20 to $2. How does that compare with the present price? But the editor makes a single article potatoes, an example. Potatoes often sell at $1 when the first ones come to the market. They will likely remain some time at that figure this year. But what does the Record claim, as the cause for the present high price? Is it the tariff? Please explain.

JOSEPH J. JONASSON, a native of Germany, though now a naturalized American, is on his way to Germany to be tried. His offense as claimed, is that while in a beer saloon in Berlin when back there on a visit, he disagreed with some one as to the merits of the emperor, saying at last, "I cough at your Emperor," as we would say "sneeze at him." It seems this thoughtless remark has been reported, hence the return trip to the old country. It is about time for Blaine to show his "vigorous foreign policy"

THE GOSHEN NEWS has resurrected a lot of that old truck about the failure of Auburn to get the B. & O. shops when that line was built. When the News adds that the line was finally built two miles from town one can readily see how well it understands the situation. Auburn extends north of the court house half a mile, and as the southernmost houses are within a few rods of the B. & O. that would make our bouncing little city, two and a half miles long, north and south. Much as we like to boast of our size, we won't swear to two and a half miles, but will leave it for the News, that started the story, to carry it out now to the necessary conclusion.

FREE SUGAR turns out to be a delusion and a fraud as far as the McKinley tariff bill is concerned. Only coarse sugar is put on the free list. The best grade on the free list is the very cheapest that our people use. All good grades and all refined sugar still pay a duty of four tenths of a cent a pound. This is simply a reduction, the present law being about two cents. The low grade sugar is brought in free for the benefit of the sugar refiners and sugar trust. And in any case, the people have to pay the bounty of two cents a pound, on all sugar raised by the planters in this country. So the planters and the refiners get the benefit, and the people furnish the profits of both. The government will lose the fifty millions, or a large part of it, that it has heretofore received from this source.

HARRISON now wants congress to pass a stronger postal law that will prevent the Louisiana lottery from using the mails. Wanamaker agrees with him, and it is a law that ought to be passed in twenty-four hours. All lotteries are frauds. But Harrison does not mention the fact that most of the men he has appointed to federal offices in New Orleans were stockholders in the lottery. Ex-Governor Warmouth, under whose administration the lottery started, was made collector of the port; Pinchbeck and Felix Herwig, both state senators, when the lottery was first legalized. The last named is now chairman of the republican state central committee, and all three are heavy lottery stockholders. And Wanamaker has known all along, that nearly every man he has appointed at the New Orleans postoffice owns stock in it. It is also now known that the lottery company contributed liberally to both parties during the last general campaign. If all these things are understood, it will be seen that the lottery men are reasonably safe. It should also be noted as a reason to doubt Harrison's honesty in this, as in so many other things, that his son Russell owns a paper the Journal, in Helena, Montana, and is part owner of Frank Leslies Weekly. Quite recently he went over into Mexico, where the Louisiana lottery has a branch under the notorious Col. Mosby. There he contracted for $1,000 in advertising for the Leslie, and $300 for the Montana paper. So the president, in advising congress to sit down on lotteries is doing his duty as president, provided he is in earnest. But one would think he ought to sit down on son Russell.

Foreign vs Home Prices.

The Dispatch has at last struck something it don't understand as well as it does the work of the town council and the county commissioners, and that is the tariff and foreign trade. It may be that ignorance is bliss at some times, but here is a case hardly excusable. We refer to its article of last week on the difference in price on agricultural implements in this country and abroad. We have proof in our possession that the Dispatch is wrong, and that American manufacturers do charge more at home than they do abroad for the same articles. On this point as on all others we are glad to enlighten him. We have in our possession the proof, showing what the Ann Arbor, Mich., Agricultural Implement Co., does. They as well as other houses, send out two sets of price lists which we give to show how high tariff helps the farmer.

FOREIGN PRICE	AMERICAN PRICE
No. 30 Plow $4	No. 30 Plow $8
Hay Tedder $30	Hay Tedder $45
Mower $40	Mower $65
No. 3 feed cutter $60	Same $90
Hay rake $17	Same $25
Clipper feed cutter $9 50	Same $18

Plenty of other instances can be given to prove what we say, but we deem it unnecessary. Now, further to show that the Dispatch editor must have known he was misrepresenting facts, we would ask our readers to look on page 44 of Auburn premium list, and they will notice that Brown & Culbertson advertise the Flying Dutchman plow, saying plainly that it is made at Moline, Ill., by the Moline Plow Co, and not as the Dispatch said last week by the Deere Company. We say, he must have known of this error, for the Dispatch office printed those premium lists and that advertisement. It also says that the American list price of that plow is $45, when the fact is they have for their American customers a different size of plows, and on which the lowest list price is $58, and the largest size is listed at $90. And while it is not exactly in order here, we might state incidentally that Germany is a high tariff country, but she pays only about half as good wages as does free trade England. We notice that when republican papers speak of the difference in wages in this country and England, they never mention China and Germany, and other high tariff countries.

Of Interest to the Dispatch.

We tried to find space a week ago for a brief discussion with the Dispatch folks. But what the Dispatch missed thereby we presume our readers gained. Still there are a few things that present a temptation too strong for even as good a man as the editor of this moral family newspaper. The childish earnestness with which the editor of the Dispatch believes in his own greatness, is ridiculous. Nothing is good, is desirable, is even bearable unless it has "Dispatch" blown in the bottle in big glass letters.

A case in point is its issue of July 24, where great black headlines told a breathless, waiting world, "THE DISPATCH'S POLICY ADOPTED." This referred to the adoption by the town council, of the ordinance putting license up to $150. The editor claimed all the credit for orginating this measure, or at least causing its adoption. The facts are he probably had nothing to do with it, except in his mind. The members of the board had been considering it for a year or nearly that, and the Dispatch has just as much right to lay claim to a patent on any of the other ordinances of the board. How it does look, anyhow, for a man to come into a community, with the air of one who says: "Here I am gentlemen, and I have brought my brain with me. Do you need any advice on any possible subject?

The editor seems to find fault because the COURIER does not see fit to keep offering the board unsought advice. The town council of Auburn is composed of gentlemen of character and business ability, men who were selected for the place because of fitness. The COURIER has faith in them—believes they know more about, some at least of their duties, than he does, and is therefore at rest in regard to the course they will take. We shall not, therefore presume to advise them unless advice is sought, and we have no idea they will seek it.

"The COURIER took sides with the saloons by keeping silent," says the Dispatch. Now suppose we invent an argument just as truthful and not more ridiculous, like this: The Dispatch has kept silent as to the curcifixion of Christ, therefore the Dispatch takes sides with those who committed that fearful sin.

"We have invited the COURIER to favor this" says the editor, referring to the $150 license. Singular, isn't it, that the COURIER don't feel grateful for the invitation, but we have never run our paper on the "invitation plan." Neither have we ever favored greatly the policy of accepting all sorts of gratuitous advice.

We come now to its issue of last week, July 31. It gave its readers almost a column of stuff to show that the COURIER's report of a certain council meeting was all wrong, or only part right. We still insist we gave a correct account of the business gone over that evening, but as no one but the editor of the Dispatch can certainly have much interest in such a useless discussion, we shall not bore our readers with it.

The Dispatch and Windjammer have evidently put heads together. Both call frantically for proof that republicans are trying bribery. Neither will believe republicans do such things. The Dispatch is quite certain that "No man on the republican ticket, nor any member of the county organization approves of such a course." And it has been only a few short weeks since the chairman of their county committee Mr. Chiesman, and their candidate for surveyor, Mr. Diehl, were both actively engaged in a little matter connected with the bribery of voters in Stafford township. At least the eager interest they took in the bribery trial, looked as if they surely approved such a course as paying a man cash to vote for a fellow on the other side. We also, note the delicate tact with which this statement is made, "men on the ticket and members of the county organization." Is that intended to leave out Arford so as to admit indirectly that a man not on the ticket and outside the organization may be in favor of bribery? It looks like a left handed lick at Arford and his high private friends.

The Dispatch editor makes one think of Owen Glendower, in Shakespeare's Henry IV. Owen had a good opinion of himself and talked like this:

"At my nativity the front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, of burning cressets, and, at my birth, the frame and huge foundation of the earth shaked like a coward. The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields. These signs have marked me extraordinary; and all the courses of my life do shew I am not of the roll of common men."

And one of his hearers answered "All this would have happened at the same season, if your mother's cat had but kittened, though you had ne'er been born."

We commend the editor of the Dispatch to a careful study of the character and fate of Owen Glendower.

Many of Butler Odd Fellows will visit Chicago this week to attend the grand cantonment.

The infant child of John Mitchel residing on west Washington street, died last Sunday of cholera infantum.

Butler seems to have quietly, and without trumpets or brass bands leaped far ahead of all other towns in the county in point of population.

Nearly everybody in Butler, will patronize the 75 cent excursion to Rome City next Friday. Train leaves the depot at 7:45 a. m., returning at 7 p. m.

A large force of men and teams have been engaged for a number of days in widening the great railroad ditch that is intended to make our town a "dry" town some day, and dumping the dirt on south Broadway. The same force are thus employed in reducing the grade on the Egnew hill and filling up the deep hollow on this side of Big Run bridge on north Broadway. The Mutzfelt open ditch on this street is also to be tiled and filled up much to the satisfaction of property owners along this popular thoroughfare.

Andrew J. Ackerman, died July 28 after a lingering illness of many months with consumption. He leaves a wife only at our place, but other friends we believe at Edgerton, Ohio. He was a was a member of the K. P. lodge at this place, and a member of the Catholic church at Edgerton, and the question of which should perform the rite of sepulture became a grave one, as each, the church and the order were opposed to the other. The order having cared for him during his illness, and bestowed many and valuable benefits to him, determined that they ought in justice to perform the last sad rites of sepulture, so the priest allowed them to do so.

Charley Lingenfelter, of whose illness mention has been made, died last Thursday, and his remains were removed to Tiffin, Ohio, on Friday, and interred in the cemetery at that place beside his two sisters that died in Missouri a few years ago under most distressing circumstances. This leaves Mr. and Mrs. Lingenfelter but a single child living, a son Robert. Charles was an excellent young man. In his nineteenth year he had graduated from the Butler schools, and had been licensed to preach by the last quarterly conference of the M. E. church at this place, and his death has cast a gloom over our young people that will not soon be dispelled. Memorial services in honor of his memory will be held in the M. E. church on the 17 of this month under the auspices of the young people of this place. His parents have the sympathy of all who know them.

Church will be held at this place one week from next Sunday. All are cordially invited.

F T. Miller, Wabash Agent, is moving this week to Adrian, Mich., where he will continue work.

The Monitor Manufacturing Company will soon commence building their factory at this place.

Anyone wanting fine rubber stamps and stencils, of any design, should call on D. W. Greenewald.

Marion Grube, of this place, has moved on his father's farm three miles south of here where he will attend to the work.

Quite a crowd was drawn Thursday by David Greenewald and one of the Hotel girls. We saw David running at full speed, holding up the handle end of a wheelbarrow in an endeavor to capture the girl, but failed to do so. Try it again Dave!

Church Statistics.

The following summary of statistics of the evangelical churches in the United States may be of some interest to readers. The figures include all of the members of the churches that are of the same general church family, as given separately they would fill too large a space.

DENOMINATION	NO. OF MEMBERS
Adventists	58,742
Christian Union	120,000
German Evan. church	160,000
Mennonites	102,671
Episcopalians	480,176
Congregationalists	491,985
Baptists	4,292,291
Methodists	4,980,240
Presbyterians	1,229,012
Lutherans	1,086,048
Reformed	282,856

The total number of catholics which includes the total of the catholic population is 8,277,039, but they have, as real communicants, only about 4,676,292, which is but little more than the number of either the Baptist or Methodists. The total membership of the protestant churches in the U. S. A., is approximately 14,000,000. When we subtract from our total population the vast number of children too young to become actual church members this gives a fair showing so far as figures can go, of the christian spirit of the nation. There were 868,108 members added to the protestant churches of our country in the year 1889. These figures are taken from "The Independent" of July 31, 1890.

4000 Buggies.

The Kiblinger Buggy Factory last Saturday finished up buggies to 4,000, according to the count kept in the ironing department. But we have it from Mr. Kiblinger that the number is somewhat above this. As the accounts kept in the business office are probably nearer correct than any other we presume the higher figures are right. For the short time the factory has been operated this is a big figure. About 2,000 have been finished since the middle of last July. We understand the amount turned out next year will be still greater.

Quite a number of the brethren from Waterloo, Garrett and St. Joe, were here Monday evening to give the "goat a whirl" after the style of brothers in the "Chapter" at the Masonic Hall. They had a number of candidates, enough to make things lively. At the close of work they adjourned to the Hollister House, and enjoyed the splendid supper there. Among those present, we noticed J. D. Leighty of St. Joe and W. H. Leas, G. T. Abby and S. Z. Dickinson of Waterloo. All are "ancient and and honorable masons," who are working their way up higher.

J. B. Hoover was out on the streets last week, but looking feeble after his hard sickness. He had a queer bit of experience to relate, also. The Sunday before, while Mr. Rant's family were at church, he was out near the house, when a big rat came along. He struck at the rat and stunned it, but the exertion made him faint, and he fell over, and for a moment it was a matter of doubt which was the nearest helpless, he or the rat. But both finally got up and the battle was renewed, Mr. Hoover, finally coming out ahead. He says it was the hottest campaign of his life.

Goshen Democrat: In order that the election boards througout the county may become thoroughly familiar with the duties under the new law, the chairmen of the democratic and republican county central committees are making arrangements for the boards in each township to meet and receive instructions from some person who is thoroughly posted on the law. All points not plain will be explained and discussed. It is a capital idea, and if carried out as it should be will avoid many errors that would otherwise occur. Let the work be done and well done.

The vicissitudes of climate are trying to most constitutions, especially to people having impure blood. For all such (and they constitute the majority), the best safeguard is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the use of which cleanses the blood and strengthens and invigorates the system.

TOWN ORDINANCE.

An Ordinance to Amend Section Two (2) and Three (3) of "An Ordinance to regulate and license the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, and other intoxicating liquors, within the corporate limits of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county and state of Indiana," which was in force and took effect June 15, 1885.

Section 1. Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county in the state of Indiana, that section two (2) of the above entitled ordinance be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

Section 2. "Any person or persons desiring to obtain a license to sell spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in said town of Auburn, in less quantities than a quart at a time, shall pay to the treasurer of said town the sum of One Hundred and Fifty (150) dollars as a license fee, for one year, and shall pay to said treasurer a like sum each succeeding year thereafter. If he or they desire to sell spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in less quantity than a quart at a time in said town. If he or they desire to sell only vinous and malt or spirituous liquors, or both, he or they shall pay said treasurer said sum of One Hundred and Fifty (150) dollars as a license fee as herein provided. On paying said sum he or they shall take said treasurer's receipt therefor, which receipt shall be filed with said Board accompanied with an application for a license, which application shall designate the kind of liquors he or they desire to sell, and shall contain a description of the place where such liquors are to be sold under such license: Provided that persons holding licenses under the ordinance hereby amended shall at the taking effect of this ordinance, surrender the same, and shall pay to the treasurer of said town an amount in money which with the sum paid for the unexpired term of said surrendered license shall be at the rate of $150 per year for such unexpired term, and thereupon said Board shall issue to such person or persons a license for the unexpired term of such surrendered license: Provided also, that except as provided above, no license shall be granted for a greater or less time than one year, and no license under this ordinance shall be issued to any person or persons, except those holding a license duly issued by the Auditor of said DeKalb county, under section 5318 of the Revised Statutes of 1881, of the State of Indiana.

Section 2. All licenses issued by virtue of the ordinance set forth in the title of this ordinance are hereby revoked.

Section 3. That Section three (3) of the above entitled ordinance be and the same is amended to read as follows: "Any person or persons found guilty by any court of competent jurisdiction of selling any spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors in violation of the provisions of this ordinance and the ordinance hereby amended, shall on conviction thereof be fined in the sum of One Hundred and Fifty (150) dollars.

Section 4. This ordinance shall and is hereby declared in full force and effect on and after the 15th day of September, 1890.

Only One Bottle.

Mr. Arthur M. Fisher, a reliable stock dealer, of Decatur, Ind., says: One dollar bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup completely cured me of a very annoying cough and pains in the chest, bordering on lung fever. I think it is the best cough syrup in the world and would not be without it. Resp. Yours, 100,000 Pounds of Wool Wanted at the Auburn Woolen Mills.

We acknowledge a greater number of subscriptions than usual at this season of the year. It often happens that subscribers, especially those at a distance forget all about the matter during the summer months, leaving the printer to get along as best he can, with his other resources. As a printer's expenses are just as great in the summer months as at any other time, this neglect often causes him to hustle around pretty lively to get through. We are glad to see that our patrons understand these things, and have been in a quiet way, helping to make the long, dull summer season a little easier on us. Thanks for this thoughtfulness.

John Otto did not remain long at Indianapolis. He found the work too hard, or rather the hours too long for one of his age, and so we presume he will not return.

The lady members of the Lutheran church have a special business meeting at the church, next Saturday afternoon, at three o'clock. All are earnestly requested to be present.

Get something ready for the fair and you can take it to both fairs if you choose. Get a premium list of both and look them over. You can then see what you can get ready to exhibit.

A party of Auburn ladies visited Mrs. Florence Buchanan, in Concord yesterday. They were Mrs. W. B. Brown, Mrs. H. B. McCord, Mrs. Frank Hogue, Mrs. M. Boland, Mrs. Geo. Schaab and Mrs. Al. Robbins.

J. L. Davis and Cal Husselman were in Ft. Wayne last week in the interest of the fair. Some of the Ft. Wayne business men have taken stock in the association and we may look for a good crowd from the Summit City.

A bevy of jolly ladies visited the COURIER office yesterday; Mrs. R. H. Weamer of Bristol, and her two sisters, Mrs. G. W. Weamer and Mrs. Frank Zimmerman of this place. We are happy to count them all friends of the COURIER force.

A. D. Gotschius writes from his Kansas home, that as he has finished threshing, he will send in his $1.50 for the COURIER as usual. We assure him we appreciate this kind of promptness, and hope Mr. G., will be correspondingly prosperous.

Mrs. Gregg of St. Louis, Mo., is here visiting Mrs. G. W. Weamer and Mrs. Frank Zimmerman, who are her husband's sisters. Their sister, Mrs. Morse of Angola, with her daughter, and Mrs. R. H. Weamer of Bristol, are also here for a family visit.

Mrs. Hare, and her two daughters Mrs. Henry Johnson and Mrs. F. J. Yesbera, came back from Lakeside Saturday. Mrs. Emily Dills and daughter Kittie and Mrs. Little came back Tuesday. The rest of the Auburn colony will remain awhile longer.

Sedan will have a social Saturday evening. The Lutheran church at that place will give an ice cream social, or festival Aug. 9, for the benefit of the church. Let everyone who can do so, come out and assist these worthy people in a worthy cause.

Mr. Madden got home last week from his trip east in search of marble and granite, for use at their marble works. He says they are all right now, and will have plenty of material. So no one need hesitate on account of a scarcity of material for his monument.

Peter Noragon came over from Butler Tuesday morning on the early train as he has some ditch matters to attend to. He finds these things extremely expensive, especially for him, as he can no longer work. His health has been rather poorer than usual, this summer.

John Bohler one of our good friends living at Waterloo surprised us yesterday by a nice sack of potatoes, the best we have seen this year and good enough for any year. He is one of the fortunate ones who have potatoes to sell. He has delivered a good many here, some to Kruger, some to Weyer and some to Hollister.

J. P. Ensley still lingers near the old home here, but will soon rejoin the folks in California. The beautiful line of trees we noted on the Avenue last week, are in part his. He planted 130 of them, and though, we found them in such splendid condition a short time ago now, the extremely hot and dry weather has killed many of them. It is a great pity as well as quite a loss.

Mr. Dills county attorney and J. L. Davis, county treasurer, did a good service to the county Tuesday, by collecting all the tax due on the stock of goods, of W. J. Bowman's late stock, now owned by the Carnahans. Taking the view justified by law, and under Mr. Dills' advice, Mr. Davis brought suit for the taxes as shown by last spring's assessment, and rather than have the goods sold Carnahan sent on the $61.

Miss Julia M. Hodge and her cousin Miss Myers of Kingston, Pa., are in Chicago visiting friends. They will go to Michigan City to make a brief stay with Mr. Mott's family.

Nicholas Ensley and family were home over Sunday. We believe Mr. E. considererd it necessary to come back and register though it is likely he would be entitled to vote anyway.

S. R. Rickel of Waterloo, has been here a week or so with a force of men, building a new house for Frank Harris over in Gas Addition. We understand Frank had sold his other house and lot

John Speight of Findlay, Ohio, has bought here, and will locate among us permanently. The bargain was negotiated by Rickel & Sprott our wide awake real estate agents. That's the way to raise our census.

Reuben Sawvel, DeKalb county's next treasurer, was here last Monday. He is looking sound and feeling well, though the hot harvest has given him a bronzed and healthy look. We predict a good vote for Reuben Sawvel this fall.

The Ligonier fair begins Sept. 16, next week after the Auburn fair. It promises to be a good one. The Banner printed their premium list, and of course it is a daisy for beauty and information. J. H. Hoffman is secretary.

The orders of the commissioners should be enforced in regard to running over the public square. Great injury has been done to the grass during the dry weather. Boys play ball, wheels run over it, and business men cut paths across it.

We understand that S. R. Heberling has taken the agency for the Western Reversible Road Grader, which is perhaps the best and most common sense machine ever offered for sale in this part of the country. All who contemplate buying a road grader, should give this machine a trial before buying elsewhere. 31-33

The backbone of the long hot weather and dry spell was broken Sunday evening by a brisk shower that came up at about ten o'clock. The next day, there was another very good, though short rain, and the air soon cooled somewhat. It was greatly needed as it has been the worst drouth our county has ever had. Potatoes are ruined, and corn not much better, although in favored places, we will get a little of each. And we can stand a great deal more rain.

J. M. Brumbeck of Fairfield township, one of the most thrifty farmers of DeKalb county, was hauling his wheat here last week. He marketed here, with L. J. Miller about 1,400 bushels of good wheat and is not yet done hauling. It was the crop of 1889 and of good quality in good condition. The editor of this paper, is under the impression that Mr. Brumbeck had the first windmill in the county and about the first tile drain. At least he was the first we heard of. He is also among the first of our intelligent farmers, to turn his attention to breeding fine cattle. And it is very gratifying to us to know that he has been successful in his business.

Hank Little, who does the moral (?) and intellectual (?) work on the Garrett Who-Who was in his "natural condition" again Saturday and Monday. In fact he has been in that fix several times lately. But we did not mention it, as they were such weak and shortlived little drunks, so unlike his previous efforts in that line, that if told, people would think he was degenerating—losing his power of long continued drunkenness. As we did not wish to injure his reputation in the only thing he ever could do successfully, we passed it over without notice. We hope he will forgive us and love us as ever, etc.

We have not thought best to criticise the reports of the population of Auburn, as they are so manifestly incorrect, that it seemed as if any one residing in northeastern Indiana, would know the injustice it does us. But all the papers hereabouts copy it with little or no comment. Auburn is put down as having a population of 1,982, when it is no doubt we have nearly or quite 3,000. The only way we can see, for such an error to happen, is by a mistake in the types. A figure one, may have been used, when a figure two would be right. That would put it at 2,982, which we believe would be about right. Mr. Green, the man who took the census here, claims he has no right to tell how the figures do stand, but says the reported population is not correct. We took the number of our people several years ago, and then had more than the report now gives us. Surely our population has nearly doubled since then. There is something wrong, somewhere.

Mrs. J. C. Henry was at Angola the first of the week visiting friends.

Dr. Nusbaum will be at home Monday Aug. 11th, to resume his practice.

Schaab & Bro. are offering grand bargains in the new notice they give to-day.

Grain sacks, carpet warps, tickings, muslin, shirtings, ginghams and calicoes, good values at Mrs. Jones & Son's.

Charles Eckhart came back from Petoskey last week. He is looking well, but we have not had a chance to talk with him.

Don't forget the date of the DeKalb Co. Fair Sept. 8 to 12. Get something ready and go. Good races. Everything new.

The marshal has made an examination of all the fire cisterns and finds that the dry weather has affected them a little. The one at the school ground has fifteen feet of water but the others have only about five to ten.

The Commissioners were in session Monday and Tuesday, to settle with the township trustees. The new trustees are now in office, which they will hold under the present law for four years, and then they must go out.

G. A. R. day at Rome City Friday of this week. Gen Gibson speaks that day. The Wabash road will give an exursion from Butler, fare round trip 75 cents. Train starts at 7:45 and gets to Auburn at 8:10, Cedar Creek at 8:27.

Republicans should read the Senator Plumb article that we publish, and see what a leading republican says about the tariff making things cheaper. He shows, just as we often have, that the tariff is a tax that is added to the cost and then collected off the consumer.

Mr. Eckhart and wife had a splendid trip, at the close of their stay at Petoskey. They went up the lakes by steamer, visited Mackinac and the resorts there, went down Lakes Huron, St. Clair and Erie, and visited Buffalo and Niagara Falls. They return in good health and spirits.

An English edition of The Ladies' Home Journal is to be brought out in London on a scale never before attempted by an American magazine, and Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis, proprietor of the Journal, and Mr. Edward W. Bok, the editor, sailed for Europe last week to perfect arrangements.

Joseph Wilson, the new trustee of Stafford, and Wm. Whetsell the new one for Franklin were up to see us Monday. Mr. Wilson made an excellent record when he filled the office before. Mr. Whetsell is a new man at the business, but he has the ability and will no doubt make a successful officer.

The pulpit of the Baptist church next Sunday morning and evening will be filled by Rev. Dwight Spencer, D. D. of Indianapolis, Ind. Dr. Spencer is general home missionary for Indiana and Illinois, and is a very able speaker. No collection will be taken. All are cordially invited to be present.

The postoffice has been so darkened by putting up the new buildings on the east side that large windows had to be cut, opening into the room at the north end, so as to give them light from that end. We are told the office will soon be moved into Mr. Gordon's building, the one now occupied by Mr. Læmle.

Charlie McClellan, jr. reached home Monday, accompanied by his bride. They received a friendly greeting here, from all our people. The young wife made a good impression on all who met her. It appears to us that Charlie has done a most sensible thing. We believe they will reside in Washington for a time at least.

Mrs. Horace Hoffman returned to her home at Monticello after a pleasant visit with the people here. She seems to be a lady of more than average amability and intelligence, just such a one as our friend Prof. Hoffman would naturally appreciate. Our people who made her acquaintance, have become her enthusiastic friends.

H. N. Coffinbruy, did a good piece of allowable campaign work Saturday, by bringing over a car load of voters to be registered. To his credit, it should be said that he turned no one away, though quite a number were republicans. Mr. Coffinbury owes a large part of his popularity to the fairness and impartiality with which he treats all the men in his division.

Louis Læmle, of the Famous, moves in a short time to New Mexico, where he expects to locate in the Pecos Valley. He has been there before, and will have the benefit of his former experience. Mr. Læmle has been in business in Auburn several years, and we have found him a reliable and pleasant business man in all our dealings. We hope his future will be successful.

All the county candidates on the republican ticket were here Saturday. They appeared to be interested in getting their voters registered. But there seems to be a well founded opinion that the real aim was to get ready to raise another big sum of money like that which proved so effective in 1886. They will do well, however, to remember the new bribery law, and the Arford case.

Bro. Brown of the Columbia City Times headed a delegation of the Churubusco friends of P. F. Ryan, that came up Tuesday to see him. He also, in company with H. C. Pressler of Busco, and Mr. Kichler and Chris. Fell of this place called on the COURIER. All express deep sorrow at the tragic event, for Mr. Ryan had hosts of warm friends, both in this place and in Whitley county.

L. Bowers, who has an accurate thermometer, one of those used by the U. S. signal service, reports Sunday last, as the hottest day this season. The instrument was in the shade on the north side of the house, and showed 98½. We presume that many thermometers showed even higher, as the more imperfect ones, generally go higher in summer and lower in winter, than do the accurate ones, like that of Mr. Bowers.

STABBING AFFAIR.

P. F. Ryan, of the Band Sawmill Seriously, perhaps Fatally Stabbed!

About five o'clock last Saturday afternoon, word came up town, that a terrible crime had been attempted, possibly accomplished, at the south end of town, and that the victim was P. F. Ryan, one of the most popular employes at the great Nickey & Gandy band sawmill. Rumors flew thick and fast, and at times it was reported that the injured man was dying. Doctors were summoned, and Sheriff Plum started to hunt for Ryan's assailant. Drs. Swarts, Matheny and Allen dressed his wounds, and then Frank Blattner, under the direction of C. E. Emanuel, who is deputy prosecutor, took down Ryan's statement of the affair, as it was not known how long he would live. The facts appear to be, that two men had been hauling logs for the mill, John Blany and John Kous, claiming the latter had been wronged by Ryan, in the measure of the logs they had hauled, went down there to find Ryan and settle the matter. Ryan it seems claimed he had scaled the logs properly, but they said he had not, and insisted that some logs had been overlooked and sawed up without scaling at all. The dispute grew hot, and finally Ryan told them to go to the office, and get the amount they claimed, and then not haul any more for the company, as they had been there before to complain and could not agree. This angered Kous still more. He had been whittling all the time, with a pocket knife, but when Ryan discharged him, he jumped up and called the latter a d—d Irish son of a b—h, when Ryan struck him, but did not knock him over. Kous jumped for Ryan, clinched him, and drove the knife into his abdomen toward the right side, and below the liver. Ryan caught both hands over the wound and getting away from Kous, started to run, still holding his hands over the injury. Kous overtook him, and caught him around the body and tried while holding him fast, to drive the knife into him again, for a thick time-book in Ryan's pocket, is nearly half cut through by the knife point. In the meantime, Oliver Pipes, a mill hand saw the fight and came to Ryan's aid, starting after the first stabbing. It is claimed that Blany tried to keep Pipes back, saying, "Let them fight it out." Others deny this. Pipes reached Ryan before Kous succeeded in hurting him further than already stated, being probably prevented by the thickness of the book, and perhaps believing in his frenzy that in jabbing the book, he was stabbing his victim. Others came to Pipes' assistance, and Ryan was taken from the mill yard, near the mill, where the fight happened, to the office of the company, north of the Wabash depot, where his wounds were dressed as already stated. He nearly fainted away once, while being carried to his home, but rallied, and seemed to stand it very well. Of course it was a great shock to his wife, and the four little girls, their children. But Ryan has a world of fortitude, an so has his wife, both showing true courage through all this trying ordeal. He rested fairly well that night and the next day, in spite of the terrible heat. Monday morning at about three o'clock, Drs. Myers and Greenwalt, of Ft. Wayne, assisted by the local physicians, dressed his wounds. The intestines affected were taken out and cleansed, the injured one sewed up again and replaced. That night he showed signs of fever and seemed to be worse. Tuesday morning, however, he seemed to be holding his own, though considerably weakened, for it must be remembered, that but little nourishment can be given, as its passage through the injured intestines would irritate them, and prevent their healing or uniting where cut. He steadily gained Tuesday, and yesterday, seemed so much better that it is believed that he will recover, but it has been a desperate case. Kous had gone home, and when Sheriff Plum, went to find him, had disappeared. But while they were hunting for him, he changed his mind, and came down town with Oscar Elson, and gave himself up and is now in jail.

Blany has not been arrested, as was reported. He is at his home here. We understand, the prosecutor will need him as a witness at least. Mr. Dills has been employed by Kous, to defend him when the trial comes off. At latest, Mr. Ryan is doing well.

Fort Wayne Fair.

The Annual fair and trotting meeting of the Northern Indiana Fair Association will take place at Ft. Wayne, in September, beginning the 16th and ending the 19th. We are told they will make an extra effort this year to have a good fair. For information, address,

The Camp Fire Companion and the COURIER have a clubbing arrangement. The Companion is a monthly at 75 cents a year, and at club rates both papers for $1.80. Samples of each can be seen here.

Read the old poem against railroads which we copy from the Goshen Democrat. It will sound strange to the younger people. And yet, we remember how in 1869, people felt sorry for the "poor wagoners" that drove the hack through Waterloo and Auburn to Ft. Wayne. The Jackson road was working its way south, and it was seen that when the cars began to run, these men, and their teams would be thrown out of work. And it did look a little hard for these two or three men but they seem to have got work at something else, and the road employs perhaps 100 men or more in their place. And this seems to be about the way with labor saving improvements generally. Every man can get something to do, if he is willing to work.

Carpets, Furniture and Baby Carriages.

Goods delivered free in Auburn provided your bill amounts to $25 or more. No charge for packing. We shall continue our liberal arrangement with our out of town customers for the coming fall season. Under it we have built up a very large trade in towns adjacent to Fort Wayne. People are finding out that in addition to having an immense, handsome and stylish stock to select from, they can also save about one third in the cost of their goods. We solicit your trade on furniture, carpets, lamps, baby carriages, decorated crockery and bed room sets, and we ask you to commend our establishment to your friends. Goods are very handsome this fall and prices lower than ever.

THE real sum which Mr. Stanley received in cash for his latest book is said to be in the neighborhood of $70,000. The story that it was $206,000 is absurd.

ONE of the curiosities found by the census enumerators in Madison County, Georgia, is a boy nine years old, who has never been given a name by his parents.

TWO BOYS who wandered from the town of Thorne, N. M., into the mountains were killed and eaten by bears. A third boy escaped and told the fate of his companions.

A QUEER old woman in Albany, N. Y., recently changed her mind about making a bank deposit because the teller wouldn't promise to return to her the identical coins which she intended depositing. She had made a list of the dates so that there "would be no mistake."

THE Russian War Department, it is reported, is considering the advisability of acquiring the sole right to a new shirt of mail, which is said to be extraordinarily light, impervious to bullets or saber thrusts and cheap to manufacture. A Russian general is the inventor.

SUPPOSING that you wished to walk through all the streets and lanes and alleys of London, and were able to arrange your trip so that you never traversed the same one twice, you would have to walk ten miles every day for nine years before your journey would be completed.

NINE-TENTHS of the dolls sold in this country are said to come from Germany, and the principal seat of manufacture is Sonneberg, in Thuringen, a town of about 10,000 inhabitants. Dollmaking is almost the entire industry of the place. It is not remunerative, as the people are very poor, owing to the low wages paid.

A FRENCH savant has been calculating the time required to perform a journey around the earth, with the following result: A man walking day and night, 428 days; a railway train 40 days; sound, at a medium temperature, 32½ hours; a cannon-ball, 21¼ hours; light, a trifle over one-tenth of a second; electricity, a little under one-tenth of a second.

THIRTY young girls in Cheyenne have been enrolled as Wyoming State Guards and are drilling in uniform. They expect to march in the coming Statehood celebration. Thousands who do not drill nor march are, nevertheless, State and national guards, and constitute a strong corps in the army of defense against intemperance, vice and infidelity. In time of necessity they become an efficient army of offense as well.

WILL CARLETON is reported as having recently said: "Other writers of verse have laid great stress on the artistic faculty which many of them have possessed in an eminent degree, but with me the aim has always been first and last to reach the heart of the people, and to say those things which should entertain and make better. I hope I have not altogether failed in my efforts. I would rather appeal to the heart of a man than to his intellect."

A NEGRO and his wife, both well dressed, and both as black as chunks of anthracite coal, boarded a crowded car in Cincinnati the other night. The man stood on the platform, his wife found a seat inside. The conductor came for the fare. "I'll pay for two," the black man said, "myself and the lady in the car." "The colored woman?" the conductor politely asked. "No," was the surprising answer, "the negress who sits on the right-hand side."

THE Halifax Herald says that we ought to adopt another name as it thinks the United States of America is about equal to no name at all. "If our cousins," it remarks, without even the suggestion of a smile, "really intend to perpetuate the mistake they made a century ago in separating themselves from their kinsmen of the Anglo-Saxon race, they should try and give themselves a name befitting their ancestry and the land which British prowess won for them."

SIR HENRY DE BURGH-LAWSON thinks that he will revolutionize naval construction by his plan for constructing ships with three keels, between which their bottoms are curved in combination with special internal propellers, worked and housed in chambers from which the water is partially excluded, each propeller having separate machinery, working independently of each other. Sir Henry claims that rolling would be almost prevented and that the ship's power of climbing waves would be immensely increased.

THE Duke of Edinburgh, besides being a clever violin-player, is an enthusiastic postage-stamp collector. All the royal family have certain hobbies, and very creditable ones, too. Of china, bronzes and other works of art there is no better judge than the Prince of Wales; at the war game the Duke of Connaught is not to be beaten; while the late Duke of Albany, as a critic of Shakspeare and collector of folios and quartos, was well known. The powers of the Empress Frederic and Princess Christian with the pen would get them a good living any day; the Marchioness of Lorne is as good in painting as in sculpture, while the Princess Beatrice is one of the best amateur actresses. Taken altogether, the Queen's sons and daughers are not wanting in versatility.

JAMES MELVIN, of Concord, Mass., is a terrible sufferer from chronic rheumatism contracted while in the army during the late war. For twelve years he has lain upon a bed without changing his position. The osseous portions of his body have united into one piece, and from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet not a joint responds to his will. Not a limb is movable and every bone in his frame has grown into the adjoining bone. In all those long years of affliction Melvin has never uttered one word of complaint.

WHICH class of population is the most addicted to reading, asks the Pall Mall Budget. Some interesting light is thrown on the question by the latest report of the Birmingham free libraries committee. Among other tables therein given is one showing the occupations of borrowers admitted during 1889. Here are some of the figures: Scholars and students, 1,392; clerks and book-keepers, 1,138; errand and office boys, 301; teachers, 293; shop assistants, 290; jewelers, 216; compositors and printers, 192; milliners and dress-makers, 109. Almost at the bottom of the list come journalists, 6; news agents, 2; and reporters, 2. Is this because they have libraries of their own, or because the people who write in newspapers lose the taste for reading books?

ANY experiment made to ascertain how long a man can exist without food endangers the health. The human machine can consume itself when it gets no fresh fuel, and this process may last until there is nothing left to consume. Death then ensues, due either to exhaustion or loss of heat. A fat pig was buried in its sty for one hundred and sixty days under a chalk cliff. Its weight was reduced from one hundred and sixty pounds to forty pounds. In 1831 a murderer at Toulouse committed suicide by abstaining from food for sixty-three days. A few years ago a lady determined to eat nothing; she died on the fiftieth day. A French doctor who made experiments on animals found that sudden death was not uncommon long before the normal time. This occurred from "syncope."

CARPENTERS and painters have frequent occasion to fill nail-holes and other defects in the woodwork of houses. Putty is the substance relied upon to do this work, but there are objections to its use. The Scientific American recommends a substitute. The following method of filling old nail-holes in wood is not only simple but is said to be effectual. Take fine sawdust and mix into a thick paste with glue, pound it into the hole, and when dry it will make the wood as good as new. One correspondent says he has followed this for thirty years with unvarying success in repairing bellows, which is the most severe test known. Often by frequent attachment of new leather to old bellows frames the wood becomes so perforated that there is no space to drive the nails, and even if there was the remaining holes would allow the air to escape. A treatment with glue and sawdust paste invariably does the work, while lead, putty and other remedies always fail.

Scales that Will Weigh a Hair.

The finest thing in the way of delicately adjusted scales of which I have heard recently has just been turned out by a Philadelphia firm for the mint at New Orleans, and they are certainly marvels of mechanical invention and expert workmanship. There are two pair. The larger has a capacity of 10,000 ounces troy, or about 785 pounds avoirdupois, and when loaded to its full capacity will indicate the variation of one-thousandth of an inch. The other is intended for lighter work. All its bearings are of agate. This instrument is believed to be the most delicate in the world. It will give the precise weight of a human hair and is susceptible to the slightest atmospheric change. A signature written on a card with an ordinary pencil will make a perceptible difference in the weight of the card.

Before the Flag.

In a certain New York mission is a bright street fellow, who, if this incident be taken as an indication, bids fair to develop the brains and patriotic sentiment of a good American citizen.

A gentleman announced his intention of delivering an address on political reform in the neighborhood of the mission, a particularly disorderly district. He and his friends were informed upon good authority that if the speech were made the speaker would be pelted with rotten eggs.

It seemed that the proposed address, which, it had been believed, would exert an important influence, must be given up. A small boy, between whom and the speaker a friendship had developed at the mission, solved the difficulty by an ingenious expedient.

"I tell you what to do," said he, "hang the American flag back of the platform, and you stand before the flag. The roughs won't throw eggs at the stars and stripes."

AN important advance in surgery—the successful substitution of catgut, ivory and bone for defects in bones, muscles and nerve sinews—was illustrated by Professor Gluck at the surgical congress at Berlin. The inserted material sucks up the juices of the body, establishing the junction of the separated ends without any shortening of the part. Professor Gluck presented cases in which mobility had been restored to defective fingers—a hitherto impossible feat—by insertions of from two to four inches of catgut; a case in which the removal of a tumor from the thigh had left a defective bone, which was remedied by the insertion of ivory, shortening being prevented; and a case in which a large piece of nerve in the groin had been replaced with catgut, with no serious impairment of functions.

ILLINOIS CAMPAIGN.

GEN. JOHN M. PALMER'S OPENING SPEECH AT GIRARD.

Thousands of Farmers Flock to the Speaking-Place and Hear Unanswerable Arguments—The Fallacies of Protection Flapdoodle Exposed to the Light for the Benefit of Voters.

[From the Chicago Times.]

The first gun in the Illinois campaign, which promises to be highly interesting for the Republicans, was fired at Girard on Friday. It wasn't a city meeting; it was a tariff-reform picnic especially for the farmers, and the farmers were there—six bands, one drum corps, and so many delegations from rural precincts that they could not be counted. The crowd was above the average in size and enthusiasm, probably 6,000, and their lungs were in prime condition. A. N. Yancey was made Chairman and Owen Scott, candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District, opened the proceedings with a short, nervous, and able address on the tariff. "Our Republican friends," said Mr. Scott, "in '88 declared Gen. Palmer too old to make the canvass; that he lacked the vigor of youth. But the young men the veteran statesman met on the stump found he was the friskiest colt in their recollection, and he will tire them all out this campaign."

Gov. Palmer's first appearance this season was the signal for round after round of applause. Mr. Yancey's introduction of Gen. Palmer was one of the most eloquent and feeling addresses that distinguished legislator ever delivered. He referred to the active part Gen. Palmer had taken in shaping the destiny of the State, and followed his career from the time he made Macoupin County his home to the unanimous and unsought nomination by the Democracy of the State for the United States Senate.

When the applause died out Gen. Palmer referred feelingly to the great changes that had taken place among his old associates in Macoupin County. Continuing, he said:

"I am in a peculiar condition. I have been nominated by the Democracy of the State; not by a mere convention, but by the people of the towns and school districts and farms, for the United States Senate. They have said the time has come when that body shall be made popular. They realize that year after year power is escaping from the people, and the citizens of Illinois feel that the time is propitious for an earnest attempt to bring this branch of legislative government nearer their control. It can not be supposed here, where I am known so well, whatever may be said to the contrary, that I have engaged in this contest for the sake of office. You know I have never been a seeker after office for the sake of office. I have always been ready to do my duty as a citizen, and I never counted to see whether my friends were in a majority or minority. I felt myself under an obligation to take the position assigned me. My past life has been in accord with this principle.

"I am here to-day to discharge a plain duty. I come before you not in my own personal behalf, but in answer to the demand of nearly four hundred thousand freemen. There are several questions before the people of the State this year. The first is the matter of recovering the control of the Government by the people. What is the danger that menaces? It must be apparent to all of you that the men in control of the Government are seeking to enlarge and cement their hold on power, and the people should be brought to a realization of their peril. Speaker Reed has taken the House by the throat; it has lost its deliberative character. A despotism has been established in the House of Representatives, the only department of the Federal Government whose members are chosen directly by the people. The Republicans have determined that the control of the election of members of the House shall be taken from the people and placed in the hands of party managers."

The General ridiculed the claim that the force bill would affect only the South. Referring to this, he said:

"A despotism knows no territory. It is but a pretext. The intention is to subject not only the Southern but the Northern districts to the iron rule of party necessity. But no despot has yet thought of subjecting the electors to the arbitrary control of a party machine with Federal guards. You can yet elect members of the General Assembly without the espionage of bayonets. The struggle of the Democratic party in Illinois to-day is to recover control of the Senate by the people. The Republicans have not chosen to nominate a candidate for the Senate, though I am informed by their newspapers that the party abounds in great men. Who is the Republican candidate for the Senate? You do not know and I do not know, but when the Republicans in the General Assembly meet next January in a little room in Springfield you free men will know.

"Why not know now? Because you might ask him some questions that he might not like to answer. I am told it's to be Mr. Farwell. One of his principal claims on the people of Illinois is the fact that he voted in favor of a bill appropriating $300,000 for something to explode up in the air to bring rain. This achievement will entitle him to great popular support. If the Republicans carry the next Legislature it will be for them to choose their own man in their own way. The Democrats have concluded that their candidate should be known."

Gen. Palmer then referred to the control of matters of taxation and finance by Congress, declaring that the power of Congress in this particular was absolutely uncontrollable. He advised the people to take the control of their own affairs, and asked if any man presented or delegated to another the management of his own home. He spoke of Blaine's opposition to the McKinley bill, and said, quoting Blaine's letter: "It does not offer a market for a bushel of wheat, nor any other product of the farm." He scouted the idea that protection benefited the farmers, and told a story of Joe Mann regarding an incident that happened at a meeting of the latter in Indiana in 1888. "I told my audience," said Mr. Mann, "that if there was a man in the crowd who would go home that night and figure out the benefit he derived from protection and send the result to J. B. Mann, Danville, Ill., I would be ever so much obliged. Two days afterward I received the following letter:

"'J. B. Mann, Esq., Danville:

"'MY DEAR SIR—I have taken that problem you gave us to work out, have carefully considered and investigated it, and have come to the conclusion after mature deliberation and thought that, in my opinion, the profit to me on account of protection is not a —— cent.'"

When the applause and laughter had subsided Gen. Palmer continued:

"I met a man the other day, an old soldier and a brave one. We talked over the tariff question. 'How do you bear it?' I asked.

"'I an't going to vote with the Democrats,' he replied.

"'But this concerns your own pocket,' I urged.

"'But I ain't going to vote the Democratic ticket.'

"'But are you not willing to accept the help of men who are willing to do what you want done?'

"'No, I ain't; I am going to vote the Republican ticket.'

"Shall we," said Gen. Palmer, "be kept apart forever by prejudices like that?"

The orator then spoke of unmarketable farm lands and unremunerative prices for farm products, of the decrease in rural and the increase of the city population, and declared the principal reason for this condition was the high tariff on the utensils and clothing of the farmer and the want of a market for his products. In 1888, when the Democrats insisted that the tariff should be revised, the Republicans retorted: "The tariff will be revised by its friends." He quoted a sentence from the platform of the Macon County farmers' convention as expressive of his sentiments: "We are in favor of having the tariff revised by its victims." "If equality is equality," said the Governor, "the Government should protect all pursuits—protect you and me—give us a bounty so our business shall become profitable. Why not pay us something? They reply: Because you are fools; you have consented to tax yourselves for our benefit and you will continued to do it. We fight each other and they pick our pockets."

He denounced in scathing terms the office-holding trust established by the Republican party, and declared the tendency toward a centralized despotism was apparent on every hand. The enormous appropriations of nearly $500,000,000 by this Congress was ably reviewed and the subsidies to ships then denounced.

"This enormous sum is taken from your pockets without your consent, and no Senator from Illinois has been heard in opposition, and why? Because they are responsible to the Republican caucus and not to the people. What does Mr. Cullom care about you? You didn't elect him. He is not answerable to the voters of the State. When Gen. Logan died a great man came down to Springfield from Chicago with a little gripsack, a little caucus was held, and Charles Farwell was elected to the United States Senate. Who governs Mr. Farwell? The party caucus. You say to him: 'You are not looking after my interest. You are not representing me by your votes.' He answers: 'What have I to do with you or your interests?' He don't recognize your right to watch him."

Gen. Palmer closed with an eloquent reference to the position Illinois ought to take in the country. Two States, New York and Indiana, have dominated the politics of the country for many years, and everybody knew how patiently Illinois had taken an inferior position. It is now third in population and wealth, has the great metropolis of the Northwest and West, and it is time it was taking its place at the head of the procession. The Northwestern policy is sure to prevail. What is it? The largest freedom in trade consistent with the wants of the Government economically administered. Whisky and tobacco taxes have been released in order to furnish excuses for more protection. "In time the business of the country will be paralyzed by these artificial helps that simple disturb and never benefit. Illinois must shed itself of these leading-strings of the Northeastern States. Your agriculture is dying under this system, and there is no relief for you until you take hold of these policies and reverse them. If you are free you will do it, and if you are the slaves of prejudice you won't."

BLAINE WRITES AGAIN,

AND DEMANDS A LIMITED SYSTEM OF FREE TRADE.

He Still Thinks the McKinley Bill a Monstrosity—A Communication to Senator Frye of Deepest Interest—Protection Republicans, Please Read.

BAR HARBOR, July 22.

DEAR MR. FRYE—I have your reply to my letter and am glad that the essential part of it has been given to the press.

You ask me what assurance I have as to Spain's willingness to enter into reciprocal arrangements of trade with the United States. Your question surprises me, for you cannot have forgotten that only six years ago the Prime Minister of Spain, in his anxiety to secure free admission to our markets for the sugar of Cuba and Porto Rico, agreed to a very extensive treaty of reciprocity with Mr. John W. Foster, then our Minister at Madrid. A year before—in 1883—a very admirable treaty of reciprocity was negotiated by General Grant and Mr. William H. Prescott, as United States Commissioners, with the republic of Mexico—a treaty well considered in all its parts and all its details—whose results would, I believe, have proved highly advantageous to both countries. In view of the pending discussion it is a somewhat singular circumstance that both these treaties of reciprocity failed to secure the approval of Congress and failed for the express reason that both provided for the free admission of sugar. Congress would not then allow a single pound of sugar to come in free of duty under any circumstances whatever. And now the proposition to open our ports free to everybody's sugar and to do it with such rapidity that we are not to have a moment's time to see if we cannot make a better trade—a trade by which we may pay for at least a part of the sugar in the products of American farms and shops.

Our change of opinion has certainly been remarkable in so brief a period. Indeed, the only danger of our not securing advantageous treaties of reciprocity now is the possible belief on the part of those countries that we are so anxious for free sugar that by patient waiting they can secure all they desire without money and without price.

Fearing that result, I sought an interview with the eight Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means more than five months ago—to be exact, on the 10th day of last February. I endeavored to convince them that it would be expedient and wise to leave to the President, as the treaty-making power, an opportunity to see what advantageous arrangements of reciprocal trade could be effected. I was unable to persuade the committee to take my view. I mention this circumstance now because it has been charged in many quarters that the suggestion for reciprocity came too late. In fact, my effort was made before the tariff bill was reported to the House, or even framed in committee.

It is, I think, a very grave mistake to oppose this reciprocal position touching sugar from the fear that it may conflict in some way with the policy of protection. The danger is, I think, wholly in the opposite direction. Let us see what is proposed. Our Government has heretofore collected a heavy duty from sugar, amounting one year in the aggregate to $58,000,000, and averaging $50,000,000 per annum for a considerable period. We wish now to cheapen sugar by removing the duty.

The value of the sugar we annually consume is enormous. Shall we pay for it all in cash, or shall we seek a reciprocal arrangement by which a large part of it may be paid for in pork and beef and flour, in lumber and salt and iron, in shoes and calico and furniture, and a thousand other things? In short, shall we pay for it all in cash, or try friendly barter in part? I think the latter mode is the higher form of protection and the best way to promote trade.

I address this note to you, as I did my first, because you have taken an active and most intelligent interest in the increase of our trade with South America. When shall we enlarge our commercial intercourse with that great continent if we do not now make a beginning? If we now give away the duty on sugar, as we already have given away the duties on coffee and hides and rubber, and got nothing in exchange which shall be profitable to the farm or factory in the United States, what shall be our justification for the policy? You have recently received congratulations—in which I cordially join—on carrying the shipping bill through the Senate. Do you not think that a line of ships generously aided by the Government will have a better prospect for profit and for permanence, if we can give to them outward cargoes from the United States and not confine them to inward cargoes from Latin America? I am sincerely yours,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

The most extensive of all the protected industries of this country is that of coal mining, stretching through a score of States and employing 150,000 hands. As to that, we have the report, Jan. 19, 1889, of the Congressional Committee on Immigration:

"Generally speaking, the class of immigrants who have lately been imported and employed in the coal regions of this country are not such, in the opinion of the committee, as would make desirable inhabitants of the United States. They are of a very low order of intelligence. They do not come here with the intention of becoming citizens, their whole purpose being to accumulate by parsimonious, rigid, and unhealthy economy a sum of money and then return to their native land. They live in miserable sheds like beasts; the food they eat is so meager, scant, unwholesome, and revolting that it would nauseate and disgust an American workman, and he would find it difficult to sustain life upon it. Their habits are vicious, their customs are disgusting, and the effect of their presence here upon our social condition is to be deplored. They have not the influences, as we understand them, of a home—they do not know what the word means; and, in the opinion of the committee, no amount of effort would improve their morals or Americanize this class of immigrants. They have been brought here in such numbers and have been employed at such low wages that it has resulted in their replacing the American citizens who formerly performed this class of labor, until now there are comparatively few Americans engaged in mining coal in Pennsylvania."

Even this is not as expressive as was John Jarratt's testimony before the Senate Committee on Labor in 1883:

"Sixty thousand heads of families, to whom probably 200,000 women and children are looking for support, are in a pitiable, miserable condition, poorly paid, poorly clad, poorly fed and poorly housed. From my experience among the miners in England, I may say that they are really better cared for than the coal miners in the United States."

Since then John Jarratt has been retained at a salary by the employers whose treatment of their employes he thus denounced, was a leading protectionist speaker in the last campaign, and has been paid therefor by being made Consul to Birmingham.

In the Illinois coal fields the situation is even worse. The following is a conservative statement from a special investigator who went to Illinois for that purpose, made July 26, 1889:

"Ten thousand five hundred coal miners in Northern Illinois have been unemployed and destitute since May 1, when they refused a reduction of wages averaging 15 cents a ton. The number of strikers in the towns embraced in the mining districts is as follows: Braceville, 800; Braidwood and its vicinity, 1,200; Coal City, 1,000; Diamond, 500; La Salle and its vicinity, 1,800; Streator, 2,000; Clark City, 200; Gardner, 100; Spring Valley, 2,100; Roanoke, 100; and Winona, 200; total, 10,500."

Next to iron and coal mining manufacturers of wool and woolen goods are the most extensive of the protected industries. In 1888 the New York Herald investigated the situation at Passaic with the following result:

"Some five years ago owners of woolen mills in Passaic began to send for men in Europe to take the places of those in their employ who refused to submit to starvation wages. Hungarians were found to be most available, and after a few months Castle Garden swarmed with them.

"The direct importation of Hungarians for the purpose of being employed at Passaic was begun by Mr. Bash and Mr. Waterhouse, proprietors of woolen mills. Mr. Ammidown soon after benefited by what they had done to the extent of placing in his own establishment a number of the men whom they had brought over through their agents from the old country. The process of importation continued year by year and the unwelcome leaven spread until now Mr. Ammidown has in his own factory about two hundred imported Hungarians, and the other establishments a good many more.

"But not all have come directly from Hungary. A considerable percentage who were expected to do the rudest and most ordinary work were brought to Passaic from the coal regions of Pennsylvania.

"The Hungarians from the coal fields exacted only the merest pittance for the support of life, and they got it. The wages of the class to which they belong at Ammidown's mills are based to-day on the inexorable standard. Every American citizen should shudder when he reads of this. The average rate of wages is $5 a week.

"Think of that for grown-up men, a great proportion of whom are married and have children."

And the worst instances of depreciated pay are to be found in the establishment of Edward H. Ammidown, late President of the Protective Tariff League, the gentleman who poses as the champion of American manufacturers and incidentally as the friend of labor.

Throughout New England in the same industry the American operatives have been almost entirely driven out by Canadians. In the manufacture of clothing, upon which the tariff is even higher than on wool, and in which industry there are employed more operatives than in any other in the United States except farming, the labor is almost exclusively foreign "contract labor," the moral and social condition of the operatives is the lowest and the hours and condition of labor most intolerable. As to New York City, the most important center of this industry, where it is carried on by Poles, Slavs, and Hungarians, the following is from a Press dispatch of July 24, 1889:

"A committee from the Boston clothing trades unions is in this city and has been investigating the condition of the clothing manufacturing trade here. The wages of the clothing workers have been steadily decreasing in Boston, and work has become scarcer there. The Boston unions heard that New York had been taking away much of the business, and a committee was sent on to investigate. The committee have visited the East Side districts, where clothing is given out to work, and have come to the conclusion that the sweating system, which was exposed some time ago, was the cause of the decline of wages and the withdrawal of much of the trade from Boston. They describe the condition of the working people who are engaged in the sweating work as miserable in the extreme; worse than that of plantation negroes during the time of slavery in the South—men, women and children crowded into small, hot rooms, where they live and cook, and work for starvation wages fourteen hours and more out of the twenty-four.

"One man employed eight men in a small room and worked them fourteen hours a day. Some people in this building worked from 4 o'clock in the morning to 9 o'clock in the evening. Other sweaters paid their hands 50 cents for making a coat, and others paid their hands from $5 to $8 per week. One man, who employed fifteen men and made them work sixteen hours a day, paid them, not in money, but in the clippings of the cloth."

In Philadelphia, the next most important center, John Wanamaker is a leading employer in this branch. In one of the Philadelphia establishments which manufacture clothing for Mr. Wanamaker "the force is entirely European," and a few of the operatives receive an average of $4.50 a week. In another manufactory a middleman, who had barely made expenses at 60 cents a pair for trousers, was notified that no more than 40 cents would be paid in future. Wanamaker has the contract for supplying the uniforms for the employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he pays only $2.70 for making an entire suit.

The linen industry being among the most highly protected, we should expect to find the same process adopted—as we do. The following is from the official report of Mrs. Barry, the general investigator of women's work and wages of the Knights of Labor, published by the New Jersey Bureau of Labor Statistics in its report for 1887:

"March 14—Was sent to Patterson to look into the condition of the women and children employed in the linen-thread works of that city. There are some 1,400 or 1,500 persons employed in this industry, who were at that time out of employment for this reason: Children who work at what is called doffing were receiving $2.70 per week and asked for an increase of five cents per day. They were refused, and they struck, whereupon all the other employes were locked out. The abuse, injustice and suffering which the women of this industry endure from the tyranny, cruelty and slave-driving propensities of the employers is something terrible to be allowed existence in free America. In one branch of this industry the women are compelled to stand on a stone floor in water the year round, most of the time barefoot, with a spray of water from a revolving cylinder flying constantly against the breast; and the coldest night in winter as well as the warmest in summer, these poor creatures must go to their homes with water dripping from their underclothing along their path, because there could be no space for a few moments allowed them wherein to change their clothing. A constant supply of recruits is always on hand to take the places of any who dare rebel against the iron-clad authority of those in charge. The law is evaded in this matter: but the passage ticket on the Inman Steamship Line, that are advanced at from $5 to $7 more than they actually cost to the friends of those employed here or in the factory of the firm at Belfast, Ireland, and which are paid for after they commence work for the firm on this side of the ocean in $1 installments at their semi-monthly payments, furnish good grounds for a test case in the near future. Add to this the most meager wages, crowded, badly ventilated rooms, want of proper sanitary conditions and many other cruelties, and a fair-minded public can form some solution of the "unexplainable phenomena."

A Record-Breaker.

"Now," said the great Detective, triumphantly, "I've got you dead to rights. I've got your whole record. In fact, I'm your record from the time you were born until now——"

"Yes," said the great Criminal, pulling out a club, as though a sudden thought had struck him. "And I'm going to break the record right here."

Would Try.

"But," said the man who, in a thoughtless moment, had asked a rather old girl to marry him, "some of the wisest people have declared that marriage is a failure."

"Yes," she answered, "but it is also declared by some of the wisest people that it is better to try and fail than not try at all. I reckon we'll get married, Bill."—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.

It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

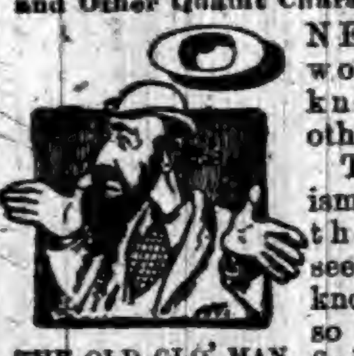
LIFE IN A LARGE CITY.

FAMILIAR STREET SCENES WITNESSED IN CHICAGO.

Odd Ways of Earning a Living—All Indoor Business Is Imitated on the Curb—Chestnut Venders, Old Clothes Men, Umbrella Peddlers, Flower Girls, Rag-Pickers, Hat-Buyers, Street Musicians, and Other Quaint Characters.

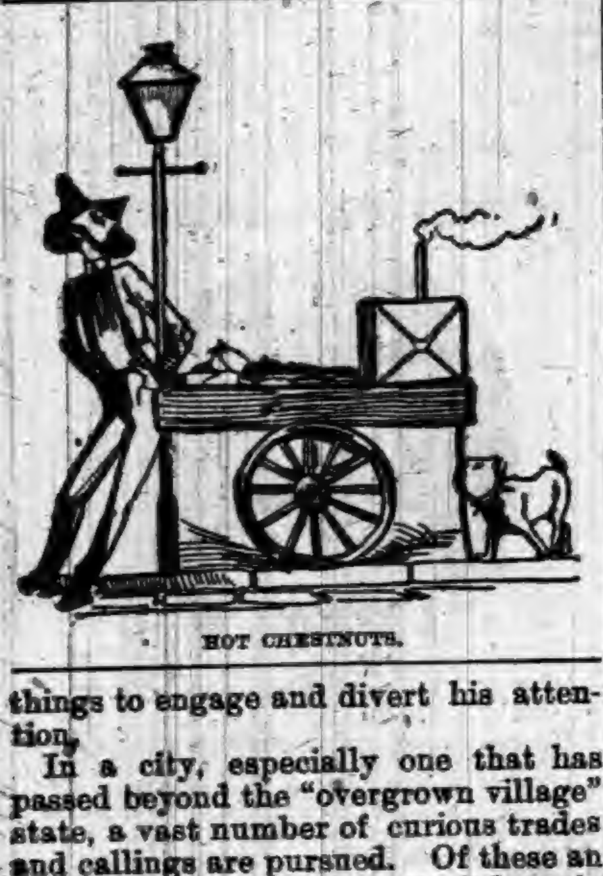


THE OLD CLO' MAN.

"ONE-HALF the world doesn't know how the other half lives."

This wise aphorism, the exact author of which seems to be unknown, is nowhere so well exemplified as in a large and populous city like Chicago. In the rural districts, villages, and smaller towns, most people are engaged in some reputable and well understood occupation, and the business of one man is pretty well understood and quite freely commented upon by every other man—and woman.

In Chicago it is different. This is not because the urban citizen lacks the curiosity of his country cousin, but is due to the fact that he has so many things to engage and divert his attention.



HOT CHESTNUTS.

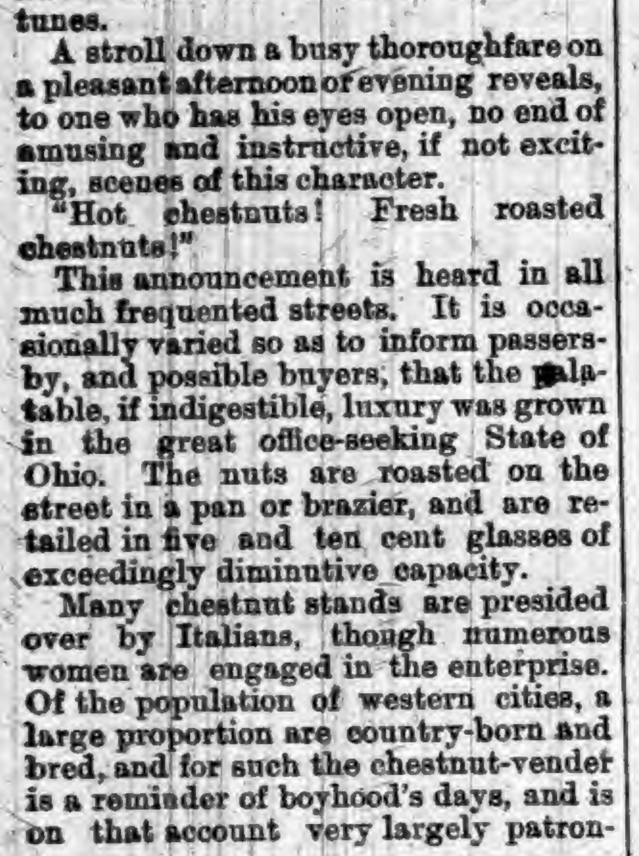
In a city, especially one that has passed beyond the "overgrown village" state, a vast number of curious trades and callings are pursued. Of these an astonishing number are carried on in the public streets. In cities of the magnitude of Chicago, thousands of people have no other place of business than the sidewalks and curbstones, where they not only earn a livelihood but in numerous instances amass fortunes.

A stroll down a busy thoroughfare on a pleasant afternoon or evening reveals, to one who has his eyes open, no end of amusing and instructive, if not exciting, scenes of this character.

"Hot chestnuts! Fresh roasted chestnuts!"

This announcement is heard in all much frequented streets. It is occasionally varied so as to inform passers-by, and possible buyers, that the palatable, if indigestible, luxury was grown in the great office-seeking State of Ohio. The nuts are roasted on the street in a pan or brazier, and are retailed in five and ten cent glasses of exceedingly diminutive capacity.

Many chestnut stands are presided over by Italians, though numerous women are engaged in the enterprise. Of the population of western cities, a large proportion are country-born and bred, and for such the chestnut-vender is a reminder of boyhood's days, and is on that account very largely patronized. Chestnuts are chestnuts, to judge from the price demanded for a handful, and they are, not infrequently, "chestnuts" in the sense of being decidedly ancient and musty.



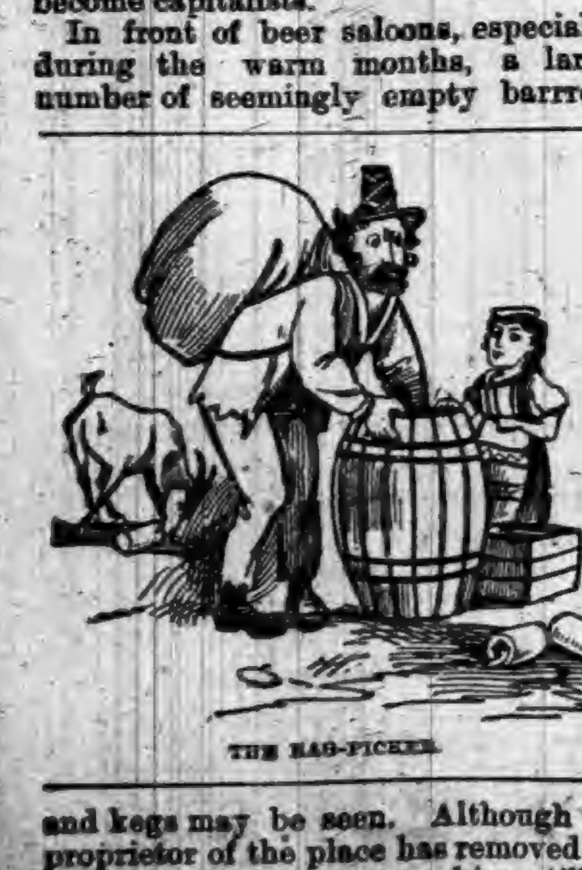
OLD HATS REPAIRED.

The "old clo' man" is known to all. He purchases cast-off garments, which when renovated and rejuvenated, so far as the art of the repairer extends, find a ready sale and yield large profits.

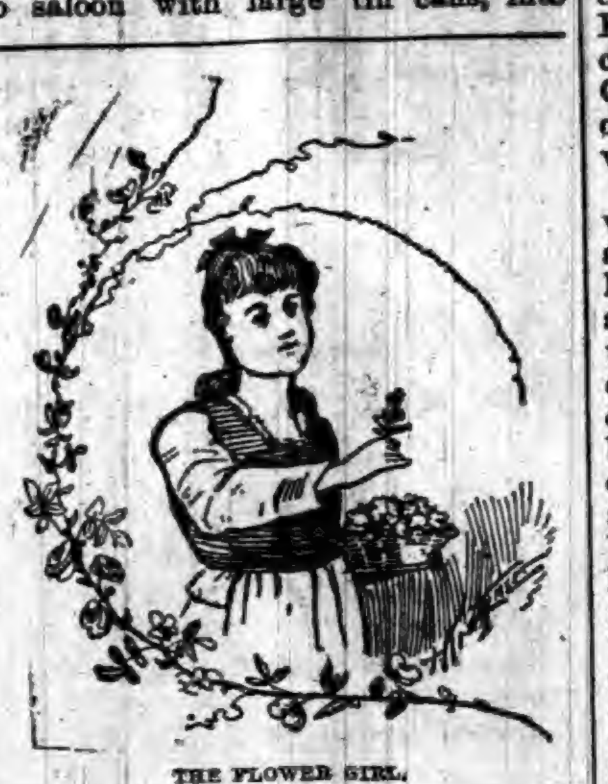
Of the same family is the hat buyer. He canvasses the entire city in search of abandoned head-gear which the art of the hatter can make presentable once more. While no residence escapes him, his great harvest of "tiles" is secured in the business section. Here he may be seen at all hours. He visits every office, except those in buldings where merchants of his class are not admitted. A silk hat, if not too badly worn, can be "made over" to look like new, and in these days when "plug" hats are in favor, many a dude artistically tips a tile that has been picked out of an alley or bought for a song by a second-hand hat collector.

The hat buyer always has a direct connection with a hat repairer, if, indeed, he is not one himself, and secures to make over and bring into the latest style for the owner, many hats that have become passe. Such a business appears insignificant to the uninitiated, yet the profits are very large, and but for the habit of drinking, which seems almost universal with the class, the buyers of discarded chapeaux might become capitalists.

In front of beer saloons, especially during the warm months, a large number of seemingly empty barrrels and kegs may be seen. Although the proprietor of the place has removed all of the contents of use to him, still a little of the amber-colored fluid—the dregs in fact—remain. In any large city men may be seen going from saloon to saloon with large tin cans, into which they empty the stale quart or two of beer left in each keg by the landlord. The observer of this rather familiar street scene may suppose that this novel "rusher of the growler" is collecting material for a spree of his own. This may sometimes be the case, but many—perhaps a majority of men so employed—are in no sense drunkards, but are earning a livelihood for themselves and families. Most of the beer thus "gleaned" from the sewers, finds its way to the lowest saloons, where it is purchased for about 5 cents a gallon. It is placed in kegs, charged with carbonic acid gas, and retailed at about half the price of genuine fresh beer.



THE RAG-PICKER.

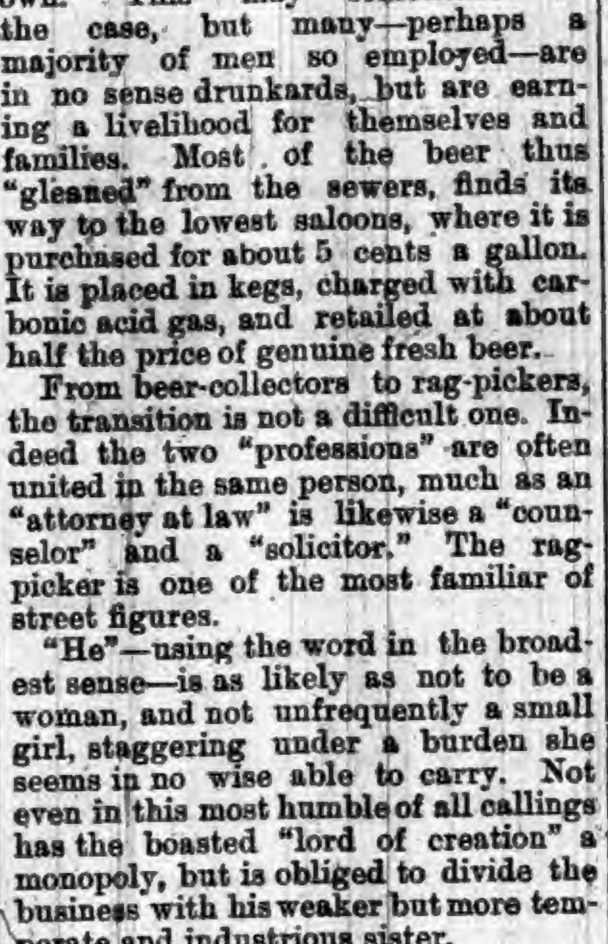


THE FLOWER GIRL.

From beer-collectors to rag-pickers, the transition is not a difficult one. Indeed the two "professions" are often united in the same person, much as an "attorney at law" is likewise a "counselor" and a "solicitor." The rag-picker is one of the most familiar of street figures.

"He"—using the word in the broadest sense—is as likely as not to be a woman, and not unfrequently a small girl, staggering under a burden she seems in no wise able to carry. Not even in this most humble of all callings has the boasted "lord of creation" a monopoly, but is obliged to divide the business with his weaker but more temperate and industrious sister.

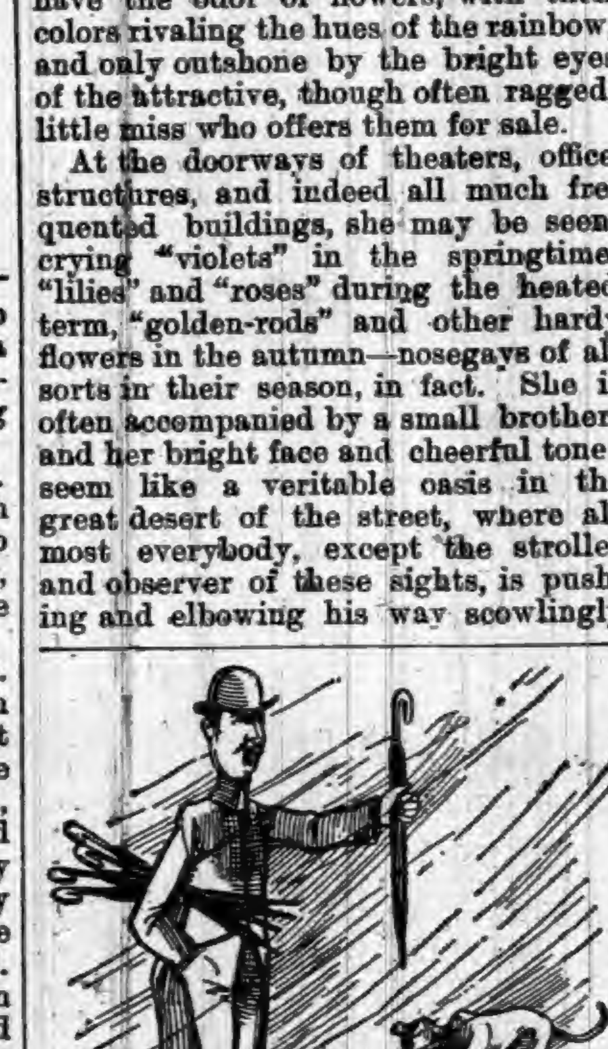
The term "rag-picker" is a generic one, and includes the collecting of any and all things that his patron and promoter, the junk-dealer, will buy. From gutters and alleys he picks paper, pieces of cloth, old shoes, tin cans, bits of metal and fragments of coal. The stroller and observer will generally see him poking in old barrels and garbage boxes. He is often accompanied by a boy or girl to assist in carrying his "finds," almost "everything being fish that comes to his net." He lives in miserable quarters, and with his many-sided occupation generally combines that of begging.



STREET MUSICIANS.

But, happily, the unique and humble means of earning a livelihood in the streets are not all, or even mainly, suggestive of garbage and the gutter. To offset their unpleasant smells we have the odor of flowers, with their colors rivaling the hues of the rainbow, and only outshone by the bright eyes of the attractive, though often ragged, little miss who offers them for sale.

At the doorways of theaters, office structures, and indeed all much frequented buildings, she may be seen, crying "violets" in the springtime, "lilies" and "roses" during the heated term, "golden-rods" and other hardy flowers in the autumn—nosegays of all sorts in their season, in fact. She is often accompanied by a small brother, and her bright face and cheerful tones seem like a veritable oasis in the great desert of the street, where almost everybody, except the stroller and observer of these sights, is pushing and elbowing his way scowlingly along to what he hopes will prove his fame and fortune.



THE UMBRELLA MAN.

As the rag-picker is a legitimate companion of the old-clothes man, so music would seem the proper accompaniment for flowers. All large cities abound in professional street minstrels. Many of these are bearded men, quite capable of working for a living, whose principal patronage is found in saloons which they serenade, and where, in addition to a little money secured from customers about the place, they are generally treated by the proprietor, and are, in consequence, maintained in a condition for "murdering" the airs they attempt to render.

Italians are natural and almost universal musicians, and it is from their ranks that the great majority of street organ-grinders, fiddlers, and other players are drawn. They often travel in sets, with a full complement of instruments of different sorts, and produce quite tolerable music. They serenade residences, and are often employed to furnish music for an unpretending little party of a social nature. Small boys and girls often travel about together and deliver concerts on harps, flutes, and violins. Their music is not always of the best, but their size makes up for any deficiencies of that kind, and a trio of little ones will often return home at night to their parents, or "proprietors," with more money than could be earned by six strong laborers. Efforts have been made by the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children" to abolish this latter phase of street minstrelsy, but without any very marked results.

To a close observer it is a matter of wonder how an umbrella mender manages to live. He is always tramping his weary round with his kit of tools and bundle of old umbrellas to be used in supplying missing parts. He calls at innumerable houses, from the doorways of all of which he seems to be repulsed. Of course he secures an occasional job, otherwise he would abandon a business so unprofitable, but one will watch a long time before he is seen plying his trade. First cousin to him is the umbrella peddler. "It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good," and the tempest that comes accompanied by rain, and makes light the hearts of ducks and boys whose duty it is to drive sprinkling wagons through dusty streets, is a God-send to the umbrella peddler, who is then able to ply his vocation with hopes of substantial results. He deals only in the cheapest grade of goods, and when a rain suddenly breaks out in a city, appears as if by magic, with a number of umbrellas under his arm, and begins crying his wares. With the cessation of the "down-pour" or "drizzle-drozzle," as the case may be, he disappears from view to reappear upon the next rainy day.

It must not, however, be supposed that he depends upon the rain to bring him his livelihood. He is generally a street peddler, or more properly, "fakir" of some sort of goods, from patent suspender buttons to clothes wringers, who, for the nonce, drops his regular line of goods for the better-selling umbrella. At the doors of theaters when the performance is well-nigh over, "he" may be seen in force. The young gallant who has come without a thought of the rain which is now falling, has the alternative presented of paying two dollars for a carriage or fifty cents for a cotton umbrella, and often to the chagrin of the accompanying "fair one," generally invests in the latter.

The stroller through the streets of Chicago sees many peculiar ways of earning a livelihood besides those enumerated above. Indeed, but few things in the way of business are carried on within doors but find some sort of an imitation in the streets. The theater is mimicked by the "Punch and Judy show," the merchant by the fakir, and the clergyman by the street preacher and Salvation Army.

DWIGHT BALDWIN.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Going to Bed with a Preacher and Dreaming.

One time there wuz a feller over yander in Kaintuck who went North en bought up a heapin big passel o mules, which it was his idee to take back down hyar en sell. One night he kem to a place whar a widder woman wuz a-livin, whilst he war on his way back with his mules; en he axed the widder, ez hurs wuz the only house nigh about, ef he could get a night's lodgin thar. The widder she said she didn't hev no room; she was boordin "the rider" jes then en her house warn't longways too big nohow. Well, the feller lowed he was thet tired out en done up thet he believed ef she'd no 'bjections ez he'd sleep 'ith the preacher, sooner'n lay out 'ith th' mules en th' drivers. The widder fixed it up, en arter the feller had eat supper en looked arter his stock he 'lowed he'd turn in.

The preacher was jis goin to bed then, en he says t' the feller, says he, "My friend, endurin the night en longwhiles o my sleep sometimes I'm given to makin gesters, me a-dreamin, ye know, that I'm a-preachin. Ef this bothers ye," says he, "why I hopes ye'll not feel hard o me."

The feller says thet wuz all right; he warnt goin t' make no racket bout a little thing like that. So he hung his blacksnake whoop up cluss t' the bed en turned in. (The preacher was a hard un; the drover see thet by his eye.) 'Twarn't long for the preacher riz up in bed, en sorter lowed to himself ez he b'lieved he'd nev some fun. So he 'gun to preachin en a zortin.

"O, ye pervarse children of Isyrul-ah! Come out'n Egypt-ah!" [Blip!—he tuck the feller in the stomach.] "Gether yoreselves together-ah" [blip!] "en march foth to the glory of the Lawd-ah" [bang!]. "Remember now thy Creator-ah, in the days of thy youth" [whack!], while thy evil days come not-ah, en the years draw nigh-ah" [blip!] when thou shelt say, truly, I hev no pleasure in them" [blap!].

That las lick hit the drover on the nose en mighty nigh kilt him. Yit he didn't raise no racket.

The preacher settled back toreckly en war soon snorin away like all possessed. Bout thet time the mule driver retched over with his right hand en tuck down his blacksnake. Then he grupped the preacher by his harr en swung im clean outn the bed, a-curlin that whoop around his legs en hollerin of like he war a-yellin at a mule: "Come in hyar, Jack, ye triflin fool! Come in hyar, I say! Come in hyar, Jack!"

Then the preacher lowed he call the dream business square and cry quits. And they both settled down for a sleep.—Smoky Mountain Lore.

He Kissed the Negro Cook.

It is hardly safe to kiss a woman in the dark unless you are absolutely sure of her identity. Because he "took chances," a Louisville young man recently nearly lost a fiancee. A few nights ago he called on the young lady and entered the parlor. There was no light in the hall or in the room. In a short time he heard his girl coming down the steps. He stepped out into the hall, and as she reached the bottom of the stairs he inclosed her in his arms and imprinted a long, linger-kiss upon her ruby lips. Releasing her, he struck a match and lit the gas, then, turning to snatch another kiss, he was horrified to see before him the black cook. He gave her a dollar not to say anything, but the story was too good to keep and she told it. It passed from one person to another until it was known to all his friends, and his life is anything but a happy one, particularly as the lady of his choice is wavering in her original intention of marrying him.

Not Necessarily Mutual.

Papa—Why do you wish to marry him, Ethel?

Ethel—Why, because he loves me.

Papa—But do you love him?

Ethel—Why, no. I never thought of that. I've been too much interested in getting him to propose to have time to think of it.—Munsey's Weekly.

Something Worse Than Fire.

Dr. Parker, who was called to fill the late Henry Ward Beecher's pulpit in Brooklyn, is a strong believer in the doctrine that baptism means sprinkling and not immersion, and delights in telling this story:

"One of my parishioners," said the Doctor, "came to me and told me that he dreamed that a Baptist friend of his died and went to heaven."

"Well, what did he see there?" I asked.

"He saw St. Peter at the gate, and beyond him, through a doorway surrounded with glaring lights, and smelling of brimstone, was the devil."

"What do you want?" asked St. Peter.

"I want to come in," replied the immersionist.

"Well, who are you?"

"I'm a Baptist minister."

"A Baptist!" repeated St. Peter, a little puzzled. "A Baptist, eh? Well, what do you Baptists do? We didn't have any Baptists in my time when I was Pope."

"Why, we baptize people."

"Baptize 'em, do you? What in?"

"Why, water."

"What, all over?"

"Yes, clear under."

"But suppose it's cold?"

"Why, down they go right through the ice."

The devil happened to overhear the word ice, and came forward, rubbing his hands in great glee.

"What did you say about ice?" he asked, smiling.

"Why, we baptize people through the ice."

"But, suppose its 40 below zero?"

"Down they go, all covered with icicles."

"That'll do," interrupted the devil, "you just take my place; you've got something worse than fire!"

A Sensible Precaution.

Though disease cannot always be conquered, its first approach can be checked. But not only is the use of a medicinal safeguard to be recommended on the first appearance of a malady, but a wise discrimination should be exercised in the choice of a remedy. For thirty years or more Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been the reigning specific for dyspepsia, fever and ague, a loss of physical stamina, liver complaint and other disorders, and has been most emphatically indorsed by medical men as a health and strength restorative. It is indeed a wise precaution to use this sovereign fortifying agent and alterative in the early stages of disease, for it effectually counteracts it, if the malady belongs to that large class to which this sterling medicine is adapted. Not only is it efficacious, but pure and harmless.

Her Estimate of Damages.

"Had an accident here this morning?" queried the breathless reporter as a matronly lady appeared at the door in response to his violent ringing.

"Yes, we did. You see, the next house comes right up to ours, and the man painting it asked to come through our house and crawl out the scuttle onto its roof. Well, I let him. When he crossed the garret he fell through the floor——"

"Hurt him much?"

"Yes, I guess so. But he didn't stop with the garret; he fell through the next floor, tore a hole through the carpet knocked the plastering off the ceiling and, oh, he just made an awful muss!"—Texas Siftings.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. LETTER FROM PROF. HOFFMAN.

He writes of Famous Places. Old Troy Visited and an Interview with the Famous Explorer, Dr. Schliemann.

EGYPTIAN STEAMSHIP BEHERA, }
ÆGEAN SEA, June 27, 1890. }

Will it give new interest to your reading of the "tale divine of Troy" to know that the plain where Hector and Achilles fought has been but lately trod by me? You know that I had thought of a trip to Troy as a possibility in connection with my travels, but you know also that I had practically abandoned it long before I left home. The arrival of Mr. Scott in Athens and his eager wish to go to Troy, added to the fact that Dr. Schliemann and Dr. Dorpfeld are again carrying on excavations there, led me to consider the matter more seriously and to want to go. We found that by "rushing things" we could make the trip in about five days; and felt that for both of us a visit to Troy would be now or never. And so Monday evening found us sailing out of Piræus in the Panhellenic steamship Thrace, bound for Troy. It got dark Monday night before we reached Sunium and we retired early that I might be up early the next morning to see the sights. The steamer was a fine large one and kept delightfully clean. Our state-room had nice beds and was the best aired of any room I had ever had on a steamer; not a little round port hole but two windows, each about twenty inches square afforded ventilation, and these were high above the water and kept open all night. So I slept well and waked with the dawn ready to get up. Through the windows I saw some land. Upon going on deck I saw that we were sailing north-east and that there was a large island some distance away on our right. This island was Chios, one of the reputed birthplaces of Homer, and the island in which in ancient times existed the society or guild called the Homeridæ, that is, descendants of Homer. They claimed to be the preservers and propagators of the Homeric epic poetry.

Before Chios was out of sight Lesbos came to view. We passed quite near this. In ancient times, as now, its chief city was Mytilene, on the south east coast, which was the opposite side from that on which we passed. The modern Greeks call the whole island of Lesbos Mytilene as well as the city. This was the home of Sappho and Alcæus, two of the finest lyric poets that Greece ever produced. After passing Lesbos we neared the coast of north-west Asia Minor, that region called the Troad. Sailing north now about noon we passed between the land of Troy and the little island of Tenedos, famed in Homer and Virgil as that behind which the Greek ships hid to make the Trojans think they had gone home after they had left the wooden horse at the gates of Troy. About an hour later we rounded the promontory of Sigeum, the north-west corner of Asia Minor, and entered the Hellespont, now called the Dardanelles. We had a good view of the Thracian Chersonesus on our left. We could see the grey earth thrown out in the excavations at Troy, and this marked out to us the site of the city. However, we were not sure we were right until we had visited the spot and saw it again from the Hellespont as we returned. Then we knew that we had been right in our inference.

About 3 p. m. we came to anchor off the town of Dardanelles, about twenty miles or more up the straits from Troy. This is the nearest point at which the steamers stop and it makes Troy a hard place to get to. We had a letter to Dr. Schliemann from the American consul at Athens, Dr. Manatt. As we were going in a row boat from the steamer to land we passed Dr. Schliemann in another boat going out to take the same steamer for Constantinople. The boatman told us it was Schliemann, and when we came to land and found that the Doctor was going on to Constantinople, we were rowed back to the steamer and presented our letter to the Doctor there. He received us very kindly, bade us welcome to Troy, said that Dr. Dorpfeld and his (Schliemann's) servants would entertain us, and expressed his regrets that he could not be there himself to receive us. We were sorry that he was away at the time of our visit, but considered it very fortunate that we got to see and meet the great man who has done so much for Homeric studies and Greek Archæology in general.

On coming ashore we found it no easy matter to get into the land of the Turk. Our passports were not satisfactory and we were taken from place to place and our papers were inspected and we were questioned and looked upon with suspicion until I almost felt myself that I must have been guilty of some crime. It ended by my being required to pay $2 for a Turkish passport. Mr. Scott had previously gotten one as he had been in Turkey before. I begrudged the time more than the money, for they detained us nearly two hours when time was very precious to us. We had to make our trip to Troy and back in time for the steamer early Thursday morning or stay a whole week there.

We engaged as guide a man who had acted as our interpreter before the Turkish officials and made arrangements to start for Troy yet that evening on horseback, about the only way we could go. After getting something to eat and having some other delays caused by preparations for our journey we got started from Dardanelles at quarter past six in the evening. Off we rode to the southwest with the blue Hellespont on our right and beyond it the hills of the Chersonesus. We were in Asia and I could hardly realize it. Across the Hellespont, which looks like a large river, lay Europe. The setting sun, the evening twilight, the moon near first quarter, all added to the charm of the situation. After following the coast for a couple of hours we struck off more to the left, ascended a considerable ridge of hills from which we had a fine view of the Hellespont in moonlight, for it was now night, then went down a little and out until about half past nine when we halted at a village with a long Turkish name which I could not remember. Here we decided to pass the night. We were only about two hours from Troy and could reach it early in the morning. We felt much relieved for now we knew that we could make the trip, have considerable time at Troy and get back for our boat. Although the beds looked comfortable they proved to be otherwise, being full of vermin, or in plain English, bed bugs. I had a most miserable night of it; slept scarcely any and was glad to get up at four the next morning. By half past four we were on our way. It was a most charming morning. We crossed over a kind of tableland with bush-covered hills and wheat fields in the hollows. There are in all this region many oak trees with short stems and great spreading tops looking like immense apple trees when seen from a little distance. They are scattered through the valleys and over the hillsides in some places being few and far apart, in other places growing close enough to look like great orchards. When we first saw them from our ship we took them to be olive orchards. They are grand trees in appearance and make a charming landscape. And so, in the early morning we rode along enjoying the cool air, the fine landscape adorned with trees and fields of golden grain, the sunrise and the songs of birds. We passed a long train of camels heavily laden, great giants following one after another and led by an Arab in front as you have seen them in pictures. This was a striking reminder of the fact that we were on the verge of the Orient. Presently we descended from the higher land into the east arm of the Plain of Troy, and Troy itself was pointed out to us by our guide.

[The remainder of Prof. Hoffman's letter, giving an account of his visit to Troy, is deferred until next week.—Ed.]

Senator Plumb and Tariff.

The Kansas senator has awakened to the fact that the farmers of his state are getting their eyes open to the iniquities of the tariff, and last Friday made a very fair sort of democratic speech in favor of lower rates. He several times voted with the democrats on the tariff bill amendments. He produced a letter from a merchant doing business in St. Joseph, Mo., and Atchison, Kansas, says the Chicago Herald Correspondent, stating that on an invoice of crockery he paid that day customs duty of $16.40; that under the pending bill the duty on the same invoice would be $31.32 and under the McKinley bill $57.12. The whole tendency of civilization, Mr. Plumb said, was toward the reduction of the prices of all products of human labor. To claim that the tariff had been the sole, or the main factor in the reduction of prices of manufactured goods, was to ignore all the forces of civilization. The American people were entitled to have cheap goods, if competition could bring that about. When, he asked, was the time coming when the people of the United States would get some benefit from the establishment of home industries? But, just as fast as the point was arrived at, when lower prices might be expected, the manufacturers came to congress and said that they wanted more duties, whereby the downward progress of prices might be arrested. The people of the United States ought to have their "inning" some time; and he thought that the time had come. He had no idea that what he might say was going to affect the vote of the senate. He could conceive and he could see that the cohorts of protection were so organized that the bill was to go through substantially as it came from the finance committee. The manufacturers had had from congress precisely what they asked, and yet so far from their being satisfied, a bill for their benefit was to be put through without debate (if that could be brought about) on the theory that the country was hungering and thirsting for more tariff legislation. He believed in distributing the duties that were necessary for the purpose of raising revenue support of the government in such a way as to equalize the condition existing between the manufacturers of this country and those abroad. If he were in doubt he would resolve that doubt in favor of the American manufacturers; but if he knew what the exact conditions were, he would put the home and the foreign manufacturer on the same footing precisely. He should be recreant to his duty if he gave his support to such a proposition as the china ware schedule.

The senate, he continued, owed some duty to the American people as well as to the manufacturers. There was a point where political sympathies ended and where business interests began. The democratic party had its full share of responsibility for the iniquities of the present tariff law and of that which was now proposed. The democrats in the house had the opportunity of correcting the errors and wickedness of the McKinley bill; but they had sought to evade the responsibility of their votes, when by joining with the republicans who were opposed to that bill, they might have eliminated many of its errors. He could see the game of battledore and shuttlecock between free trade and protection constantly going on for political advantage on the one side and for personal advantage on the other, and between the two extremes, the great body of the American people were being crushed to the ground. He would apply the rule that whoever demanded a tax for his own benefit should be ready to show conclusively that his interest was also the public interest. The demonstration should be made that every single penny of tax proposed was absolutely necessary.

What Road is it?

The Indiana Railway Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000,000, in $50 shares. The directors are: President, M. Mercer, Goshen; vice-president, J. C. Caldwell, Chicago; treasurer, Edwin W. Hauke, Goshen; secretary, H. V. Mercer, Goshen, and M. G. Lamport, Benton Harbor. The railroad is to be 150 miles long, and will run from a point on the State line in DeKalb county, westerly, through DeKalb, Noble, Elkhart, Kosciusko, Marshall, St. Joseph, LaPorte, Porter and Lake counties, to a point on the State line about ten miles south of Lake Michigan. Kendallville Standard.

The Old Twenty-first.

Frank Culbertson and several other readers of the COURIER will feel interested in this from the Goshen News of July 24: "The reunion of Company A. of the 1st Indiana Heavy Artillery, held in this city to-day, is not largely attended, but the veterans are enjoying the event, recounting reminiscences and fighting old engagements over in their minds. It is the company's first meeting in reunion, and out of the 150 in the company it is supposed that about fifty are now living. At 3 o'clock this afternoon the following members had answered the roll call as present: James L. Ferguson, Peru, Ind.; James R. Rhenbottom Middleburg, Ind., Adam Shaffstall, Samuel Vanpelt, Frank Shaffstall and Frank Ladow, all of Salem Center, Ind.; Wm. W. Riddle, Kendallville, Ind.; James Ingram, Warsaw, Ind.; Isaac W. Snyder, Dorsey S. Chamberlain and Isaac A. Simmons, all of Goshen, Ind.; Jesse L. Dunning, Ligonier, Ind., and M. C. Skinner, Albion, Ind."

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach. wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Pain in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold, guaranteed and recomended by F. E. Davenport. Treatise free. 3

BUCKHANNON, W. Va., July 28, 1890.

EDITOR COURIER:—Buckhannon, our new home, is a beautiful town, located on Buckhannon river, and is about 1,400 feet above sea level. The place is free from saloons and well supplied with churches. The people are hospitable and intelligent and are ready to extend a cordial welcome to all newcomers. The new seminary building is the best in the state; beautiful, substantial, convenient and admirably adapted to school purposes. It is of brick, 106x80 feet, three stories in height, and stands upon an eminence overlooking the river and town, in the midst of beautiful grounds, of forty-three acres extent. It is only a few minutes walk from the center of town and railroad station. The institution is to be congratulated on securing such a valuable property. The design of the seminary is to furnish to students of both sexes opportunities for a thorough education under Christian influences. It will be the aim not only to make scholars, but to develop character—to promote the highest Christian culture and the truest refinement of thought and conduct. Tuition in regular courses is $25 per year. Music and art extra. About all the strangers we meet are lumbermen. They say this state has the finest poplar lumber in the country. There are some walnut logs that had to be split into quarters, before they could be handled. They do not pretend to load logs on wagons, for they could not be handled on account of the large hills. It took eight horses to haul our boiler. Several times we had them pull on the block and rope. The boys are at work in the woods. The other day, as they were going out to work, John Schrader killed a black-snake which measured eight feet in length. One of our men and his better half have left for Auburn. They think there is no place like home. This country agrees with me, for I have gained five pounds in weight within twenty-eight days time. This town has two brass bands. The Juniors consist of thirteen boys, from eight to twelve years of age, and are instructed by a musician. We hear them two nights each week, and are quite sure they can lay the Auburnites in the shade. The climate here is delightful. We have had rain about once a week, with cool nights, which make it quite comfortable. The republicans had their caucus on the 26th of July. The people have a direct vote for their candidate, but the democrats selected delegates to the convention.

Obituary.

Harriet M. daughter of James P. and Fannie Stewart was born in Pike county, Pa. August 8, 1834, and emigrated to DeKalb county, Ind., with her parents in the year 1836, where she has since lived. In 1849 she was converted and joined the M. E. church. July 27, 1854, she was married to Jesse Watson, who lived only a few weeks after their wedding. She again united in marriage June 10, 1858, this time with Jonathan Ervin, and soon after united with the Presbyterian church of which her husband was a member. To this union two sons were born, James and Richard, and by this marriage she became a stepmother to Delila Darggoo, and Elmer Ervin, who through kind treatment were much endeared to her. May 6, 1862 sister Ervin was again left a widow, and for nearly 30 years has been successful, with the aid of the children, in not only rearing the family and retaining the old home, but also in improving the farm and building a good house and barn.

Since her husband's death she united with the M. P. church at Concord and remained, it is said, a consistent christian until the Master called her home.

After a brief illness she died July 31, 1890, leaving the two sons, three brothers, and many friends to mourn her loss. She was mild, even tempered and kind to all, generous to the needy, indulgent with her children, careful in her expressions that she wounded not her neighbors, faithful in her attendance upon the services when circumstances permitted. Though timid in her work, she was eager for the welfare of the church.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer in a grove near her residence, in the presence of a large company of relatives and friends August 1. She was laid away to rest in the Bear Creek cemetery.

WINGED SWEETNESS.

ONE OF THE OLDEST AND MOST IMPORTANT INDUSTRIES.

A Craft That Is More Ancient Than History—Bees and Bee Keeping, Ancient and Modern—Lands Flowing with Milk and Honey—A Great Bee and Honey Exhibition.

When Moses promised to bring the children of Israel to a land flowing with milk and honey, that promise meant far more than it would to any modern nation. For in those days no nation on earth knew the art of making sugar. No, nor for many centuries afterward. When Rome and Greece were in the height of their power honey was the only sweetening known to civilization. Still later Richard the Lion Heart, the leader of the crusaders, never tasted sugar. Later yet, William, the Conqueror of England; and, still later, Wallace and Bruce, of Scotland, knew not sugar. For ages honey was the world's reliance for sweets. Honey was used to sweeten wine; to make lemonade with various acid juices; in all cooking; to make all confectionary and candies. Barley sugar in a rude form came first; but other sugars rapidly followed the discovery of America.

How ancient is the art of rearing tame bees is unknown. But,

AS FAR BACK AS HISTORY GOES,

even in the most ancient Egyptian records, honey is spoken of. The mention of "wild honey" in the Bible is an indication that tame honey was common; as, indeed, it must have been to supply the enormous demand. Honey is also mentioned in the other ancient Bibles of the human race, as well as in the Jewish Bible, and in such a way as to prove that bee culture must have been a common art. In Grecian history, and also in Roman, various localities, as was natural when honey was so important an article, are mentioned for the superior flavor of their honey, and also as wonderfully rich provinces, because honey was abundant there. Whether the art of bee culture was carried to so great a degree of skill and science in ancient times as it is to-day is a problem; but there is reason to suspect that the apiarists of three or four thousands of years ago were extremely skillful. Certainly to-day the Italian bees, that are deemed so superior, are the descendants of the superior bees reared by the bee keepers who with choice honey, and the very name of the choice Syrian bees of modern hives is a reminder of their immense antiquity. Probably the Syrian bees of to-day are not as highly cultivated as they were when Assyria was in her glory. Syria has long been a decaying country, going back toward barbarism from her ancient high civilization and splendidly organized industries in the days when her gardens and her honey were the pride of the Orient, and when her splendid cities and grand palaces were the wonder of the nations. And yet her long neglected bees, or long reared only by ignorant and degraded keepers, are to-day one of the two most highly valued varieties of cultivated bees in the world.

The bee is not by nature a native of many countries; yet their cultivation by man has spread bees into all countries that pretend to any degree of civilization, and escaping colonies have caused wild bees wherever they can possibly sustain the climate. In tropical countries their cultivation is said to be estopped by their speedily learning to cease storing their sweets for winter except in small quantities. Nevertheless wild bees are found in most tropical countries, though with different habits from ours. Cultivated bees have acquired, from centuries of inheritance, to climate, like the horse, the dog, and other domestic animals and fowls, so that they now flourish in climates so cold that nature would never have taken them there.

A WONDERFUL FACILITY OF ADAPTATION

How the world managed to get on so long without sugar is a thing to wonder at. Think what we should do if suddenly deprived of sugar! Yet there were mighty cooks in the ancient days, and luxurious feasts; and Roman and Grecian families of the higher classes set good tables, even judged by our modern tastes, and kept pretty comfortable homes. No doubt an ancient Roman cook, if restored to life today, could teach our most skillful housewives and caterers how to prepare all sorts of delicious viands and preserves with honey in place of sugar, that might be superior in delicacy to most of what we consider our best of sugared cakes, pastries, preserves, jellies and confections. Most large expositions and fairs in which aparian products figure now offer premiums for cooking, preserving, jellying and candying with honey. In this the Detroit International Fair and Exposition, to be held Aug. 26 to Sept. 5, sets a notable example this year, and includes the delicious vinegar in its list.

Undoubtedly the ancients were far behind moderns, especially Americans, in their bee apparatus. Invention was not highly prized nor at all protected by governments in the old historic ages, as with us. Hence the hives of the ancients were rude, though the old, typical, pine apple shaped bee hive, that figures so largely in pictures, is a very ancient form, and figures in the most antique Syrian drawings and sculptures. But those old bee keepers had no patent hives, frames, comb foundations, extractors, or tools of any and all sorts, such as moderns use. However, they were up to all the tricks of the trade. No modern could teach them anything about diluting honey, or palming off inferior grades, or keeping over and remelting, or any other fraud that can possibly be performed without the aid of sugar. In fact, ancient history records that the Greeks knew of a way to keep honey liquid for a long period by some sort of adulteration that was difficult to detect, but reduced its sweetness materially. They also knew how to give a fresh boquet and odor to old and diluted honey. Such is

THE IMMORTALITY OF RASCALITY.

The Apiarian Department of the Detroit International Fair and Exposition will, this year, be one of the most important ever held in America. The entries are very large from the best bee keepers on the continent, who will exhibit bees, hives, combs, honey, honey cooking, confectionery and preserves, and all manner of tools, implements and conveniences for the business, with explanations of methods, and all bee products, making the most instructive and interesting exhibition ever shown in this line. Besides there will be everything else at this great fair that can attract, amuse, delight or instruct—processions, concerts, games, spectacles, fireworks, pictures, machinery, stock, balloon ascensions, and the magnificent fiery drama nightly of The Destruction of Pompeii by volcanic eruption—free daily to all who attend.

LETTER FROM PROF. HOFFMAN.

He writes of Famous Places. Old Troy Visited, and an Interview with the Famous Explorer, Dr. Schliemann.

We arrived at Troy about half past six, and were kindly received by Dr. Dorpfeld. His cordial manner and kindly countenance soon dispelled the feeling of embarrassment which we naturally had, at meeting so distinguished a man. He showed us around the excavations, and pointed out the chief objects of interest there and in the surrounding plain.

The plain of Troy is extensive and fertile for this part of the world, and one could easily see how it would early attract settlers and become a center of civilization. That it was such, and supported at least one important city, the remains uncovered at Hissarlik sufficiently prove. These remains, as one sees them now, consist chiefly of old walls. There was a series of towns built, one upon the ruins of another. The lowest ruins, called by Dr. Schliemann the first city, are rather rude and not very extensive. Above this was the second city, much more extensive and better built. This is regarded as the Homeric Troy. The whole hill had a solid stone wall, sloping inward toward the top and provided with towers at regular intervals. The buildings within the town had stone foundations, but the rest of the building was made of large, unburnt bricks. These mud walls were covered with smooth, hard stucco, or plaster, inside and out, as houses are built in Greece, to-day. This was the character of the buildings at Mycenæ and Tiryns. There have also been uncovered at Troy, a great many immense jars or jugs, about three feet deep and two feet across, with pointed bottoms, so that they have to be sunk into the earth, to stand upright. These seem to have been used as receptacles for storing provisions. Great quantities of wheat and small peas were found in some of these. Dr. Dorpfeld gave us some peas and wheat from these (3,000 years old) to take home with us. I am afraid it will be only dust when I get it home, as it crumbles so readily.

To the west of the Trojan plain, a strip of high ground cuts off the view of the sea; also to the north and east. The slopes of hills bounding the plain are covered with groves of the fine oaks mentioned above. The plain itself is mostly devoted to wheat growing. The wheat at the time of our visit, was dead ripe and more than half cut. It was a good, heavy crop. The reapers were busy, not American self-binders, but genuine reapers, of the good old kind that reaped the plain in the days of Homer, I suppose. The grain is still cut with the reaping hook or sickle, and mostly by women and girls, long rows of whom are seen working their way slowly over the field of wheat. The same is true in Greece, but a new feature to me here was the muffled or veiled faces of the Mohammedan women. Some men were also mixed in the bands of reapers, but women were largely in the majority.

We lunched with Dr. Dorpfeld at eleven, and at twelve started back for Dardanelles by a partly different route from that which we had come. At Dardanelles, we bought our steamer tickets yet that evening, for which, in the absence of competition, we had to pay so high a price that we came near going on to Constantinople and returning from there. At the only hotel in the town, we found a pleasant room, with windows opening out over the Hellespont. We expected or rather hoped for a good night's rest, but our hopes were vain, for we were again assailed by the insidious foes of repose, and had another wretched night of it. Scott made free use of insect powder, and the slaughter he wrought was wonderful, for the next morning, the whole plain, I mean his bed, was strewn with corpses. We were of course up early, for there is no temptation to lie in bed in the morning, under such circumstances. About seven, we were rowed out to our boat. Our guide of the previous day had bribed the officer with a franc, and so we escaped without farther molestation. Our previous trouble and expense might have been saved in the same way, but in principle and practice I am opposed to such business. At eight our vessel sailed down past Troy again, which we now understood better, and past Sigeum into the Ægean, then down the coast, and this time east of Lesbos. At 4, p. m., we stopped off the charmingly situated city of Mytilene where we lay until nine. Then in the night we sailed to Smyrna, and were anchored in the harbor there this morning when we awoke. The steamer staid at Smyrna all forenoon and we went ashore for a few hours. This was my farthest east point on my trip. We visited the quaint bazars and streets of the old, half-Oriental city, in whose streets the camel and caravans of camels are almost as common as horses in an American town. From Smyrna we started at 12:30, going south of Lesbos, which I have now almost circumnavigated, north of Chios close to the mountainous shore and between that and the little island of Psyra. It is night now, and we are in the midst of the Ægean. T-omorrow morning we land at Piræus, and return to Athens.

Attention, Soldiers!

All soldiers who are drawing a pension of less than $12 a month, are now entitled to the full $12 under the recent act of June 27. I will assist to secure this increase for any soldier entitled to the same.

THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World—Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

THE VETERANS.

The grandest parade that Boston ever witnessed was the G. A. R. procession in which 40,000 men took part and which was over six hours in passing a given point. A continuous blaze of color welcomed the veterans on each side of their route and the never ceasing strains of music and the great enthusiasm exhibited, made the scene one not to be forgotten. The executive and commanding officer was Commander-in-chief General R. A. Alger. The departments marched in the order of their organizations with the one exception of Massachusetts, which as the department entertaining the visitors, was given the extreme left of the line. Scattered along through the line were a multitude of men of national reputation. At the reviewing stand in Copley square were seated all the dignitaries, the President and Vice President of the United States, Secretaries Proctor, Noble and Rusk, Gen. Sherman, Admiral Gherardi and staff, Gov. Brackett and staff, Lieut. Gov. Haile, Gov. Burleigh and staff, of Maine, the Governors of New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Indiana, and other Governors. Gov. Brackett's council, heads of the departments, Senators Hoar and Dawes, the commandants of the Charlestown Navy Yard and of Fort Warren, Collector Beard, Naval Officer Currier, Postmaster Corse, Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Whittenmyer, of the Woman's Relief Corps.

SOBRAL'S FATE.

He Is Conveyed to Prison and There Shot.

New York special: Private cable dispatches have been received in this city by friends of Enrique Martinez Sobral, late Minister of Foreign Affairs in Guatemala under President Barrillas, telling of the untimely fate that has befallen him. These friends of Sobral report that the Minister, upon being discovered in alleged treachery to Barrillas, was hurried off to prison and condemned without trial to be shot. This coming to the ears of the Spanish Minister resident in Guatemala, he interceded with Barrillas, who agreed to spare Sobral's life, but at once convened a court martial. This latter body, so it is asserted by friends of Sobral, was entirely composed of men biased against Sobral, and they condemned him to be shot. Sobral was returned to the penitentiary and placed in solitary confinement to await the President's pleasure. It is said that just prior to his departure for Guezaltenage, President Barrillas ordered some of his soldiers to conduct Sobral to the vaults of the penitentiary and there had him shot.

Brought to Time.

The State Department has received from Minister Misener a telegram from La Libertad, saying that during a battle in the city of San Salvador the forces of the provisional government seized the consulate in that city, hauled down the flag and damaged the property. The department instructed Mr. Misener, by telegraph, to demand full reparation of Salvador, the reinstatement of and protection of the consul and to see that all rights of the United States and its citizens were observed. Wednesday the department received word from Mr. Misener, informing it that the provisional government of Salvador had hoisted our flag over the United States consulate the day before, at the same time saluting it with twenty-one guns, and that the consul had been reinstated in office and the rights of the United States and its citizens were granted.

Trains Moving Again.

The strike on the New York Central Railroad seems to be at an end. A dispatch from New York, dated the 14th inst., says: During the afternoon the Grand Central Depot was as quiet as though no strike had occurred. Trains were continually arriving and leaving in the usual manner and the entire business of the depot had resumed its normal condition. Vice President Webb said that the strike, so far as the New York Central was concerned, was at an end.

Horrible Explosion.

A terrific explosion with fatal results occurred at Joliet, Ill. Blast furnace No. 2 sprung a leak and the molten metal ran out and down into the canal, generating steam, which caused the explosion. The metal was blown in all directions, tearing off the top of the furnace and the roof of the building. John Novak and Oscar Sobweski, employes, were blown out of existence and their remains have not yet been found. Peter Schrier was so horribly burned and cooked that he lived but half an hour. Tim McCarthy was burned about the head and back and will die. Several other employes received slight burns.

A Frightful Fall.

A large elevator in the Olds' wagon works at Fort Wayne, broke a cable on account of being overloaded, and fell with a crash from the second floor to the basement with its load of heavy freight and four workmen whose names are Albert Null, John Lillie, Jacob Trimble and Frank Bernard. Null suffered injuries to his breast and had a gash cut in his chin, while Bernard had his back and legs broken. The others were more or less injured.

Distressing Death of a Young Lady.

Miss Minnie Smith's clothing caught fire and she was fatally burned at Madison, Ind. She lingered in terrible agony a few hours when she died. She was a popular young lady.

THREE LINKS.

The Odd Fellows Have a Big Parade at Chicago.

Chicago special: The parade of the Patriarch Militant of the I. O. O. F. was a grand affair. All the patriarchs, the military organizations of the city, and thousands of the brethren of the triple link united in a grand demonstration. Owing to the dense crowds and evident mismanagement on the part of the officials, the big parade did not get started until 4:30 o'clock, and it was about 5 o'clock when the head of the procession passed the grand stand. Grand Sire Underwood, in all the splendor of his generalissimo's uniform, was at the head of the column, surrounded by his staff of aides in costumes equally gorgeous. His special escort consisted of the Boston Huzzars, Junia Huzzars and Denver Lancers. Is was estimated that between 10,000 and 15,000 men were in line, including about 600 uniformed patriarchs. On the reviewing stand at the lake front were gathered the dignitaries of the State and city as well as of the I. O. O. F. Nearly 20,000 people also occupied seats in the amphitheatre, and thousands crowded the parks, and streets, windows, balconies and roofs along Michigan avenue. There were so many breaks in the line that the review lasted for over two hours. At night the third degree of chivalry was conferred at the lake front. There were display formations by all the cantons; exhibition drilling by the Chicago Zouaves, and the evening's entertainment concluded with a grand display of fire works.

MANY ROADS MENACED.

The Big Strike on the New York Central Likely to Extend to Other Roads.

A special from Albany, N. Y., dated the 11th inst., says: The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company and its Knights of Labor employes are as much at loggerheads to-night as ever, and so far as this section of the road is concerned there are no signs of the strikers weakening. It had been expected that orders would be issued from here directing a tie-up on the West Shore road, but the district assembly thought it best to defer promulgating such a manifesto until later, when, if the Central road does not come to terms, the men will go out not only on the West Shore, but on all the Vanderbilt lines and on all roads which attempt to help the Central. One of the members of the District Executive Board said that all the passenger engineers and firemen on the Central-Hudson road would be out within twenty-four hours. Thus far, however, the Brotherhood men hereabouts have not appeared to sympathize with the strikers. Assistant Superintendent Harrington said this evening:

"Almost double the number of trains were run to-day that we had expected would be possible. We have been overrun with applications for work, and anticipate being able to straighten affairs out here in a few days at the most."

Not a pound of freight was moved out of Albany to-day, the railroad officials devoting all their energies to solving the passenger service problem. There has been no outbreak on the part of the strikers, who have conducted themselves very quietly. A strong guard of police continue on duty at the railroad station, but their services were not needed. Trains arriving from the west and south were much belated, but the railroad officials say that all the through trains were got through despite the delay.

All the men in the car shops at West Albany (1,000 in number) have struck, and the shops are closed up.

A later dispatch from Weehawken, N. J., says that all the employes on that end of the West Shore road have just struck.

There was quite a riot at Syracuse caused by the strikers attacking a train's crew. The militia was called out by the Sheriff and their presence soon put a stop to hostilities.

The following notice was posted in conspicious places in the vicinity of the depot in New York:

"Persons seeking employment with the Grand Central road will please make application at the office of the Wagner Palace Car Company."

Applicants went to the office of the Wagner Palace Car Company by the score, and nearly all of them were successful. The gentleman who gave the newly employed men their credentials stated that as many as 150 had been engaged. He declared that all of them were experienced railroad men.

"The position of the company is this: We will select our men and we do not propose that they be designated by the Knights of Labor, or its committees. When men are dismissed we shall get rid of the inefficient, the most vicious, and those least in accord with our interests. When promotions are to be made, we will not be bound by the seniority rules promulgated by the Knights of Labor. A due consideration will always be given to the length of service, but the first and most important rule will be the qualification of the man for the place."

WHAT CAUSED IT?

A Terrific Explosion Near Shelbyville, Ind.

A terrific explosion occurred near Ogden grave yard, three miles south of Waldron, Shelby County, Ind., causing great excitement throughout the county. Ten acres of land were torn to pieces. One acre was demolished to the depth of ten feet. The river flat rock was blown up and large stones were thrown fully half a mile from the scene. The gas is burning fifteen feet high from the center of the river, and from ten or more points of the land torn up. J. H. Lowe, who lives on the farm where the explosion occurred, says he heard a terrific report and felt the earth quivering beneath his feet. He went toward the grave yard and was soon confronted by a shot of flame 200 feet high. Then fifty or more fountains of fire burst from the earth. These were interspersed with six or eight active geysers. The river bed was torn to pieces and the huge fissures were receiving the river's water. Shots of flames swept over the water and a crater covering an area of about one acre was quickly converted into a huge hole from which a continuous roaring and rumbling noise proceeded. Within the bend of the river and for one-eighth of a mile along the stream, great rents are in the earth and in the river bed. At the bend of the river, in the bank which is of limestone, is a fracture a quarter of a mile long. Stones the size of a house have been hurled from their places. The grave-yard was shaken up, the skeletons of the dead being distinctly seen in the fractures of the earth, gas flows from the entire surface of the ten acres. Many theories have been advanced as to the cause of the upheaval. Many people contend that it was a spontaneous combustion of natural gas. Others think that the upheaval was volcanic. Mr. Lowe, who got to the scene before the gas ignited, is sure the upheaval was volcanic. Inhabitants in the locality became wild with excitement and many left their homes. Within the last eighteen months there have been thirteen gas wells sunk in the locality of the grave yard and while each have had some gas none have been gushers.

SALVADOR'S VICTORY.

The Defeat of the Guatemalian Army Was Complete.

A special from San Salvador says the defeat of the Guatemalian army by that of Salvador is complete. President Barrilas, of Guatemala, has 2,000 soldiers on the road to the port of San Jose ready to protect his flight from the country. Anarchy reigns in Guatemala and Gen. Barundia has invaded the country from the Mexican frontier. The Salvador troops have gone back to the frontier to push on the invasion of Guatemala. A diplomatic settlement of the trouble with Guatemala is expected. General Miranda, commandant of the forces of Ayaila and an aspirant to the presidency of San Salvador, has been routed and Salvador is free from invaders. The outrage by Guatemala in seizing the arms ordered by Salvador from San Francisco created great excitement. Some assert that the seizure of war material in the harbor of San Jose was agreed upon by the Government of Guatemala and the United States legation, but it is not generally believed. Minister Misner's dispatches have not interfered with Salvador, though his silence in regard to the Colima outrage is not understood by the Government of Salvador.

Ex-Convict Shot.

The other night John Brady, who had twice robbed the Cornado ferry ticket seller at San Diego, Cal., at the point of a pistol during the past month, made another attempt and was fatally wounded by a watchman. Brady had an accomplice this time, but the latter weakened and informed President Babcock of the intended attack. Three watchmen, armed with shot guns, were accordingly sent to the ferry house. At a late hour Cashier Marshall started with the money from the ticket office to the general offices of the company. Brady appeared at the door, with his mask on his face, and a pistol in his hand. The watchman saw him, however, and before he could attack the cashier, covered the robber, with his shot-gun and ordered him to throw up his hands. Brady fired two shots at the watchman and the latter then emptied his shot-gun into Brady's back and shoulder, inflicting a terrible wound. Brady is an ex-convict, but has a respectable family in Kentucky.

Wealth in Rags.

Chicago special: Edward Treusch, who, for the last fifteen years, has been a familiar figure before No. 88 Randolph Street, fell dead before his notion stand just after he started to open up for business. The old man, in appearance, was one of thousands in the city who pick up an indifferent living in a species of merchandising that is half beggarly, yet, when a patrol wagon had taken his body to an undertaker's, the inside of his shirt was found to be lined with bills, thirty-nine of them being of $100 denomination. Treusch had $4,385.20 on him, the largest sum in cash ever found on a dead man in this city. It was carefully wrapped in clean linen and sewed in the shirt. With it was found an insurance policy on a house at No. 312 West Twelfth street, where the old man was found to have a family. One of the sons called at the Coroner's office during the day to get the money, but the Coroner had taken it to a bank and the Probate Court will take charge of it.

Destructive Fire.

White's Wheel Works, recently sold to the American Wheel Works, located at Fort Wayne, Ind., was entirely destroyed by fire. The works were the fourth largest in the United States, and employed nearly a thousand men. Some idea of the extent of the fire may be had when it is known that the reflection of the fire was seen on the line of the Pittsburgh road as far as Van Wert, Ohio, and as far west as Columbia City. At Wabash, fifty miles distant, was plainly seen the glare of the flames, while at Huntington the light was very brilliant. Reports from Bluffton and from Claypool on the Nickel Plate, thirty-five miles away, state that the illumination was such that residents of those places thought the fire to be but a short distance away.

Went Down in a Gale.

Two schooners went down in Lake Erie within a few miles of Cleveland during a gale. The Fannie L. Jones, of Cleveland, laden with limestone, sprung a leak and sunk about a mile from the breakwater. The Captain, Edward Cummings, was drowned, but the remaining of the crew were rescued by the life saving crew. The Jones was valued at $2,000.

The schooner Two Fannies, with iron ore from Escanaba to Cleveland, went down about twelve miles off the harbor. The crew took to the yawl boat, and were picked up by the steamer City of Detroit just before daylight. The Two Fannies was owned at Kenosha, Wis., and valued at $11,000.

More Kemmler.

Warden Duston, of Auburn State Prison, was in Albany the other night. Asked by a United Press reporter whether the statement that the execution of Kemmler was bungled was true, he said: "The execution was a thorough and complete success as the official reports will show. The public should take the evidence of physicians who saw it. It was far superior to hanging the man. Much of the matter telegraphed from Auburn was for effect. Strip it of its verbage and the result is apparent. It is said that a Westinghouse man was at the switch. That is false and can be so proved if necessary."

The Cholera Plague.

A Buda Pesth special says: The Pesther Lloyd prints sensational dispatches from Mecca to the effect that the place is now visited by 10,000 Mohammedans, who are nearly all struck by cholera. One hundred and fifty-five of the pilgrims died, one day last week. There is the greatest reason to fear that the cholera may be brought to Europe by the Boswain and Bulgarian pilgrims. The special correspondent of the Presther Lloyd says that a more sickening condition of affairs could not exist.

Gagged a Girl.

A man entered the residence of C. D. Marvin, on East Sandusky street, Findlay, Ohio, in the day time during the absence of all the family except the 14-year-old daughter, Jessie, whom he seized, and, tying a cloth over her mouth, carried her into a room, where he locked her up while ransacking the house for valuables. Before he secured anything of worth, other children came into the yard, scaring him away. The child was not injured beyond a bad fright.

Four Elopements.

Four women, Mrs. Benjamin Halstead, Mary Halstead, her daughter, Mrs. Peter Logan, another daughter, and Mrs. B. Benjamin Halstead eloped with four Italians from Hancock, N. Y. Mrs. Logan's husband followed the party. He came upon Joseph Murray, an Italian, who was in company with his wife. During the altercation which ensued Murray shot Logan dead. The murderer was arrested.

Crushed to Death.

J. T. Green boarded a train at a station twelve miles from Anna, Ill., and with the aid of skeleton keys got into the mail and robbed several pouches and then gave the signal to stop. As the train slowed up he jumped, but fell under the wheels and was fatally crushed. He lived just about long enough to tell that he was trying to rob the car. He was a son of Rev. J. W. Green, a very prominent preacher at Centralia, Ill.

Mormons Must Go.

Salt Lake City special: The liberals have carried Salt Lake County, with the exception of Sheriff and Recorder, and through irregularities in the Mormon precincts they may be counted out, as their majorities are very small. The liberals carried Salt Lake, Box Elder, Summit, and Webber Counties, which are, in fact, the territory, as they contain eight-tenths of the population.

Gen. Grant's Remains.

The Senate has passed the concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Plumb a few days ago, expressing the desire of Congress for the removal of the remains of Gen. Grant from Riverside Park to the National Arlington Cemetery.

A Fatal Dam to Charity.

It has about been decided by the members of the South Fork Fishing and Hunting Club, of Pittsburgh, to donate the property at the famous South Fork dam at Johnstown to the Pittsburgh Fresh Air Association.

Prairie Fires.

Prairie fires are devastating the Western part of Kansas, Ford and Edwards counties suffering the greatest. In the Northern part of Ford County a tract of twenty miles square was burned over inside of two hours after the flames started. So far there has been no loss of human life, but in numerous instances the live stock has been destroyed in addition to the destruction of the crops of all kinds.

Two Men Hurt.

Boiler Explosion.

At Mulberry Ind., twelve miles east of Lafayette, the boiler in the saw-mill of John Jacoby exploded, demolishing the mill. James Jhoemaker, the engineer, was killed, John Jacoby, the proprietor, was mortally injured, Alvin Jacoby and George Keizer were seriously injured, and Miss Collins, living opposite the mill, was struck by a piece of iron, breaking her leg above the knee.

A Fiendish Outrage.

A sensation has been created at West Chester, Pa., by an assault on Charles Burns and Miss Annie Maloney. The couple were walking on the street when three men knocked Burns insensible and dragged the woman into a convenient spot and all three assaulted her. It is believed they were white men blackened up as negroes. If caught then men will be severely handled.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. Marie DeCamp, the aged widow of the late Joseph DeCamp, was found dead in the cellar of her residence at Cincinnati. She had gone from her bed into the cellar with a lighted candle during the night without the knowledge of her daughters and had set fire to her night clothes. She was 84 years old, and was almost helpless.

Indiana Tragedy.

William Van Bruce was shot and killed at Princeton, Ind., by his stepson. The two quarreled and Van Bruce tried to stab the boy. The latter ran out in the street closely pursued by Van Bruce with a knife. Finally the boy turned and fired three shots from his revolver, all of which took effect, killing Van Bruce instantly.

Lost Both Legs.

William Beecher, a carpenter of Lancaster, O., while boarding a coal train at the depot, fell and had both legs crushed off. He is dying. Beecher had started for Nelsonville to convey the glad tidings to his son-in-law at that place that a fortune of $11,000 had just been left the latter.

Terrible Tortures.

A party of rebel Arabs met and defeated the Morocco army at Aitinsi with considerable loss. One hundred and twenty captives taken by the rebels were put to death. The son of the Governor, who was also captured by the rebels, was compelled to eat toasted portions of his own flesh.

In Self-Defense.

Coleville (Wash.) special: William Jenkins has arrived from his ranch, sixty miles from here, and surrendered to the authorities. He stated that he had killed two men—William Daly and Benjamin Shaw—in a dispute over a horse trade. Jenkins claims he acted in self-defense.

Killed a Chicago Drummer.

William O'Brien, an Indiana convict at the State Prison South, was identified as the man who is charged with the murdur of a Chicago drummer named Moore who was mysteriously killed at Laselle some time ago.

Honors to the Dead.

Rear Admiral Warden has been invited by the Navy Department to accompany the remains of Capt. John Ericsson on Aug. 23 to the vessel that is to carry the body to the old country for final interment.

Explosion Kills One Man.

The boiler in the saw-mill of William Landis, at Franklin, Ind., exploded, wrecking the mill and causing the death of John Spears. This is the fourth explosion in the same mill within three years.

Boys in Blue.

The annual meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic, National Encampment, is being held at Boston. There is a large attendance and much good feeling prevails.

Colonel Davis' Pull.

It is a settled fact that Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, will be elected Director General of the World's Fair at the next session of the Directors of the Columbian Exposition.

Clarkson Resigned.

First Assistant Postmaster General Clarkson has tendered to the President his resignation to take effect September 1 next.

Killed in the Alps.

Vienna special: Baron Leon, of Vienna, has been killed by falling over a precipice in the Alps.

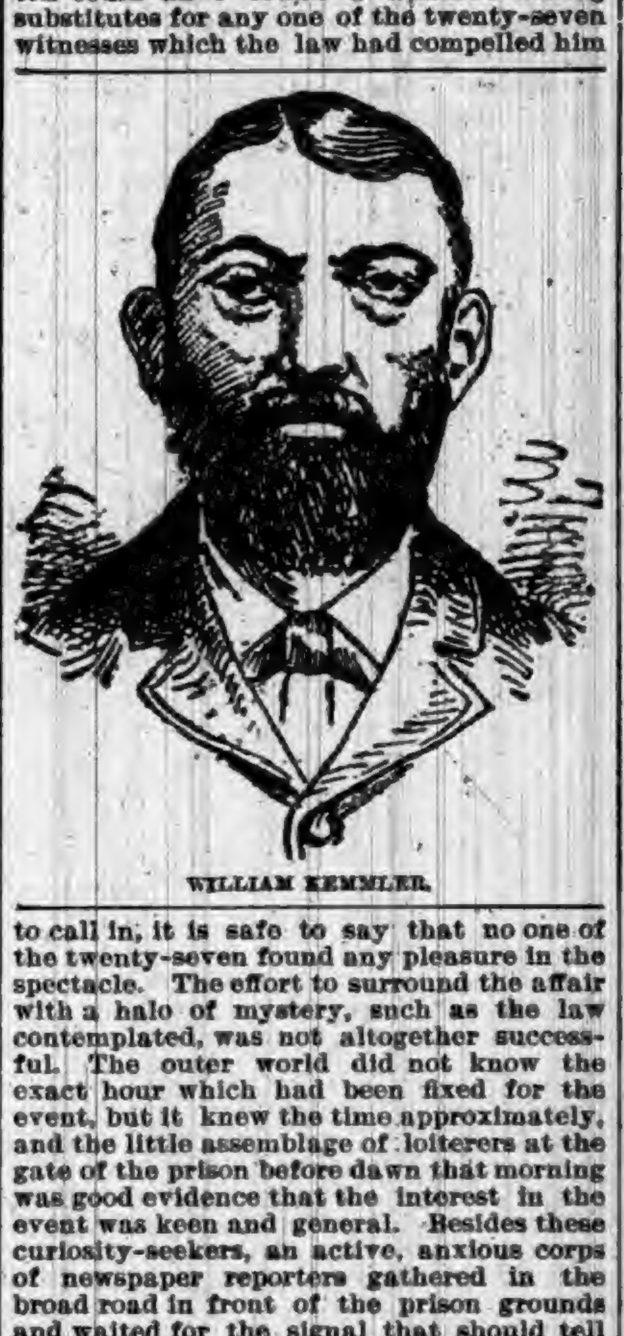
DEATH OF KEMMLER.

THE MURDERER WHO WILL MAKE HISTORY.

Dr. Spitzka, the Eminent Medical Expert, Declares that Electrocution Is a Failure—Though the Murderer's Flesh Was Burned Doctors Agree that He Suffered No Pain—Scenes Preceding the Fatal Hour.

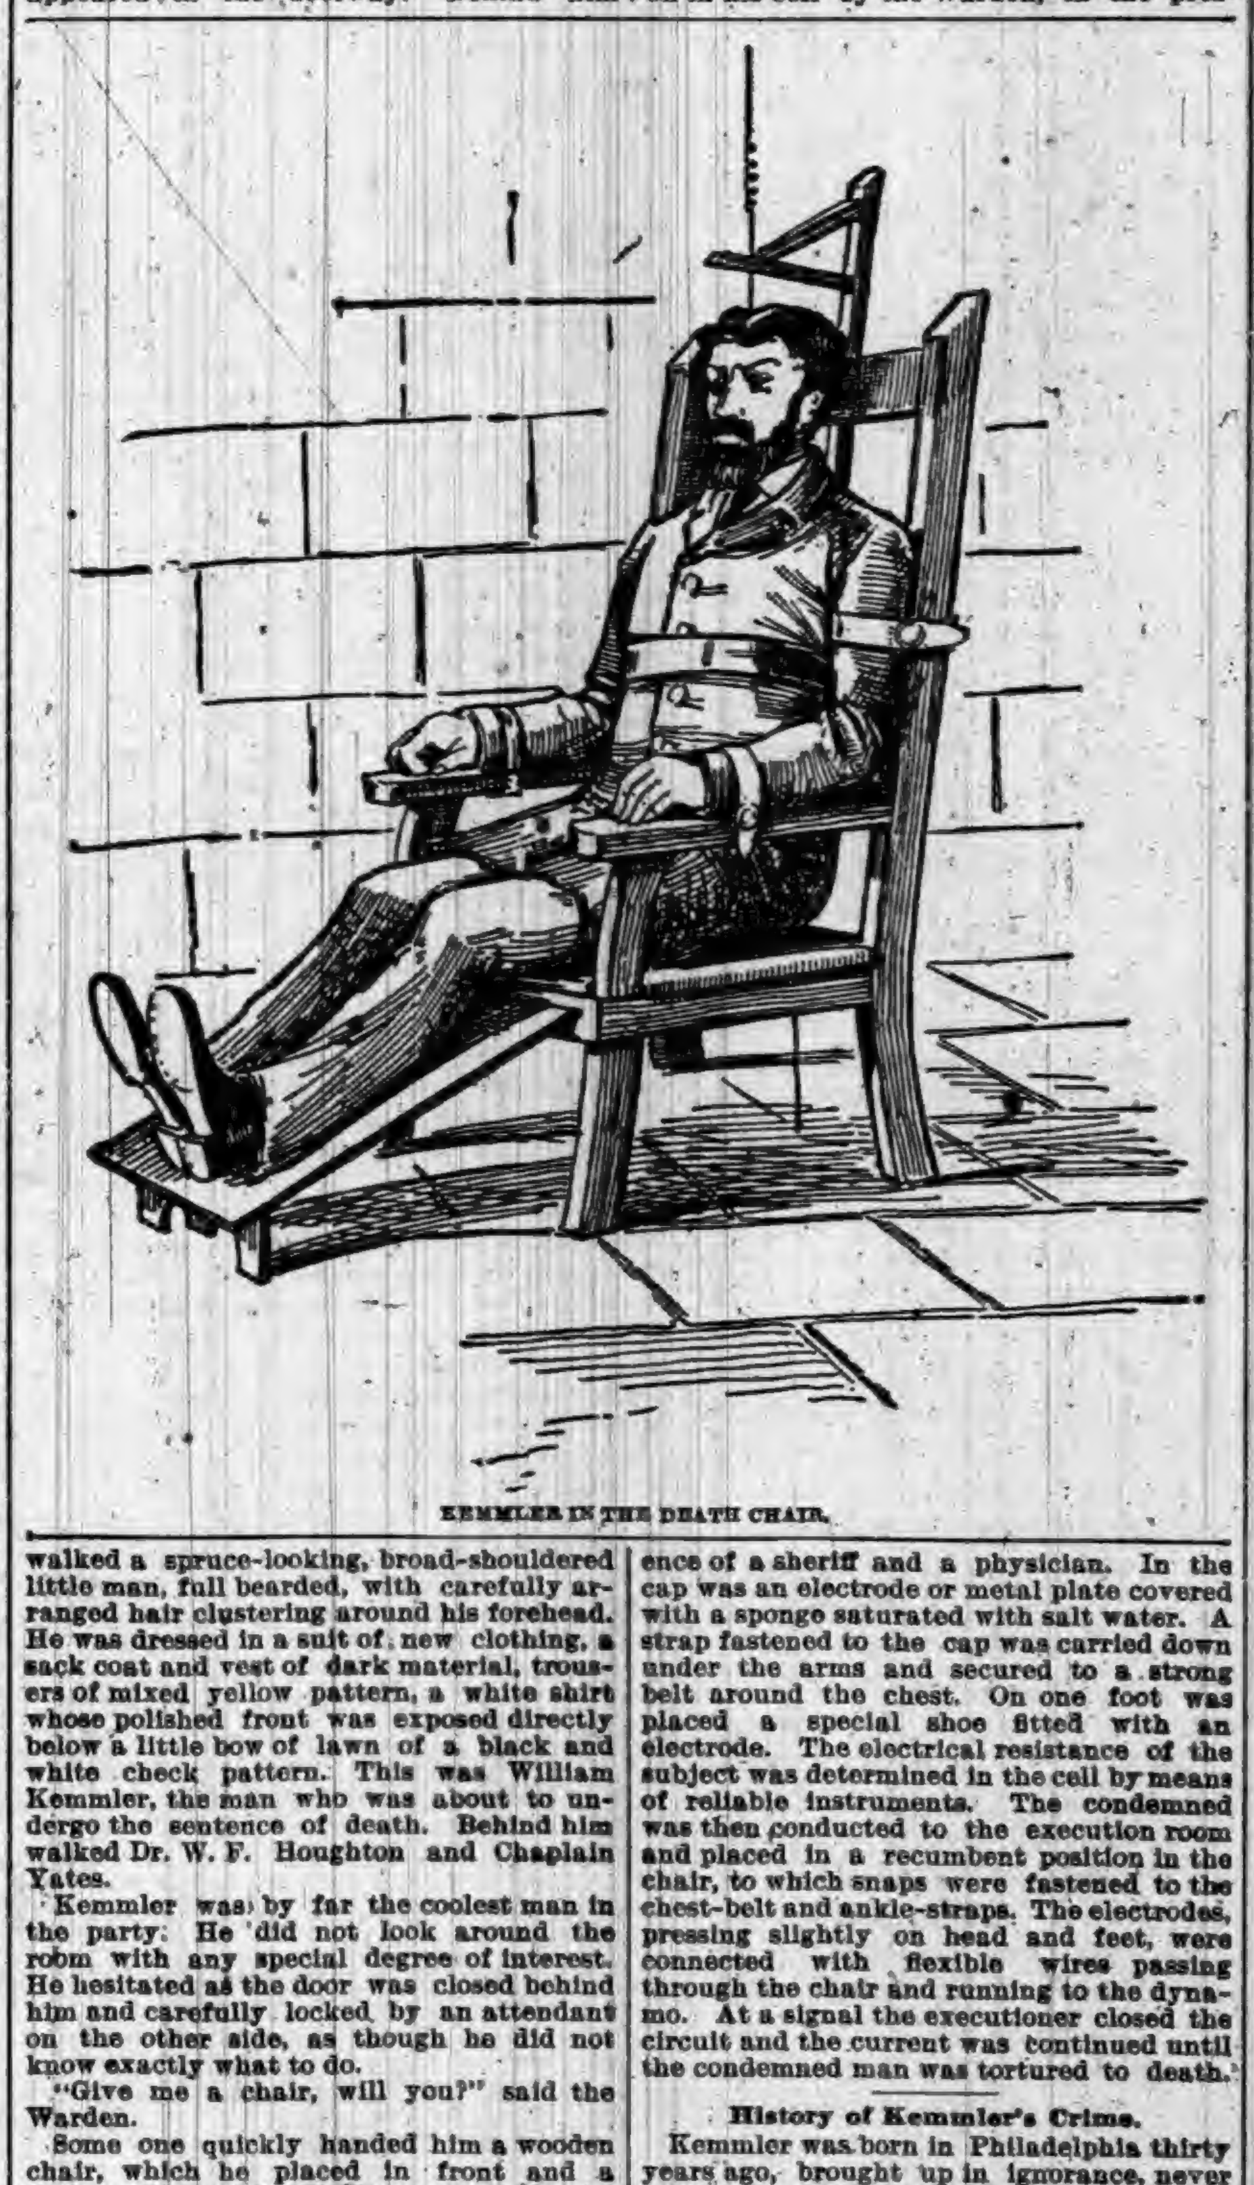
At Auburn, N. Y., with the rising of the sun on Aug. 6, William Kemmler passed into history as the first man executed by electricity. The prisoner was awakened at five o'clock by the death watch, McNaughton. He appeared cool and dressed himself carefully. At 6 o'clock he ate a light breakfast of eggs, beefsteak, potatoes, and coffee. At 6:15 Warden Durston appeared and read the death warrant. Up to 6:35 Kemmler was alone with his spiritual advisers. Then the Warden rapped at the cell door, and Kemmler, preceded by Dr. Houghton, his religious adviser, passed to the execution room.

An execution is always a ghastly sight. A lynching bee has about it an attendant excitement born of hurried, boisterous action, which lends an artificial strength to the nerves of participant and on-lookers alike. But the slow solemnity of a public execution—the quiet, formal preparations for a judicial killing—are depressing enough to weaken the nerves and undermine the courage of the bravest. So, while Warden Durston could have found a hundred willing substitutes for any one of the twenty-seven witnesses which the law had compelled him to call in, it is safe to say that no one of the twenty-seven found any pleasure in the spectacle. The effort to surround the affair with a halo of mystery, such as the law contemplated, was not altogether successful. The outer world did not know the exact hour which had been fixed for the event, but it knew the time approximately, and the little assemblage of loiterers at the gate of the prison before dawn that morning was good evidence that the interest in the event was keen and general. Besides these curiosity-seekers, an active, anxious corps of newspaper reporters gathered in the broad road in front of the prison grounds and waited for the signal that should tell them that the execution was over.



WILLIAM KEMMLER.

At 6:38 the door at the right of the execution chair leading toward the execution-room opened, and Warden Durston's figure appeared in the doorway. Behind him walked a spruce-looking, broad-shouldered little man, full bearded, with carefully arranged hair clustering around his forehead. He was dressed in a suit of new clothing, a sack coat and vest of dark material, trousers of mixed yellow pattern, a white shirt whose polished front was exposed directly below a little bow of lawn of a black and white check pattern. This was William Kemmler, the man who was about to undergo the sentence of death. Behind him walked Dr. W. F. Houghton and Chaplain Yates.

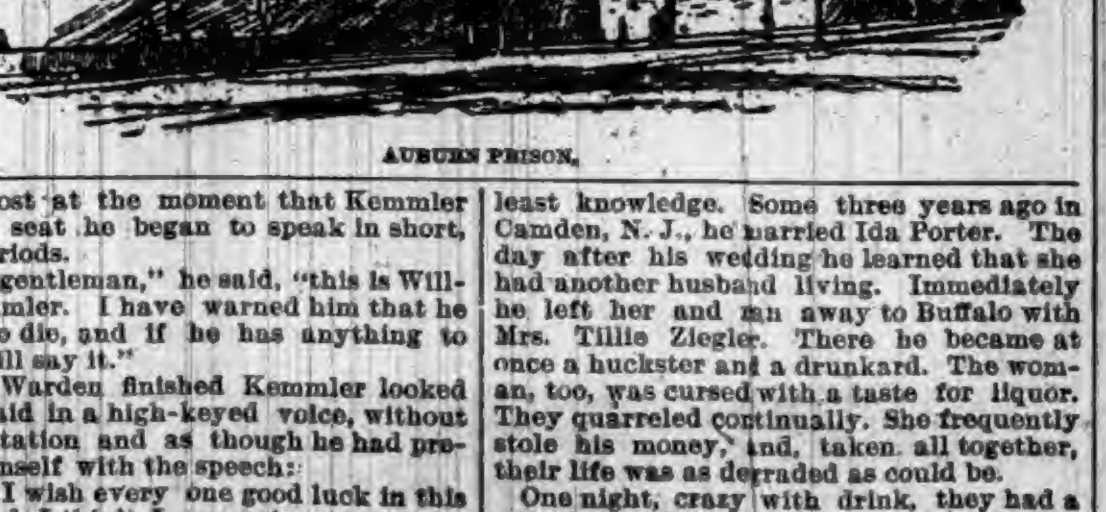


KEMMLER IN THE DEATH CHAIR.

Kemmler was by far the coolest man in the party. He did not look around the room with any special degree of interest. He hesitated as the door was closed behind him and carefully locked by an attendant on the other side, as though he did not know exactly what to do.

"Give me a chair, will you?" said the Warden.

Some one quickly handed him a wooden chair, which he placed in front and a little to the right of the execution chair, facing the little circle of men. Kemmler sat down composedly, looked about him, and then up and down, without any evidence of fear or of especial interest in the event. His face was not stolid; it was not indifferent. He looked, if anything, as though he was rather pleased at being the center of interest. Warden Durston stood at the left of the chair, with his hand on the back of it, and almost at the moment that Kemmler took his seat he began to speak in short, quick periods.



AUBURN PRISON.

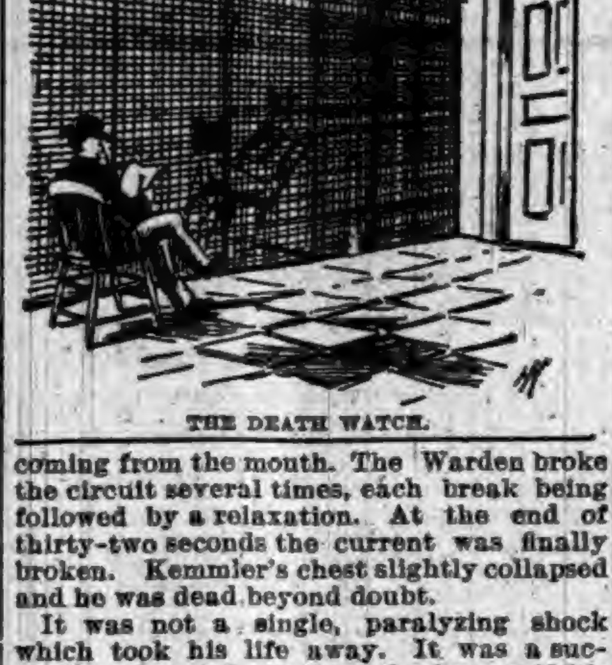
"Now, gentleman," he said, "this is William Kemmler. I have warned him that he has got to die, and if he has anything to say he will say it."

As the Warden finished Kemmler looked up and said in a high-keyed voice, without any hesitation and as though he had prepared himself with the speech:

"Well, I wish every one good luck in this world, and I think I am going to a good place, and the papers have been saying a lot of stuff, that isn't so. That's all I have to say."

At 6:45 Warden Durston touched the lever completing the circuit. Instantly Kemmler's arms stretched out as far as the straps allowed, the fingers opened and closed, the body stiffened, and all was still. The current was irregular, the volt-metre flying back and forth between 800 and 1,300 volts.

At the end of seventeen seconds the current was broken. In a second the chest relaxed and something like a gasp was given forth. Every one was sure Kemmler was not yet dead. Drs. Spitzka and McDonald looked at Kemmler a moment and then gave orders to apply the current again. Warden Durston closed the lever. The same rigidity of body was seen as before. Froth began coming from the mouth. The Warden broke the circuit several times, each break being followed by a relaxation. At the end of thirty-two seconds the current was finally broken. Kemmler's chest slightly collapsed and he was dead beyond doubt.



THE DEATH WATCH.

It was not a single, paralyzing shock which took his life away. It was a succession of awful, rending throbs, as if his nerves were being torn piece by piece from their centers. It was a spectacle no tongue nor pen could describe. The dynamo was allowed four full minutes to pour its destroying tide into the poor, strapped-down piece of humanity. Then there appeared signs known to those familiar with cases of death on wires in New York. Smoke came from the mouth. The odor of burning flesh filled stiflingly the hot room. By this time even the coolest-headed of the party was terribly impressed by the awfulness of the event.

"How long did Kemmler suffer?" asked a reporter, of one of the physicians who saw the execution.

The doctor was loath to reply at first, but finding the reporter knew already something of what had gone on in that awful death chamber he spoke assuringly: "Oh, the poor fellow was unconscious after the first shock. He did not feel the rest."

It was a nervous, unstrung party which left the prison after the event was over. More than one of them will see for long days in his mind's eye a pain-distorted face, with half-opened eyes, revealed when the face of the dead William Kemmler was finally uncovered.

After half an hour the electrodes were removed. The hair on the head was half burned, and there were no marks on the back or contortions on the face. The body was unstrapped and taken from the chair and placed on a table.

When witnesses left the prison they were besieged by a swarm of reporters and hundreds of spectators. Dr. Spitzka said the execution in itself was successful, but declined to say more until after the autopsy. Dr. McDonald, President of the State Lunacy Commission, said: "The execution was a success, but the machinery was seriously at fault."

The Instrument of Death.

The chair for the condemned was made of heavy oak, and resembled an ordinary reclining-chair. The incline of the occupant was about that of a man in a barber's chair. There were adjustable sliding foot and head rests. The cap for the condemned was put on in his cell by the Warden, in the presence of a sheriff and a physician. In the cap was an electrode or metal plate covered with a sponge saturated with salt water. A strap fastened to the cap was carried down under the arms and secured to a strong belt around the chest. On one foot was placed a special shoe fitted with an electrode. The electrical resistance of the subject was determined in the cell by means of reliable instruments. The condemned was then conducted to the execution room and placed in a recumbent position in the chair, to which snaps were fastened to the chest-belt and ankle-straps. The electrodes, pressing slightly on head and feet, were connected with flexible wires passing through the chair and running to the dynamo. At a signal the executioner closed the circuit and the current was continued until the condemned man was tortured to death.

History of Kemmler's Crime.

Kemmler was born in Philadelphia thirty years ago, brought up in ignorance, never learned a trade, and for many years had been a waif and a wanderer. He did not know whether he had a relative living, although shortly after he came to Auburn he received a letter from a man living in Ohio who was probably his uncle.

So he grew up like a lost child, and naturally, because his father was a butcher, worked more at that than at anything else. It was the only business of which he had the least knowledge. Some three years ago in Camden, N. J., he married Ida Porter. The day after his wedding he learned that she had another husband living. Immediately he left her and ran away to Buffalo with Mrs. Tillie Ziegler. There he became at once a huckster and a drunkard. The woman, too, was cursed with a taste for liquor. They quarreled continually. She frequently stole his money, and, taken all together, their life was as degraded as could be.

One night, crazy with drink, they had a row about a few cents, and he struck her on the head with an ax. Next day she was dead. That night, in the station-house cell, he was plied with liquor until he grew talkative, and told enough to convict himself. That is the whole story of his life, common enough in its beginning and uncommon in its ending, only because he is the first to die this new death ordained by the law.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives — Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—Gist of the Business.

In the Senate the glassware and stone schedules of the tariff bill were disposed of on the 5th. The discussion continued for a long time, and at its close an amendment offered by Mr. McPherson to paragraph 106 as to sizes of window glass was accepted by Mr. Aldrich and was agreed to. Paragraph 110 referred to "Cast polished plate-glass silver and looking-glass plates." Mr. Vest moved to reduce the rates on the lowest size from six to four cents per square foot on the ground that this German looking-glass was used in cheap furniture and was not produced in this country. The vote on Mr. Vest's amendment was taken by yeas and nays. The amendment was rejected—yeas 17; nays, 28. Mr. Plumb was the only Republican voting with the Democrats. In the House Mr. McKinley, from the Committe on Rules, reported a resolution asking the Secretary of the Navy for the reasons for the increase of the force at the Kittery Navy-Yard. In speaking to the resolution Mr. Cummings of New York said the order increasing the force of the Kittery Navy-Yard looked as though the design was to use executive power for partisan purposes. Mr. Boutelle replied to Mr. Cummings, and after a long discussion the resolution was adopted.

The conference report on the original-package bill was agreed to in the House on the 6th, by a vote of 120 yeas to 93 nays. It is as follows: That all fermented, distilled or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale or storage, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. The Senate spent the day discussing the tariff.

In the Senate on the 7th the tariff bill was taken up and a number of amendments, none of great importance, were made. The sundry civil bill was reported and Mr. Allison said the bill as it passed the House had carried $28,000,000, and had been increased by the Senate about $5,000,000. The net reductions agreed to in the conference committee amounted to $3,709,000, so that the bill carried under the conference report $29,852,000. Mr. Hoar, of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported a substitute for the House election bill, and it was placed on the calendar. The minority of the committee, he said, dissented from the report. In the House on motion of Mr. Bingham (Pa.), a resolution was adopted calling on the Postmaster General for copies of the agreements for the transportation of mails between the United States and foreign countries, the conditions upon which the awards are made, and the rates of payment for the service.

In the Senate, on the 8th, the concurrent resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Plumb expressing the desire of Congress for the removal of the remains of "the illustrious soldier and statesman, Ulysses S. Grant," to and their interment in the Arlington National Cemetery, and requesting the President to convey to the widow of that eminent man such desire, tendering to her, on behalf of the nation, all necessary facilities for such removal and interment, was taken up and agreed to. The conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill was also agreed to. The House resumed consideration of the general deficiency bill, but after considerable time it was discovered that there was no quorum present and the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 9th, Senator Hoar offered a resolution providing "that the rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following: 'When any bill or resolution shall have been under consideration for a reasonable time, it shall be in order for any Senator to demand that debate thereon be closed. If such demand be seconded by a majority of the Senators present, the question shall forthwith be taken thereon without further debate, and the pending measure shall take precedence of all other business whatever. After the Senate shall have decided to close debate, no motion shall be in order but a motion to adjourn or to take a recess, when such motions shall be seconded by a majority of the Senate. When either of such motions shall have been lost, or shall have failed of a second, it shall not be in order to renew the same until one Senator shall have spoken upon the pending measure, or one vote upon the same shall have intervened.'" In the House on motion of Mr. McKinley of Ohio (by unanimous consent), the Senate joint resolution was passed accepting from the G. A. R. a statue of Gen. U. S. Grant.

A SUBURBAN GRAVEYARD.

BY MRS. NAPOLEON B. MORANGE.

Discord cannot invade this quiet spot;
  Peace is the greater for the babel near;
The battle, often fruitless, there is fought;
  The sweet reward of rest is entered here.

They leave the hot breath of the dusty street,
  The press of care, the traffic's sleepless roar,
To seek the coolness of this green retreat
  Where Nature wooes and keeps them evermore.

The heart-throbs of the feverish city near,
  The pulse-beat of its ever restless life,
Would reach the tranquil sleepers even here,
  And wake them once again to join the strife.

But Death with iron hand has shut the gate
  And lets no trivial messenger within!
Here, in majestic calm, he holds his state,
  While wealth reigns there amid the city's din.

This is the bourne longed for when spirits sink,
  The rest Wealth cannot buy in troubled hours,
The Lethe sought beside the river's brink—
  This blessed sleep among the birds and flowers.

And yet, with all its soothing charm, the heart
  Burns for the conflict, for the active street,
And turns away, eager to take its part
  Where the strong forces of the living meet.

When all is over, the fierce rage for gain,
  When we are weary of the treadmill round,
When life has little left but Age and Pain—
  God's-acre has a balm for every wound.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XXII.—(Continued.)

He admired her like a rare plant, a beautiful object, an exquisite work, in which nature had combined physical and moral grace with perfect proportion and harmony. His deportment as slave near her was not long a performance.

Our fair readers have, doubtless, remarked an odd fact, which is, that where a reciprocal sentiment of two feeble human beings has reached a certain point of maturity, chance never fails to furnish a fatal occasion which betrays the secret of the two hearts, and suddenly launches the thunderbolt which has been gradually gathering in the clouds.

This is the crisis of all love.

This occasion presented itself to Clara Denton and Warren Leland in the form of an unpoetic incident, with which the rag-picker and his little grandchildren were intimately connected.

It was the end of the month. Leland had gone out after dinner to take a ride in the neighborhood. Night had already fallen, clear and cool; but as he could not see Mrs. Denton that evening, he began to think only of being near her, and felt that unwillingness to work common to lovers, striving to kill time, which hung heavy on his hands.

He hoped also that violent exercise might calm his spirit, which had never been more profoundly agitated. Still young and unpracticed in his pitiless system, he was troubled at the thought of a victim so pure as Clara Denton. To trample on the life, the repose, and the heart of such a woman, as the horse tramples on the grass of the road, with as little care or pity, was hard for a novice.

As strange as it may appear, the idea of marrying her had occurred to him. Then he said to himself that this weakness was in direct contradiction to his principles, and that she would cause him to lose forever the mastery over himself, and throw him back into the nothingness of his past life. Yet, with the corrupt inspirations of his depraved soul, he foresaw that the moment he touched her hands with the lips of a lover, a new sentiment would spring up in her soul.

As he abandoned himself to these passionate imaginings, the recollection of Amy Brownell came back suddenly to his memory.

He grew pale in the darkness.

At this moment he was passing by the edge of a piece of woods a portion of which had been cleared.

It was not chance alone that had directed him to this point. Clara Denton loved this spot and had frequently taken him there, and on the preceding evening, accompanied by her daughter and Mildred Lester, had visited it with him.

The site was a peculiar one. Although not far from houses, the woods were very wild, as though a thousand miles distant from any other place.

You would have said it was a virgin forest, untouched by the ax of the pioneer. Enormous stumps without bark, trunks of gigantic trees, covered pell-mell the declivity of the hill, and barricaded here and there, in a picturesque manner, the current of the brook which ran into the valley.

A little higher up the dense wood of tufted trees contributed to diffuse that religious light half over the rocks, the brushwood, and the fertile soil, and on the limpid water, which is the charm and horror of old, neglected woods.

In this solitude, and on quite a space of cleared ground, rose a poor cottage. This was Jennie's home, and here her children and her father lived with her.

The old rag-picker interested Clara Denton greatly, probably because, like Leland, he had a bad reputation. She loved the children, too, who, though dirty, were beautiful as angels, and she pitied their mother.

The little ones had been quite ill. Clara had helped to nurse them, and apparently they had recovered; indeed, only the evening before, Leland and the party with him had met them wandering in the woods, careless and happy as children ought to be.

Leland slowly walked his horse over the rocky and winding path on the slope of the hillock. This was the moment when the ghost of Amy Brownell had, as it were, risen before him, and he believed he could almost hear her cry.

All at once this illusion gave place to a strange reality. The voice of a woman plainly called him by name, in accents of distress:

"Mr. Leland, Mr. Leland!"

Stopping his horse on the instant, he felt an icy shudder pass through his frame.

CHAPTER XXIII.

AT THE RAG-PICKERS' COTTAGE.

The same voice rose higher and called him again.

He recognized it as the voice of Clara Denton.

Looking around him in the obscure light with a rapid glance, he saw a light shining through the foliage in the direction of Jennie's cottage.

Guided by this, he put spurs to his horse, crossed the cleared ground up the hillside, and found himself face to face with Clara.

She was standing on the threshold of the cottage, her head bare, and her beautiful hair disheveled under a long black veil. She was giving a farm hand some hasty orders.

When she saw Leland approaching she came toward him.

"Pardon me," she said, "but I thought I recognized you, and so I called you. I am so greatly distressed—so distressed! The two children of this poor woman are sick again—they are dying! What is to be done? Come in—come in, I beg of you!"

He leaped to the ground, secured his horse, and followed Clara into the cottage.

The two children were lying side by side on a little bed, immovable, rigid, their eyes open and their pupils strangely dilated, their faces red and agitated by strange convulsions.

They seemed to be in the agony of death.

A doctor was leaning over them, looking at them with fixed, anxious and despairing eyes.

The mother was on her knees, her head clasped in her hands, and weeping bitterly.

At the foot of the bed stood the rag-picker, with his savage mien—his arms crossed and his eyes dry. He shuddered at intervals, and murmured in a hoarse, hollow voice:

"Both of them! Both of them!" Then he relapsed into his mournful attitude.

The doctor approached Warren quickly.

"Mr. Leland," said he, "what can this be? I believe it to be poisoning, but can detect no definite symptoms; otherwise, the mother should know—but she knows nothing! A sunstroke, perhaps; but as both were struck at the same time—and then at this season—ah, my dear sir, our profession is very useless sometimes."

"Isn't it a relapse?"

"No, no! nothing at all like the recent illness."

Leland made further and rapid inquiries.

They had sought the doctor, who was dining with Mr. Metcalf's family an hour before. He had hastened, and found the children in a state of fearful congestion.

It appeared they had fallen into this state when first attacked, and became delirious.

Leland conceived an idea.

He asked to see the clothes the children had worn during the day.

The mother gave them to him.

The doctor touched his forehead, and turned over with a feverish hand the rough waistcoats, the knee-breeches, searched the pockets, and found dozens of a small fruit like cherries, half crushed.

"A species of deadly nightshade!" he exclaimed. "That idea struck me several times, but how could I be sure? You cannot find it within sixty miles of here, except in the vicinity of this cursed spot—that I am sure of."

"Do you think there is yet time?" asked Leland, in a low voice. "The children seem to me to be very ill."

"Lost, I am afraid; but everything depends on the time which has passed, the quantity they have taken, and the remedies I can procure."

The good physician consulted quickly with Clara, who found that she had not in her country pharmacy the necessary remedies, or counter-irritants, which the urgency of the case demanded.

He was obliged to content himself with the essence of coffee, which Jennie prepared in haste, and to send to New Milford for the other things needed.

"To New Milford!" exclaimed Clara. "Good heavens! it is more than ten miles—it is night, and we shall have to wait probably three or four hours!"

Leland heard this.

"Doctor, write your prescription," he said; "my horse is at the door, and with him I can do the twenty miles in an hour; in one hour I promise to be here again."

"Oh, thanks!" exclaimed Clara.

He took the prescription which the doctor had traced on a leaf of his pad, mounted his horse and departed.

The highway was, fortunately, not far distant.

When he reached it he put spurs to his horse, and rode like the phantom horseman.

It was 9 o'clock when Clara Denton witnessed his departure; it was a few moments after 10 when she heard the tramp of his horse at the foot of the hill, and ran to the door of the cottage to greet him.

The condition of the two children seemed to have grown worse in the interval, but the doctor had great hopes in the remedies which Leland was to bring.

She waited with impatience, and received him like the dawn of the last hope.

She contented herself with pressing his hand, when, breathless he descended from his horse. But, womanlike, she threw herself on the animal, who was covered with foam, and steaming like a stove.

"Poor Sultan," she said, embracing him in her two arms—"dear Sultan—good Sultan! You are half dead, are you not? But I love you well. Go in quickly, Mr. Leland. I will attend to Sultan."

And while the young man entered the cottage, she confided Sultan to the farm hand, with orders to take him to the stable, and a thousand minute directions to take good care of him after his noble conduct.

The doctor had to obtain the aid of Leland to pass the new medicine through the clenched teeth of the unfortunate children. While both were engaged in this work, Clara was sitting on a stool with her head resting against the wall.

The doctor suddenly raised his eyes and fixed them on her.

"But, my dear Mrs. Denton," he said, "you are ill. You have had too much excitement, and the air in this poor place is very bad. You must go home."

"I really do not feel very well," she murmured.

"You must go at once. We shall send you the news. Your father's hired man will take you home."

She raised herself, trembling; but one look from Jennie arrested her. For this poor woman, it seemed that Providence deserted her with Clara Denton.

"No!" she said, with a divine sweetness; "I will not go. I shall only breathe a little fresh air. I will remain until they are safe, I promise you," and left the room smiling upon the poor woman.

After a few moments the doctor said to Leland:

"My dear sir, I thank you; but I really have no further need of your services; so you, too, may go and rest yourself, for you are growing pale also."

Leland, exhausted by his long ride, felt suffocated by the atmosphere of the cottage, and consented to the suggestion of the physician, telling him he would not go far.

As he put his foot outside of the cottage, Clara, who was sitting before the door, quickly rose and threw over his his shoulders a cloak which had been brought for her. She then reseated herself without speaking.

"But you cannot remain here all night," he said.

"I should be too uneasy at home."

"But the night is damp and cold. Shall I make you a fire?"

"If you wish, she said.

"Let us see where we can make this little fire. In the midst of the woods here it is impossible; we should have a conflagration to finish the picture. Can you walk? Then take my arm and we will go and search for a place for our encampment."

She leaned lightly on his arm and made a few steps with him toward the forest.

"Do you think they are saved?" she asked.

"I hope so," he replied. "The doctor's face is more cheerful."

"Oh! how glad I am!"

Both of them stumbled over a root and commenced laughing like two children for several minutes.

"We shall soon be in the woods," said Clara; "and I declare I can go no farther. Good or bad, I shall choose this spot."

They were still quite close to the cottage, but the branches of the old trees which had been spared by the axe spread like a somber dome over their heads. Near by was a large rock, slightly covered with moss and a number of old trunks of trees, on which Clara took her seat.

"Nothing could be better," said Leland, gayly. "I must collect my materials."

A moment after he reappeared, bringing in his arms brushwood, and also a heavy blanket which he had found somewhere.

He got on his knees in front of the rock, prepared the fuel, and lighted it with a match. When the flame began to flicker on the rustic hearth, Clara trembled with joy and held out both hands to the blaze.

"Heavens! how nice it is!" she said, "and then this is amusing; one would say we had been shipwrecked. Now, Mr. Leland, if you would be perfect, go and see what the doctor says."

He ran to the cottage, and quickly returned.

"Well!" she exclaimed.

"A great deal of hope."

"Oh! how glad I am!"

She pressed his hand.

"Sit down there," she said.

He sat down on a rock near her, and replied to her eager questions. He repeated in detail his conversation with the doctor. She listened at first with interest, but little by little, wrapping her head in her veil, and resting it on the bough interlaced behind her, she seemed to be uncomfortably resting from fatigue.

"You are likely to fall asleep there," he said, laughing.

"Quite so," she murmured—smiled, and went to sleep.

Her sleep resembled death, it was so profound, and so calm was the beating of her heart, so regular her breathing.

Leland knelt down again by the hearth, to listen breathlessly and to gaze upon her.

From time to time he seemed to meditate, and the solitude was only disturbed by the rustling of the leaves.

His eyes followed the flickering of the flame, sometimes resting on the white rock, sometimes on the woods, sometimes on the arches of the high trees, as though he wished to fix in his memory all the details of this sweet scene. Then his gaze would rest on the young woman, clothed in her beauty, grace and confiding repose.

What heavenly thoughts descended at that moment on this somber soul—what hesitation, what doubt assailed it? What images of peace, truth, virtue, and happiness passed into that brain full of storm, and chased away phantoms of the sophistries he cherished? He himself knew, but never told.

The brisk crackling of the wood awakened her. She opened her eyes in surprise, and as she saw the young man kneeling before her, addressed him:

"How are they now, Mr. Leland?"

He did not know how to tell her that for the last hour he had but one thought, and that was of her.

The doctor appeared suddenly before them.

"They are saved, Mrs. Denton," he said, abruptly; "come and see for yourself, and then return home, or we shall have to cure you to-morrow. You are very imprudent to have remained in these damp woods, and it was foolish of Mr. Leland to let you do so."

She took the doctor's arm and re-entered the cottage. The two children, now roused from the dangerous torpor, but who seemed still terrified by the threatened death, raised their little heads. She made them a sign to keep quiet, and leaning over their pillow, kissed them.

"To-morrow, my darlings," she said. But the mother, half laughing, half crying, followed Clara step by step, speaking to her, and kissing her hand.

"Let her alone," cried the doctor, querulously. "Go home, Mrs. Denton. Mr. Leland, take her there."

She was going out, when the old rag-picker, who had not before spoken, and who was sitting in the corner of the room as if stupefied, rose suddenly, seized the arm of Mrs. Denton, who, slightly terrified, turned round, for the gesture of the man was so violent as to seem menacing; his eyes, hard and dry, were fixed upon her, and he continued to squeeze her arm with a contracted hand.

"My friend," she said, although rather uncertain.

"Yes, your friend," muttered the old rag-picker, with a hollow voice; "yes, remember! whatever comes, your friend!"

He could not continue; his mouth worked as if in a convulsion, his frightful weeping shook his frame; he then threw himself on his knees, and they saw a shower of tears force themselves through the hands clasped over his face.

"Take her away, sir," said the doctor.

Leland gently pushed her out of the cottage and followed her. She took his arm and descended the rugged path which led to her home.

CHAPTER XXIV.

AN ASTOUNDING PROPOSITION.

It was a walk of fifteen minutes from the woods. Half the distance was passed over without interchanging a word.

Once or twice, when the rays of the moon pierced through the clouds, Leland thought he saw her wipe away a tear.

He guided her cautiously in the darkness, although the light step of the young lady was scarcely slower in the obscurity.

Her springy step pressed noiselessly the fallen leaves—avoided without assistance the ruts and marshes, as though endowed with a magical clairvoyance. When they reached a cross-road and Leland seemed uncertain, she would indicate the way by a slight pressure of the arm.

Both were no doubt embarrassed by the long silence—it was Clara who first broke it.

"You have been very good this evening, Mr. Leland," she said, in a low and slightly agitated voice.

"Ah! I love you so!" said the young man.

He pronounced these words in such a deep, impassioned tone that Clara Denton trembled and stood still in the road.

"Mr. Leland!" she exclaimed.

"Well?" he demanded, in a strange tone.

"Great heavens! What is this? But—but it can be nothing. I must have misunderstood you!"

"You did not, madam. But I have said either too much or too little. I will endeavor to explain the error."

His voice was calm, but she recoiled a step or two and stood trembling before him.

"What I said just now," he went on, "is no more nor less than the truth. I love you—love you as you deserve to be loved, with all my soul and might and strength. I never knew what love was before."

Clara stood there trembling, but made no sign.

"But don't fear that I would take advantage of this solitude—of your loneliness. Believe me, you are sacred to me."

"I have no fear," she whispered.

"Oh, not have no fear!" he repeated, in a tone of voice infinitely softened and tender. "It is I who am afraid—it is I who tremble—you see it; for since I have spoken, all is over. I expect nothing more—I hope for nothing; this night has no possible to-morrow. I know it. Your husband I dare not be—your lover I should not wish to be. I ask nothing of you—understand well! I should like to burn my heart at your feet, as on an altar—this is all.

"Do you believe me? Answer! Are you calm? Are you confident? Will you hear me? May I tell you what image I carry of you in the secret recesses of my heart?

"Dear creature that you are, you do not—ah, you do not know how great is your worth, and I fear to tell you, so much am I afraid of stripping you of your charms, or one of your virtues. If you had been proud of yourself, as you have a right to be, you would be less perfect, and I should love you less.

"But I wish to tell you how lovable and how charming you are. You alone do not know it. You alone do not see the soft flame of your large eyes—the reflection of your heroic soul on your young but serene brow.

"Your charm is over everything you do—your slightest gesture is engraven on me. Into the most ordinary duties of every-day life you carry a peculiar grace, like a young priestess who recites her daily devotions. Your hand, your touch, your breath purifies everything—even the most humble and the most wicked beings—and myself first of all!

"Oh, how I am astonished at the words which I pronounce, and the sentiments which animate me, to whom you have made clear new truths. Yes, all the rhapsodies of the poets, all the loves of the martyrs, I comprehend in your presence. This is truth itself. I understand those who died for their faith by torture—because I should like to suffer for you—because I believe in you—because I respect you—I cherish you—I adore you!"

He stopped, shivering, and half prostrating himself before her, seized the end of her veil and kissed it.

"Now," continued he, with a kind of grave sadness, "go, Mrs. Denton; I have forgotten too long you require repose. Pardon me—proceed. I shall follow you at a distance, until you reach your home, to protect you—but fear nothing from me."

Clara Denton had listened, without once interrupting him even by a sign. Words would only excite the young man more.

Probably she understood, for the first time in her life, one of those songs of love—one of those hymns living with passion, which every woman wishes to hear before she dies.

Should she die because she had heard it?

She remained without speaking, as though just awakening from a dream, and let fall these words, soft and feeble, like a sigh:

"My God!"

After another pause, she advanced a few steps on the road.

"Give me your arm as far as my house, Mr. Leland," she said.

He obeyed her, and they continued their walk toward the house, the light of which they soon saw.

They did not exchange a word—only as they reached the gate, Mrs. Denton turned and made him a slight gesture with her hand, in sign of adieu.

In return, Leland bowed low, and withdrew.

This man had been sincere.

When true passion surprises the human soul, it breaks down all resolves, sweeps away all logic, and crushes all calculations.

In this lies its grandeur, and also its danger.

When this sublime folly possesses you, it elevates you—it transfigures you. It can suddenly convert a common man into a poet, a coward into a hero, an egotist into a martyr, and Don Juan himself into an angel of purity.

With women—and it is to their honor—this metamorphosis can be durable, but it is rarely so with men.

Once transported to this stormy sky, women frankly accept their proper home, and the vicinity of the thunder does not disquiet them.

Passion is their element—they feel at home there. There are few women worthy of the name who are not ready to put in action all the words which passion has caused to bubble up from their lips.

If they speak of flight, they are ready for exile. If they talk of dying, they are ready for death. Men are far less consistent in their ideas.

It was not until late the next morning that Leland regretted his outbreak of sincerity; for, during the remainder of the night, still filled with his excitement, agitated and shaken by the passage of the god, sunk into a confused and feverish reverie, he was incapable of reflection.

But when, on awakening, he surveyed the situation calmly and by the plain light of day, and thought over the preceding evening and its events, he could not fail to recognize the fact that he had been cruelly duped by his own nervous system.

To love Clara Denton was perfectly proper, and he loved her still—for she was a person to be loved and desired; but to elevate that love or any other, as the master of his life, instead of its plaything, was one of those weaknesses interdicted by his system more than any other.

In fact, he felt he had spoken and acted like a schoolboy on a holiday. He had uttered words, made promises, and taken engagements on himself which no one demanded of him. No conduct could have been more ridiculous.

Happily nothing was lost. He had yet time to give his love that subordinate place which this sort of phantasy should occupy in the life of man.

He had been imprudent, but this very imprudence might finally prove of service to him. All that remained of this scene was a declaration—gracefully made, spontaneous, natural—which subjected Clara Denton to the double charm of a mystic idolatry which pleased her sex, and to that manly violence which could not displease her.

He had, therefore, nothing to regret, although he certainly would have preferred, taking the point of view from his principles, to have displayed less childish weakness.

But what course should he now adopt? Nothing could be more simple. He would go to Mrs. Denton, implore her forgiveness, throw himself again at her feet, promising eternal respect, and succeed.

Consequently, at about ten o'clock, Leland wrote the following note:

"DEAR MADAM: I cannot leave without bidding you adieu, and once more demanding your forgiveness.

"Will you permit me?

"W. LELAND."

This letter he was about sending, when he received one containing the following words:

"I shall be happy, sir, if you will call upon me to-day, about four o'clock.

"CLARA DENTON."

Upon which Leland threw his own note into the fire, as entirely superfluous.

No matter what interpretation he put upon this note, it was an evident sign that love had triumphed, and that virtue was defeated; for, after what had passed the previous evening between Clara Denton and himself, there was only one course for a virtuous woman to take, and that was never to see him again.

He soliloquized on the weakness of woman.

Wanted Another Dose.

An old man, tossing in seeming agony, lay on a bed. A preacher and a physician stood near.

"My poor man," said the preacher, "it is time that you were making your peace with the Great Ruler of eternity."

"No hope for me, then?"

"The doctor says not."

"I don't want to die."

"Are you afraid to go into the next world?"

"Oh, no, I never was afraid of anything."

"Then there is some one that you do not wish to leave?"

"No, not that. I haven't any kin folks, and no friends."

"Then why do you wish to stay here?"

"Oh, I ain't particular about staying here, but I haven't any money, and I always did hate the idea of dying without any money."

"That is surely a peculiar idea."

"Yes, but it is my way. Always thought that when I died I wanted money."

"You are not a philosopher," said the doctor, "for a man without money might just as well be dead as alive."

"That's so, Doc., I hadn't thought of that. Just give me another dose of your medicine, please."—Arkansaw Traveler.

PROHIBITION convention at Auburn to-day, Aug. 14, to put a ticket in the field.

ALL roads from here to Indianapolis have agreed to give half fare to everybody going to the democratic state convention August 27 and 28, to return Aug. 29.

AMONG the democrats recently nominated in Noble county, is C. R. Wiley, for auditor. We have known him for over twenty years, and feel sure no better choice could have been made.

To The State Convention.

There will be a special train to the democratic state convention, leaving Ft. Wayne over the Wabash Main line Wednesday, August 27, at 12 noon. Fare for round trip from Ft. Wayne to Indianapolis, is only $2.50. This will accommodate delegates and others who may wish to go from DeKalb county and other localities. We start on the south bound Jackson mail train that goes through Summit, at 9:08; Waterloo, at 9:20; Auburn, 9:33; New Era, 9:47, and reaches Ft. Wayne at 10:20. At noon we take the special over the old line of the Wabash, and reach Indianapolis at 4:30 in the afternoon. Returning, leave Indianapolis on Thursday evening after convention closes. But those who want to stay longer, can have one more day, their tickets being good on every train over the same lines on Friday, August 29. Any one can go whether a, delegate or not. We hope as many delegates as can, will go, and as many others as possible. It will give all a chance to see the city, and the great Hendricks monument, the soldiers' monument, and many other objects of interest, and at a rate never before secured.

Democratic Joint Representative Convention.

The delegates from the counties of DeKalb, Noble and Elkhart, composing the Joint Representative District, are hereby notified that a convention for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Joint Representative and the transaction of such other business as may arise, will be held at

at 2 o'clock p. m.

The representatation of each county in said convention shall be one delegate for every 200 votes cast for C. C. Matson for Governor in 1888.

DeKalb	16 votes
Elkhart	22 "
Noble	15 "

Necessary to a choice, 27 votes.

D. L. MILLER,
Chairman Elkhart County
AB. KELLEY,
Chairman DeKalb County
C. K. GREENE,
Chairman Noble County.

State Candidates.

In order that delegates to the state convention, of August 28, may know who are seeking nominations, we give the following list, which comprises all the names we have seen to date:

SECRETARY OF STATE.

James B Clark, of Monroe County; John Lee, of Montgomery county.

AUDITOR OF STATE.

George S. Green, of Posey county; J. O. Henderson, of Kokomo; James C. Lavelle, of Dayiess county.

CLERK SUPREME COURT.

Joseph T. Fanning, of Marion county; Daniel McDonald, of Marshall county; Andrew M. Sweeney, of Dubois county; George S. Pleasants, of Switzerland county; Nelson G. Hunter, of Wabash county.

TREASURER OF STATE

James R. Slack, of Huntington; Henry C. Berghoff, of Allen county; T. B. Byrnes, of Evansville; Albert Gall, of Marion county; P. H. McCormack, of Bartholomew county.

SUPERINTENDENT PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

B. F. Wissler, of Wayne county; James A. Marlow, of Sullivan county; Hervey D. Vories, of Johnson county; Elmer E. Griffith, of Clinton county.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

J. McCabe, of Warren county; A. G. Smith, of Jennings county.

THE old Mississippi is doing a good deal of damage by washing away banks and cutting new channels in the parts about New Orleans.

ENGLISH capital is now trying to buy up the valuable cement lands in the southern part of this state. Poor, starved out, free trade England seems to have plenty of money.

NORTH DAKOTA democrats have nominated an excellent state ticket. Not one lotteryite among them. They chose a lady as candidate for superintendant of public instruction.

BLAND, of Missouri, has been nominated again for congress, this being his tenth run. That is the way to get good work out of a congressman. He is the author of the old silver bill.

CHICAGO has fifty-one independent postmasters. This happens because the small towns recently added to the city, retain their old postmasters. And they will probably retain them for some years.

A LARGE body of land has been purchased in Mexico for a settlement for negroes residing now in the United States. The colony will be in a fertile valley about 100 miles from the City of Mexico.

KEMMLER, the first New York murderer, since the law for substituting electricity for hanging went into effect, was executed last week. Want of experience caused some bungling but they managed to kill him after two or three trials.

THE lobby at Washington that was so nearly cleaned out during Cleveland's administration, came out in force again as soon as Harrison came into power. It is stronger now, and more corrupt than ever. Big scandals are now cropping out.

DR. T. H. HARRISON, editor of the Michigan City Dispatch, died at the camp meeting at Battle Ground, Tuesday. He was one of the best known men in the state, had been a county superintendent many years, and was some years president of the state benevolent institutions.

THE American Naval squadron that has just returned home from a cruise on the coast of Europe, is having a great deal of trouble about desertions. The men who get leaves of absence don't come back. Over 200 were out last week and it is feared not more than half will return. Most of the deserters are foreigners.

MRS. HARRISON'S gift cottage at Cape May is recorded as "$1 consideration." Soon after this, another lot of town lot speculators laid out a suburb not far from Washington, called "Glen Echo." It now appears that several members of the Harrison family have been deeded lots, "consideration $1." The Harrisons appear to be thrifty.

A CHICAGO chemist has discovered a method by which the rare metal, aluminum, which is extracted from clay, can be produced at 15 cents a pound. Heretofore, it has cost $5 a pound. Here is a case in point, where prices are made cheaper, not as republicans say, by laying a tax on the article, but by a scientific discovery. There are hundreds of such cases.

MRS. STOREY, widow of the late Wilbur F. Storey, of the Chicago Times, has married Richard R. Deenlop, who was a reporter for the paper while her husband was yet alive. He has been more or less connected with the office ever since. Mrs. Storey is wealthy, having received a quarter of a million from the sale of the newspaper, and other property. It is possible she and her husband may now buy the paper back.

REPUBLICAN papers are telling there is no money in the state treasury, of which their officers have charge, and that the state debt is about eight millions. But these same state officials have reported for the census bureau, "Cash and funds on hand, $4,878,892.57," and that the state debt is $3,661,722.55. If this statement is correct, where is this money? Who is using it? Any of the papers about here can no doubt explain this discrepancy.

THE commissioner sent to the United States from Chili, tells us plainly, that the reason his people do not like to buy things of us is because we tax all their products when sent here. They would sooner trade with us, than with England, were it not for this. Our farmers and manufactures would like to sell them a vast amount more than we do. Then there would be no trouble about over production. There would be a demand for all we could produce and prices would be better.

STRIKE on the N. Y. Central road began Friday evening. The road was tied up from New York City to Buffalo. Trains were left at any little town where they happened to be and passengers could get no further. Many G. A. R. men from the west could not reach the big meeting at Boston. It is a disastrous strike, caused by the discharge of employes who were Knight's of Labor. The later reports show that work on the road is being resumed. The Knights could not carry out the strike without the help of the engineers, conductors and firemen, who failed to help.

THE duty on imported iron as found in the McKinley bill for round and flat bars, is 65 to 80 per cent. But it was shown in debate that the entire labor cost was only 45 per cent. of the cost of the iron. Now as protectionists never claimed that wages in this country were more than twice as high as in Europe, then one half of that 45 per cent., say 22 per cent., would cover the difference in labor cost in the two countries. Then, in order to protect labor here against the cheaper labor in Europe, we would need only a duty of 22 per cent. Then why do republicans want to make that duty 65 to 80 per cent.? It is to enable the iron founders to get rich sooner. But the people pay the increased price.

SOME one ought to tell the republican papers that their bosses are getting them into trouble over this state debt question, for it turns out that the republicans are to be charged with the most of it. Take the cost of the three new asylums voted by the legislature in 1883. That body appropriated $600,000 for the three institutions, but Gov. Porter and the men he appointed went on regardless of this and made contracts amounting to $1,400,000 thus exceeding the appropriation by $800,000. And the state debt ran almost up to its present size during Porter's term.

NEAR Shelbyville, Ind., a strange thing has happened. A portion of a farm on Flat Rock river, has burst out in jets of natural gas, and these caught fire from a brush heap and burned 200 feet high. The first burst was like the shock of an earthquake. A cemetery was opened and the dead exposed. Large rents in the river bottom let the water down leaving the stream below it nearly dry. Wide cracks are in the earth and at one place many tons of rock were thrown out. The flow of gas continues. It is supposed by some to be a sort of volcano. But the belief generally, is that it results from heavy charges of nitro-glycerine in gas wells at Waldron, about three miles away. It is well known that heavy charges of this substance, will effect rock five miles away. About twenty acres will be ruined for farming.

THE PRESS says we "have the gall to say that republicans demand to be placed in power in this state so they can raise the taxes." And we said the truth. That is what republican papers all over the country are demanding. They find fault because a democratic legislature did not insist on a higher tax rate, so the debt might be paid. If anyone doubts this, let him come to the COURIER office and look over our republican exchanges. We think a better plan would be to have the republican state officers stay at home a little closer, and when at home, attend to the duties of their offices. Nearly every one of these officials is engaged in some other business that must necessarily take a great part of his time. The auditor of state, Bruce Carr, the superintendent of public instruction, LaFollette, Attorney-general Michener, Secretary of State Griffin and perhaps others are actively engaged as officers and managers of a fifty-million building and loan company. Besides, they seem to be off at the seashore or at Washington or some distant place, most of the time. So it will be seen they let their offices run in the hands of cheap help, or with none at all. No business can be run cheaply or economically in this way. No wonder, as the Press says, the state finances are in bad shape. The natural remedy would be, to elect a set of democratic state officers, who would attend to their duties and not use the state funds to start up a private loan business.

The New Wabash Road.

(Detroit Free Press.)

John L. Davis, president, E. B. Gerber, a director, and James T. Johnston and J. J. VanAuken, engineers of the Auburn, Ligonier & Chicago Railroad were in the city yesterday with maps, plans, profile etc., for a new railroad from Auburn, Ind., to Hammond. This road would parallel the Baltimore & Ohio, being about six miles north of the latter. There are several good towns on the line, and the country through which it passes is the finest kind of farming land, which would contribute a great deal of local freight. It is not local freight, however, that the incorporators of the new scheme are after. They realize that the Wabash must have a short line to Chicago, and they are here for the purpose of offering this route. It has been surveyed, and it is found that by using this route to Chicago, the Wabash will be nine miles shorter than the Michigan Central.

The towns through which it runs are willing to assist the building of the road, and it is thought can be relied upon for at least $100,000. The people are anxious to secure the road and correspondence has been going on for some time between them and the officers of the Wabash with a view to induce the latter to abandon the proposed line from Montpelier and use the Auburn one instead. The maps, etc., brought in by the new promoters were placed before Engineer Ellis, of the Wabash, yesterday, and will be thoroughly examined by him. The officers of the road are full of enthusiasm, and if push counts for anything, they will certainly succeed.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

The first annual celebration of the institution of Hamilton lodge No. 228, K. of P., will be held on Pleasant island. Able speakers have been secured and a good time is expected. Good music will be rendered. W. L. Penfield will deliver an address at about 7:30, p. m. Everybody is most cordially invited to attend. No admission fee will be charged.

The camp meeting now in progress on Pleasant island is in every way a success, and will hold over another Sunday. Very able speakers have been secured by the efforts of Rev. A. V. Knepper, minister in charge. Rev. C. C. Albertson, of Goshen, addressed a very large congregation last Sunday and will give another lecture Wednesday evening, Aug. 13. Subject, "Big Lies." On Sunday, Aug 17, Rev. F. A. Reed, of Freeport, Ill., will speak. Come out and hear an eloquent sermon. It will pay you. Preaching at 10:30 a. m. An admission fee of 10c will be charged, to defray expenses.

AUBURN JUNCTION.

Mr. and Mrs J. Harris are the parents of a bran new baby boy.

Quite a number attended the show at Fort Wayne, and report a good time.

The B. & O. have been running big trains lately to carry passengers to the various great gatherings east and west.

The Junction sends and receives an extra mail on the fast train that goes east each evening. This is a great accommodation.

The people of this place went to Rome City Friday to spend the day, and on returning home in the evening, a few went to sleep and so, of course, went on through to St. Joe, where they boarded the next train for home.

William Hamilton Gibson's series of illustrated articles on natural history, now being published in Harper's Young People, is attracting very general attention as a novel feature in juvenile literature. The Commerical Advertiser (New York) says: "Mr. Gibson appeals not only to those who are wide-awake to the life of the woods and fields, but to those as well whose interest is simply in the printed page. He writes with an artist's, as well as with a scientist's, enjoyment of out-door life."

Get something ready for the fair and you can take it to both fairs if you choose. Get a premium list of both and look them over. You can then see what you can get ready to exhibit.

The secretary of our fair, Cal. Husselman, has moved his office into the room with Mr. Emanuel over Davis' hardware store where he will be pleased to see everybody that is interested in the great fair.

Wm. Wright, of Chicago, joined his wife at this place Saturday, and staid over Sunday with the editor's family. They returned to their home Monday after a brief visit with the family of David Seeley, in Garrett.

Much injury is done by the use of irritating, griping compounds taken as purgatives. In Ayer's Pills, the patient has a mild but effective cathartic, that can be confidently recommended alike for the most delicate patients as well as the most robust.

We were in error last week when we said the "Chapter" Masons got their supper at the Hollister House, as it should have been, at Salyer's restaurant, where they have been in the habit of going whenever they have met here to "do work," Of course the misstatement was unintentional.

Joseph Sewell of this place is engaged in the manufacture and sale of iron head posts for graves. He has a patent on them and finds abundant sale for them in the west and south. He formerly had them made at Cleveland, but be has now given the contract to the Eagle Iron Works at the Junction.

John and Henry Shipe of Fairfield were down here last Thursday. They report quite an expensive fire near there. The cider and planing mill of Levi Shaffer on the Noble county line was burned, on Wednesday afternoon. It was quite a loss, Mr. Shaffer losing about $1,500, and his father about $500. We believe it was not insured.

On account of the large number of advance orders received for Mrs. Custer's new book, "Following the Guidon," the publishers have been compelled to postpone its publication until August 22d. Theodore Roosevelt says of this work: "It is a book which is not only interesting, but which posesses real and lasting value as a faithful portrayal of a characteristically American phase of life which has now almost passed away."

The buildings on the fair grounds are progressing at an encouraging rate, but it should not be forgotten that a great deal of work is yet to be done. We believe however, that it will be finished and everything ready. Th road north from the Eckhart Carriage works, has been greatly improved, and will be capable of accommodating all the travel on the great days. One thing, should not be forgotten by the managers, and that is, to fix up the sidewalk along the road leading to the carriage factory. The bridge on Ninth street, will likely be done in time.

Rev. Henry Johnson preached at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening. There was a large audience in attendance, for he has a world of friends here. Besides the other churches, gave up their evening services so the pastors and people could all hear him again. It was a graceful token of the regard in which he is held by all. The sermon was one of his best, and highly enjoyed. At the close, he asked that the friends, as many as desired, meet him for a few words of greeting. This they did, and there was a few moments of handshaking, and a few friendly words about the old days. Mr. Johnson began his work in the ministry here and his success is gratifying to our people. He returned this week, to Lakeside.

H. B. McCord was under the weather the first of this week.

Kendallville Fair begins Sept. 29, and closes Oct. 3. Don't forget the date.

Mrs. David Carruth has a lady friend from Fostoria, visiting her at present.

Mrs. W. H. Rakestraw has a sister visiting her. She resides at Milford up the B. & O.

Coughs and colds keep off by taking Simmons Liver Regulator to regulate the system.

Mrs. Frank Hogue and Mrs. Geo. Shaab attended Barnum's show at Ft. Wayne last week.

C. S. Stoy, of Butler, was over here Monday. He is taking a layoff since his successor got the hang of things.

Mrs. S. B. Johnston and Mrs. Dr. Adams visited the latter's children in Smithfield last Thursday. They report a splendid time.

Miss Grace Crevison, sister of Mrs. Charlie Jones, is now with her relatives at Lagro, where she will remain till school begins here.

A part of the Auburn delegation returned from Lakeside Monday. They were A. Lewis and family, and Miss Samme Ralston. Mrs. Ralston and Alza are still there.

Elder Ward will preach at the Presbyterian church Sunday at a quarter to eleven. We hope to see a full house, for we feel sure our people will all be glad to hear him once more.

Cook Ford was here last week. He brings word that Mr. Lewis is not fully himself yet, though mainly over the direct results of his fall. The rest are in reasonably good health.

Editor Sheffer, of the Kendallville News was in town Saturday. He brings word that the democrats of noble county are in good shape, have a good county ticket and a flattering prospect of success.

Mrs. Robert Culbertson, who has been sick for some time, was brought up here this week, to remain a few days with the family of her son, W. B. Brown. She is better, but not well. A stroke of paralysis was the trouble.

Now that we are assured that the new bridge on Ninth street will be completed in time for the fair, it would not be a bad idea to have the grade leading to it widened a little. We have been expecting the Dispatch would attend to this.

W. O. Collins, agent for the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & Chicago railroad at Lucas, Ohio, was the guest of his brother, J. H. Collins over Sunday. He left Monday on the 5:30 train over the Lake Shore for Toledo on an extended visit with friends in Ohio.

Daniel Thomas, of Richland, was here last Friday. He is one of the few men who expect to have apples. He thinks his orchard will produce about 100 bushels. Few farmers in this county will be able to say as much, but his orchard is favorably situated.

W. H. McIntosh shaved off a part of his beard last week leaving only a mustache and goatee. His most intimate friends came near giving him the go by. Still he looked, at least as well as before, and said it was a very comfortable "dress" for hot weather.

We understand that S. R. Heberling has taken the agency for the Western Reversible Road Grader, which is perhaps the best and most common sense machine ever offered for sale in this part of the country. All who contemplate buying a road grader, should give this machine a trial before buying elsewhere. 31-33

The Press says we imagine boiler plates to be original matter. We challenge the Press to show that we ever hinted anything of the kind. He made this up out of whole cloth. What we did say was that the "Camp Fire Companion" which the Press said "lacked original matter," contained more original matter than the Press. We have both papers to show anyone who doubts.

G. F. Kerstetter came back from Lacota, Michigan, last week, and will probably remain here. He left the DeKalb folks—the Thomases, Taber, Cobler, and Hurni all well and prospering. Hurni and Augustus Thomas think of coming back here this fall to stay. He says that crops are very fair up there, though the dry summer has been against them, somewhat. Fruit is poor, however, and he thinks the potato crop will not be as good as usual. Isaac Cobler may come back on a visit this fall.

The Inter Ocean of Saturday has a picture and description of the strange, large, bugs that we have been finding this summer. They speak of them as we do, by the name of "electric light bugs." But they say, they are a true water bug that ordinarily live on the water, and live by sucking the juices of tadpoles, small fish, etc. It is believed that the bright electric lights allure them from their ordinary haunts, and as they are not very good flyers, they soon get tired, and fall to the ground. They are comparatively harmless, although their bite would cause some pain.

New Dressmaking Establishment.

Miss Maud Sheets, well and favorably known to our people will open a dressmaking establishment in the new Sheets block south of the public square. She will occupy the room at the northeast corner, on the second floor, where all are invited to call and see her work. She has had an experience of three years in business in Garrett and has been very successful. She takes especial pride in giving perfect fits, as all her former patrons can testify. Remember the place

State fair at Indianapolis begins Sept. 22.

The new M. E. church progresses slowly.

Miss Maud Thorley, of Findlay, Ohio, is visiting Mabel Hartman.

Delegates and others should notice the cheap rates to Indianapolis Aug. 27.

Mrs. Annice Leas and son John returned last week from their visit at Ann Arbor.

The amount of wood hauled through town going to the Groscop brick yards was 150 cords.

Mell. Johnston, Art. Steele and Jim. Eldridge have returned from a week's stay at Rome City.

Simmons Liver Regulator is the foe of malaria as it throws off the bile and prevents its accumlating.

Misses Mollie and Mattie Viberg, of Ft. Wayne, were the guests of Miss Mollie Murphy and Mrs. Geo. Schaab.

Don't forget the date of the DeKalb Co., Fair Sept. 8 to 12. Get something ready and go. Good races. Everything new.

The families of Messrs. Lamport, A. B. Richards, Sylvester Zimmerman, and A. J. Bell took a day off for a picnic at Hamilton, yesterday.

G. H. Yesbera and wife go to Manton, Mich., to-day for a week's visit with Mr. and Mrs. McMichael. We wish both families a pleasant visit.

The annual picnic of the Richland township Sunday schools, will be held two miles west of the poor farm, on Saturday, August 23d.

Church social Saturday evening, given by the ladies of the Catholic church, next door south of Davis' hardware. All are cordially invited to assist.

Mrs. Ehlers went through on the B. & O., Monday, on her way from Chicago to West Virginia, where she goes to resume her Sunday school work of last year.

Ex-Sheriff John C. St. Clair, was in town this week. He gets about much better than he has for some time, but of course will be never be sound again as before.

Milo Thomas, of Corunna, indulged in the luxury of a runaway last week. We did not learn how serious it was, but the last we heard of him he was still selling hardware.

Rev. Dwight Spencer, D. D., of Indianapolis, who was to have preached at the Baptist church on last Sunday, but was unexpectedly delayed, will preach at that church next Sunday, August. 17, morning and evening.

G. H. Yesbera's many customers and patrons generally, will take note of his absence on a visit in Michigan for about a week, when he will be again at his post ready to give them the best the market affords in the way of good suits of latest styles.

A letter from C. F. Roberts at Antwerp, says the oil in their oil well, has risen to within 260 feet of the top of the well, and is still rising. A company has been formed with a capital stock of $25,000, and the contract has been let for sinking a new well. The town is beginning to boom.

Both fairs are being thoroghly advertised. If the weather should prove pleasant on both dates, there is no doubt but both will be successful. If all the DeKalb county people will patronize our home fairs, instead of going to those outside, we shall see our fairs succeed. Heretofore, our people have been the main support of several other fairs.

Fifty-nine carloads of stone would seem like a big amount, but Mr. Wheelock, the bridge contractor says this is the amount he has used so far on the various bridges he is building, and that he will need several carloads more. It has been a busy season with him. He informs us that the new bridge over Ninth street will be done in time for the fair.

A. B. Richards came near losing his horse Monday evening, by its straying away. When he unhitches her she always walks direct to the stable and goes in. That evening, however, she went on past the barn and while he was busy at something else she disappeared. Not finding her in her usual place in the barn, he started out on a hunt. He got word from her at the Junction, she having been seen down that way. Next morning he renewed the search and found her at Mart Sheets'. The latter had found the horse straying along with harness and fly net on and had taken it up. Mr. Richards breathed freer when the horse was safe back in the stable.

The Press dodges our argument, as to improved machinery assisting to make articles cheaper. The fact remains, that the Press never made a bid for the premium list till it got its improved machinery. The editor is mistaken or willfully misrepresents when he says the COURIER lost its bid that year. The COURIER made no bid. Same as to this year's work. The COURIER did not "sublet" the job—the man who did most of the work is not "inexperienced" but is probably the fastest and most accurate type setter in this part of the country. Neither he nor the COURIER "lost money" on the work. The Press puts its nose into private business of which it knows nothing. It cares only to show its spleen. But all this talk has nothing to do with our statement that improvements in machinery, improved methods of doing business, as well as discoveries in science and in the arts, are what make manufactured articles cheaper. The duty or tariff makes them dearer. The Press is challenged to disprove this plain statement.

The first loads of brick for the new church were hauled yesterday.

The latest reports from Washington put Auburn's population at 2,550.

Ryan is improving, and we all feel glad at his good prospects for recovery.

Mrs. T. J. Cuppy, of South Whitley, was up here last week visiting her people.

Ernest Sheets and wife have returned from their visit. They report a good time.

New cement crossings at Dr. Swarts' corner and several other new ones are to be made.

J. W. Baxter is the candidate on the prohibition ticket for judge of the supreme court.

The new rooms east of the postoffice are rising higher every day. They are now above the second floor.

Miss Maggie Snyder, of St. John, and her friend, Miss Dyke Beals, of Ft. Wayne, were in town Tuesday.

James E. Rose has returned from St. Louis, Mich., where he has been taking treatment for rheumatism, and seems to be improved in health.

W. S. Sewell, of Butler, was here this week. He is in the fire and life insurance business and will spend a part of his time in the country.

The ladies of the Catholic church will give a social in the room occupied by W. J. Bowman's shoe store, Saturday evening, August 15. Supper from 5 to 7. Mite 15 cents. All come!

White's Wheel Works, at Ft. Wayne, burned last Friday evening, about dark. It was a total loss. Mr. White did not own it, having recently sold it to a big foreign company for $150,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Truit are residents of Auburn once more. They came up Tuesday, and are located in G. A. Porter's house at the north end. Mrs. Truit's son, Mr. Squires, remains on the farm.

Mrs. C. P. Urie came back through here this week, after an extended visit with T. J. Cuppy's family at South Whitley. And we do expect that Com, is at this date standing in a door at Burr Oak, with his face turned southward.

Mrs. Harley Baker, wishes to announce to her former patrons, that she will resume the dressmaking business, at her home on West Ninth street, and asks them to call and see her, when they need work in that line. 33 35.

Schaab & Murphy have rearranged the tables and counters in their clothing store, added some new tables, and beautified the store generally. A neat store, good bargains, and a square deal all around, are elements of success.

M. E. Reynolds, the new trustee, of Richland, was here Tuesday, in company with his predecessor, Mr. Hewitt. He has just taken the office, and started in for his four years trip. Mell is a pretty good fellow, if he is a republican, and will, no doubt make a good officer.

We received a report of the contributions to the sufferers by the Johnstown flood, showing what towns sent it. Of towns near here we find Auburn sent $231.50; Albion, $5; Avilla $36; Elkhart, $500.53; Ft. Wayne, $2,214.20; Garrett, $72.65; Ligonier, $116; Waterloo, $17; South Bend, $1,323.39; Warsaw, $171.25. In all, Indiana gave nearly $30,000. Money was received from all over the United States, as well as from foreign countries. The most distant, were Australia, Turkey and Persia. The total amount received and used was $4,116,801.48. The loss of life as now reported is 2,142; 99 whole families were lost. It was a most appalling disaster.

In speaking last week, of the second operation on Mr. Ryan, we were led into error. It was performed by Drs. Greenewalt, of Ft. Wayne, and Swarts and Matheny, of this place. The two last named had dressed the wound at first, and had sewed up the injured intestine. At the second operation, this intestine was found in proper condition, and the stitches were not opened, nor was the intestine in any way interfered with. The opening into the abdomen was enlarged, so as to enable them to cleanse the cavity more perfectly. All was done at the first operation, that could be done, as Ryan's condition was very critical. It was thought he could live but a short time, and once, he had sunk away that many thought him dead. He rallied, but that night had a fit of vomiting, that probably caused blood to flow in the wound, and to fill the cavity again, making the second operation all the more necessary, as such matter must be removed. After this clotted blood was taken out, drainage tubes were put in and he has steadily improved under the sole care of the two physicians named. This explanation is made in justice to our home physicians, as the way our informant stated it last week, would have done them an injustice.

Fort Wayne Fair.

The Annual fair and trotting meeting of the Northern Indiana Fair Association will take place at Ft. Wayne, in September, beginning the 16th and ending the 19th. We are told they will make an extra effort this year to have a good fair. For information, address,

W. W. Rockhill, secy.

The Camp Fire Companion and the COURIER have a clubbing arrangement. The Companion is a monthly at 75 cents a year, and at club rates both papers for $1.80. Samples of each can be seen here.

James Hoffman will go to Lafayette shortly, as he has accepted a position as instructor in the mechanical department of Purdue. Again the DeKalb boy takes a front seat. He is worth ofy the best.

We see by the Albion papers that James Hoffman was married last Saturday, at that place to Miss Blanch Peterson. Both are well known and popular here, and though Mr. H. was too bashful to mention the matter to us, we send our best wishes.

Having purchased a threshing engine, huller and separator, I am prepared to do all kinds of threshing in first-class style, and at reasonable rates. All those who have threshing to be done, will find it to their interest to see me before engaging other machines. Hoping to be favored with a share of the public patronage, I am

Yours for solid business

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician will be in Auburn at the Hollister House, the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his service in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. tf

THE invention of smokeless powder has been followed by a counter-invention in the shape of a "smoke rocket," to be used to screen the advance of a body of troops. It has been tried with success.

ACCORDING to recent figures the people of this country are longer lived than those of Europe. In this country 18 persons out of every 1,000 die each year; in England the average is 20 and in Germany 26.

PEOPLE in the country who are annoyed by flies should remember that clusters of the fragrant clover which grows abundantly by nearly every roaside, if hung in the room and left to dry and shed its faint fragrant perfume through the air, will drive away more flies than sticky saucers of molasses and other fly traps and fly-papers can ever collect.

PROF. SAMUEL CUSHMAN, apiarist of the Rhode Island Agricultural Experiment Station, maintains, as the result of personal observation, that bees do no damage to growing or fair fruit. "The juice of fruit is, in fact, injurious to them, and they do not attack sound fruit, but only bruised fruit, or that which has been previously injured by other insects."

THE latest contributor to the United States conscience fund, who sends in his check for $1,000, is the same man who sent in a check to the same fund for $1,500 several months ago. This looks as if his conscience was taking possession of him only gradually.

ON his way back to France, Eyraud, the French strangler, asked for a knife to cut his finger nails. The officers in charge feared that he contemplated suicide and refused to give him one, whereupon he said: "If I wished to commit suicide I could readily force my hands between my ribs and make away with myself." He was soon afterwards manacled to prevent him from doing this.

THE Emperor of China sleeps on a bed of carved wood magnificently inlaid with gold and ivory. It is said concerning the Chinese court that the strictest observance of etiquette extends even to the parents of the monarch, who, on visiting their son, dare not omit to bend the knee, while the younger brother of his celestial majesty is subject to observances no less rigid.

REV. R. H. NASSAU, formerly of Philadelphia, has been living in the Gaboon and Corisco mission on the west coast of Africa, and for several years has been on the hunt for gorilla brains for Dr. Morton, of Philadelphia, who wants them for scientific purposes. He writes home of the fruitlessness of his long search. It seems to be the superabundance of gorilla brains which makes it difficult to procure them, as the gorilla is too wise for the average hunter.

A CASE of special interest to photographers has been decided at St. Paul, Minn., by the Supreme Court. A photographer named Rugg sold a picture of Mrs. Ida Moore, of Minneapolis, which was put on exhibition in improper places, much to her discredit, and she brought suit for damages. The Supreme Court holds that it is a case in which there is ground for the recovery of damages; that the photographer has no right to dispose of pictures which are the sole property of the sitter.

BETSY ARNOLD, a sister of Benedict Arnold, lived for years and years after her brother's disgrace in Norwich on public charity. When she was ninety years old, she was taken to the almshouse by old Sheriff E. G. Thomas. Betsy made a great how-to-do about it. and was so grieved that she lived only a few months. She was a strong old woman, and had much of her brother's temper.

A FARMER, not less than sixty-five, entered the office of one of our cotton mills the other day and asked the general agent for a job at bookkeeping, says the Lewiston Journal. He said he'd farmed it from a boy up and that he had decided to try something easier the rest of his days. He said, too, that he had not been educated in keeping books, but he was confident he could do it. The agent who tells of the incident says he heard the old gentleman's story and kindly told him that he saw no vacancy then, but that he would remember him.

THEY use a clothes wringer for a letter press in one of the largest of the Wall street telegraph offices in New York. The messages to be copied are treated as usual until the time for the putting of them into the press; then instead of the ordinary screw press, which it takes time and muscle to use, the message and damp tissue copy paper are simply run through a clothes wringer. The rubber rollers answer every purpose of a press, and the operation is almost instantaneous and much easier than the usual way. The machine is placed at a basement window and there is always a little throng on the sidewalk watching the boys wring out messages.

AN interesting decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court of West Virginia. Four men were fined by the Circuit Court for betting on an election after it was over. An appeal was taken on the ground that the meaning of the law against betting on electiuos was ment to preserve the purity of the ballot and, as a bet made after election could not affect a vote, it was, therefore, not an offense. Both courts held that the law rested on the same ground as that upon other betting or gaming. The parties were fined $50 each and each forfeited the amount wagered by him beside paying the costs.

AN amusing scene happened in the Sullivan County, New York Court House the other day. The wife of one of the parties to a suit was on the witness stand and intrusted her baby to the care of another woman, who was tending it below. The child became restless after awhile and announced its desire to see its mother in notes of unmistakable pathos, which might be traced to hunger. After trying in vain to quiet the child the woman came up the stairs and into the court, the baby all the time yelling at the top of its lungs. Judge Thornton jumped up and cried: "Take that child out of court." The woman addressed heeded not the command, but continued to advance, and holding the youngster out to its mother over the head of a prominent lawyer, exclaimed, with fire flashing from her eye: "Court or no court, this child has got to be attended to."

THE judicial error of which a man named Borras, now liberated, was the victim in France, has brought to the front an old custom of the courts of Venice. There, when a prisoner is about to be condemned to death, a tall, ghostly looking individual, dressed in a long black gown, walks majestically to the center of the court-room, bows solemnly to the judges, and in a cavernous voice, pronounces the following not overstartling words: "Remember the baker!" Then he bows again and stalks away. Just 300 years ago a baker was executed in Venice for a crime of which he was not guilty. When his innocence was fully established the judges who condemned him gave a sum of money to the city, the interest of which was to be devoted to the setting up and perpetual burning of a lamp, known as the "lamp of expiation," in the Palace of the Doges. It is still burning there.

THE Bank of England's doors are now so finely balanced that the clerk, by pressing a knob under his desk, can close the outer doors instantly, and they cannot be opened again except by special process. This is done to prevent the daring and ingenious unemployed of the great metropolis from robbing this famous institution. The bullion departments of this and other great English banking establishments are nightly submerged in several feet of water by the action of the machinery. In some of the London banks the bullion departments are connected with the manager's sleeping-rooms and an entrance cannot be effected without setting off an alarm near that person's head. If a dishonest official, during either day or night, should take even as much as one from a pile of a thousand sovereigns the whole pile would sink and a pool of water take its place, besides letting every person in the establishment know of the theft.

How Uncle Jerry Went Back on the Crowd.

Every boy of us in the village knew Uncle Jerry Crawford. He was a dried-up old man, and never seemed to get any older, although always complaining. The form of salutation was invariably this:

"Hello! Uncle Jerry!"

"Yass, yass."

"How you feeling?"

"Wretched, wretched, thank ye."

I've heard that at least one thousand times, and never knew a deviation but once. A drummer who used to come up occasionally from St. Louis got on to it, and one day when a dozen of us sat on the steps of the drug store Uncle Jerry was seen coming up the street.

"Isn't that old Crawford?" asked the drummer, as he shaded his eyes with his hand.

"Yes."

"He's the man who always replies that he's pretty well, praise God?"

"Oh, no. He is the man who always replies that he's wretched, wretched, thank ye."

"I may be mistaken, but I don't think so."

"Of course you are."

"Well, I hate to give in. I'll bet $20 that when he comes up and you ask him how he is he'll reply as I said."

There were seven of us there, and all we could raise was $16. We handed that out fast enough, however, and it had been covered when Uncle Jerry came along. We were on the grin as the drummer called out:

"Hello! Uncle Jerry!"

"Yass, yass."

"How you feeling?"

"Pretty well, praise God!" replied Uncle Jerry, as he passed on.

It was about two minutes before we could get breath, and then the drummer had gone with the stakes. An hour later I asked Uncle Jerry what he meant by such conduct, and he replied:

"Took me all day to learn it, and the feller gin me two big dollars."—New York Sun.

CAMPAIGN ISSUES.

ABLE SPEECH OF JUDGE WILSON, AT JERSEYVILLE, ILL.

The Fallacies of the Republican Dogmas Exposed with Great Force and Clearness—How the Farmer Is Being Robbed Under the Plausible Plea of Protection.

Judge E. S. Wilson, Democratic candidate for State Treasurer of Illinois, delivered the following telling speech at a recent Democratic rally in Jerseyville:

The campaign in Illinois cannot be bounded by State lines, nor confined to State issues. The nomination of Gov. John M. Palmer for United States Senator on June 4, gave to this campaign a national cast that will make it memorable in the political history of the country. The Democratic party, by its action, demands that the office of United States Senator shall be a representative office, emanating from the people, and that such official shall be required to give an account to the people of his official actions. Such being the case it is incumbent upon every man who talks from the stump to discuss national issues. In fact, these are of more importance at the present time than any mere State issue. The principal national question involved at this time is one of taxation; and we have come to a time when every citizen must determine for himself whether he desires to bear a just share of the burdens of this Government, or whether he desires to tax himself for the benefit of some other man. The Democratic party does not claim that the National Government can be carried on without money. Nor does it claim that money can be raised without taxation in some form. It is useless to discuss the propriety of a direct tax, as our general Government has never raised its revenues in that way, but always, without exception, has done so by indirect taxation, by tariff laws. And when this tariff duty is laid for the purpose of obtaining the necessary money to carry on the Government there can be no objection to this mode of taxation. But the first law ever passed by the Congress of the United States for the purpose of raising revenues was based upon the false pretense of "protecting infant industries." That was the 4th day of July, 1789, and, although our industries were then in their infancy, an average tax of 8 per cent. was considered sufficient to fully protect them. How this protection has grown, and manufacturers have waxed strong and wealthy, until now the average is 41 per cent. or more, you all know! And it is even now proposed that this already extreme protection shall be increased by the McKinley bill until the average shall be 55 per cent.

TWO KINDS OF TARIFF.

The distinction between a tariff for revenue and one for protection is that in the former revenue is the essence and protection is the incident, while in the latter protection is the essence and revenue the incident. A revenue tariff is constructed for the purpose of securing the largest revenue with the least cost to the people, while a protective tariff works to check or prevent importation in order to favor the home producer. The Republican party in 1888 laid down the proposition broadly and plainly that it favored such revision of the tariff laws as would tend to check importation of such articles as are manufactured by our people. It is in carrying out this policy and platform that the McKinley bill has been enabled by increasing the duties upon the importation of such articles as are manufactured at home to place the agricultural people, who are not thus protected, at the mercy of a few favored protected industries. And the arguments advanced by the protection Republicans to show the necessity of this are many, varied, and inconsistent. In the platform of 1888 they state, as one of the reasons for this course, that by protecting American industries they give employment to American laborers. This labor question is treated by them in two ways. In talking to the people they say protection makes the wages of the laborer higher, and therefore American laborers should be in favor of protection. But as lobbyists before Congress they say labor is high, and therefore the American manufacturer should be protected. They never make the latter argument before the people. But, like a celebrated statesman from a protected State, with his Credit Mobilier stock, they place this argument where it will do the most good.

By this system of taxation you living in an agricultural State are compelled to pay not only the price at which you could buy the manufactured article, but the enhanced price caused by the amount of protection that is placed upon the goods. As, for instance, if a bushel of wheat would buy a yard of cloth, the wheat being worth $1 and the cloth worth $1, and the United States Government placed upon that yard of cloth an import duty of 50 cents, then it would require one bushel and a half of wheat to buy this yard of cloth, and in that instance the Government would get the revenue. But if the American manufacturer would sell the cloth for $1.45, then he would get his just profit for his manufacture and the 45 cents of protection.

HOW PROTECTION WORKS.

For thirty years we have been burdened with a tariff of this nature. During that time we have seen millionaires grow on protected industries; we have seen the laboring man, whom they claim protection benefits, grow poorer, and we have seen a great body of agriculturists of the country sink from a state of affluence to one of penury and almost of want. In 1850 the agriculturists of America owned more than 70 per cent. of the wealth of the entire country. To-day they own less than 25 per cent. And during that time most all the new States west of the Mississippi River have been settled. The question is staring the farmer in the face to-day, What will we do when we cannot surrender our mortgaged farms, go further west, and make a new home on Government land? The farmer is the taxpayer of the country, and in this country he is the payer of the national debt. He has paid already two-thirds of the debt with which we were burdened at the conclusion of the war. But with the depreciation in the value of farm products it will require more corn, wheat, and oats to pay the remaining third than it required to pay the two-thirds already paid, and while he has lifted a debt of that amount off the shoulders of the body politic, carrying an interest of 4 per cent, he has placed upon his own shoulders a debt in the shape of a farm mortgage larger than that lifted from the people at large and bearing an interest of 7 or 8 per cent.

And the farmers of Illinois to-day owe a mortgage indebtedness of over $867,000,000, bearing an annual interest of $25,900,000. And the other States of the great Northwest are equally as heavily mortgaged. While you are thus indebted, everything you raise is sold where you sell the cheapest, and everything you buy is bought in the dearest market. Although you raised in 1889 2,112,892,000 bushels of corn, valued at $579,188,200, there were 125,192,000 more bushels than you raised in 1888, but you sold the same for $79,542,760 less money than that for which you sold the crop of 1889. In this year you raised 490,560,000 bushels of wheat, valued at $349,491,707. This was greater than the crop of 1888 by 74,693,000 bushels, and was sold for less money by $42,756,223. You raised this year in oats 751,575,000 bushels, valued at $171,784,008, which was greater than the crop of 1888 by 49,780,000 bushels, and was sold for less by $23,643,233. These figures are taken from the crop reports of J. R. Dodge, statistician of the Department of Agriculture. This loss falls particularly heavy upon the farmers of Illinois, because they are the largest producers of the cereals, and by these depreciations in value of products the farmers of this State lost in 1889 $27,027,543. Your own State Board of Agriculture, by its reports, shows that you sold your corn crop in 1889 for $10,000,000 less money than it cost you to produce the same.

SOME FURTHER COMPARISONS.

In 1890 the farmers of this country had 550,543 more horses than in 1889, and your horses were worth $36,078,265 less than the horses of the preceding year. They had 654,258 milch cows in excess of the year 1880, and they were worth $13,074,243 less money. They had 1,816,607 more cattle than they had in 1879, and they were worth less by $36,611,675. They had 1,301,188 more hogs than in 1889, and they were worth $47,888,857 less money than in the preceding year. So that in horses, milch cows and other cattle, and hogs, the farmers of America, in increasing the number and improving the grade of stock, because the farmers of America are constantly improving the grade of their stock, have lost $134,357,040. These figures are also taken from the report of Statistician Dodge of the Department of Agriculture. In addition to this loss, you have paid in interest on mortgage indebtedness $25,690,000.

Manufacturers give no data of their manufactures, at least where the same can be avoided. But by scrutinizing the last census report we know that wealth is poured into their protected laps. But the State of Massachusetts has kept some statistics for the year 1888. This is the only manufacturing State that keeps these statistics or makes these statistics public. And this publication is very interesting reading to a farmer. We find from this statement that 1,140 establishments, employing a capital of $269,000,000, make a profit of $80,946,980, which is a profit of more than 30 per cent. per annum upon their investment. The Hamilton Woolen Mills of that State, with a capital of $1,000,000, declared dividends amounting to 43 per cent. in one year. The Lancaster Manufacturing Company made 67⅛ per cent. The Lowell mills in three years paid back to its stockholders all the money they had put into it ($900,000), and $350,000 more, in dividends, amounting in that time to 140 per cent. These are protected industries, and these are the profits made by protected industries. And it is industries of this kind, and men of this wealth, that you are asked to tax yourselves to protect. Under these circumstances, is it strange that your farms are covered with mortgages, and that these mortgages are held by Eastern men who hold stock in these protected industries, as well as mortgages upon your farms? That your children should refuse to remain upon the farm? That they take employment away from the homestead? That agriculture is being discarded by all the brightest minds that grow upon the farm? That our cities are being flooded with farmers' boys? That our sons are taking employment in the workshops, on the railroads, and as porters in the mercantile houses in the cities? Is it strange that you should work eighteen hours a day for a bare subsistence? That a wealthy lumberman can take a trip to Europe? That an iron-man can gather great wealth in a few years and found magnificent libraries? Is all this strange? Can you hope that your children shall inherit the old homestead which you received from your father if the burdens of agriculture are yet made more heavy and the life of the agriculturist continues to grow harder?

IT IS EASILY SOLVED.

The solution is easy. In our country revolution and bloodshed are not necessary to correct the evils of legislation. It can be done through the ballot-box. Vote for the men who will advocate measures for your relief. It would be supposed that any one representing an agricultural constituency in Illinois would vote for those measures that would tend to bring relief to his people. And yet we have seen Republican members of Congress from Illinois, Kansas and other States voting for the McKinley bill and for other measures, knowing that the same were in strict antagonism to the interests of the people they represent. And a member of Congress from our own State, Mr. Payson, voted against the silver bill, although he admitted that 99 per cent. of his constituents were in favor of the bill. There can be no hope for the farmers of Illinois while we are represented in Congress by men who indorse the Republican platform of 1888 and are ready to bow the knee of suppliance to the Speaker of the House of Representatives whenever he sees fit to crack the party lash over their heads.

These immense dividends declared by the protected manufacturing establishments all represent so much toil, so much energy on the part of the laboring men who use the products of these establishments as the necessaries of life. And why are you asked to tax yourself to protect these men who have grown rich upon your toil? One claim is to keep up the price of labor; and yet these same manufacturers in Massachusetts are shown to have made $403 out of each laborer whom they employed. That is, while each employe earned the sum of $896 he received but $403, the employer keeping the $493. It is that you should protect these industries to prevent Europe from sending the work of her pauper labor to come in competition with the labor of Americans. And yet you are not protected from the pauper laborer himself. A Republican Congress passed a homstead law, which authorizes the pauper of Europe to come to America and settle upon our Western lands merely upon a declaration of his intention to become a citizen. Thousands of foreigners are living upon land in the Western States that should be a part of the heritage of your children and mine. And these same protected manufacturers import the pauper laborers of Europe and hire them at prices that an American will not work for, and drive American workmen out of the shops. It is said that by protecting her industries they furnish a home market for the product of the farms. If, after thirty years of protection, the home market is such that the farmers of Illinois lose $27,000,000 upon our corn crop in one year, and, after raising a corn crop the most bountiful that nature ever vouchsafed to us, lose $10,000,000 more, it seems that they had better try some other mode of procuring a home market. But does it make a home market? These men, if they were not engaged in these protected industries, would be engaged in some other industry, and would eat as much as they eat at the present time.

THE "BALANCE OF TRADE" HUMBUG.

It is said, also, that by using our own manufactures we "preserve a balance of trade," and that we are thus enabled to export more than we import. The idea of these gentlemen is that where our exports are $10,000,000 and our imports $15,000,000, then the balance of trade is against us and we are losing money. There never has been a time in the history of our Government where the imports are not shown to be much larger than the exports. I ship 20,000 bushels of wheat to Europe. I sell it for $30,000. With that I buy the products of Europe and import them to this country on an invoice of $30,000. There is said to be a balance of trade against us because the importation is larger than the export. But I have taken 20,000 bushels of wheat out of the country and bring $30,000 back, and I think I am $10,000 richer by the trade. To satisfy these political economists it would be necessary to make all exports larger than all imports. If I were to take 20,000 bushels of wheat to the center of the ocean and dump it and come back with an empty vessel, they would say that America is growing richer because our exports are greater than our imports.

I notice that Mr. Blaine has concluded that we should have reciprocity with the nations upon the American continent. This is free trade thus far. And also, that he has said that the McKinley bill is an outrage. Republican papers are discrediting Mr. Blaine, because he has gone back on the principles of his party. That is the first time I ever heard that the Republican party had any principle. And there is no principle in taxing me for the benefit of a third party. If an individual takes my money and appropriates it to his own use, or gives it even to a third party, it is robbery. But when the United States does this it is "protection."

Tariff laws are subject to constant changes. But in the last thirty years there has not been a change in the tax laws of this country that has not been in favor of rich and against the poor. And, gentlemen, as farmers you are poorer because the taxes were removed from the wealthy. The tax was removed from the bank check; articles of luxury were admitted free of duty; the things that the wealthy desire, as articles of virtu, came in with a nominal payment of tax or entirely free of all duty, while the tax has been increased upon everything that you are compelled to buy as a necessity, and by the McKinley bill it is proposed to still further increase the taxes upon this species of importation. National taxation is in a measure only worse than State taxation. And the farmers of Illinois, with less than 25 per cent. of the wealth of the State, are paying to-day, and have for years paid, 80 per cent. of the taxes of the State.

SOME TAXATION FIGURES.

There is not a single bit of land owned by you nor a chattel that is not found by the assessor and taxed, while the wealthy corporations of the State go free. The Pullman Palace Car Company, with a capital stock of $24,870,000, paid a tax upon $386,802, being less than 1½ per cent. But that stock is worth 150%. It is not upon the market and can not be bought. The Union Stock Yards of Chicago, upon a capital stock of $4,400,000, is assessed $42,368. This property embraces 446 acres of land and 141 miles of railroad within the limits of the city of Chicago, and is estimated to be of the value of $40,000,000, upon which is paid a tax of less than one-tenth of 1 per cent. These are given because they are shining examples of the manner in which property belonging to the wealthy is assessed in our State. There can be no fault found with the managers of these corporations who procure these assessments. The fault can be found only with the legislation of the public officials, elected by your votes, which renders such assessments possible.

I believe that if this Government, State and national, were placed in the hands of the Democratic party such outrages would not be perpetrated on a long-suffering people. I believe that if you, as voters, would dismiss your prejudices and allow the welfare of yourself and your family to outweigh the prejudices which environ you, you would no longer vote to continue in power a party that has enacted such laws and has made such assessments possible. You will have an opportunity in November by your ballots to show whether you are thinking, sentient citizens, or whether you are the creatures of some party leader; whether you will vote as free men or whether you will bow down to the shibboleth of a party campaign.

WANTS LOWER TAXES.

MR. PLUMB HAS HAD ENOUGH OF HIGH PROTECTION.

He Makes a Strong Argument in Opposition to the Pending Bill, Inveighing Against the Exorbitant Demands of the Protected Manufacturers.

Senator Plumb stirred up the Senate with a lively speech against the exorbitant demands of the high protectionists. The tariff debate had been dragging along for some time, Mr. McPherson offering numerous amendments to the schedule under consideration, providing for reduction of duties, all of were voted down by a strict party vote.

Mr. McPherson moved to reduce the duty on common brown earthenware from 25 to 20 per cent. ad valorem. Rejected—yeas, 21; nays, 30. Mr. Paddock voted with the Democrats; Mr. Plumb did not vote.

The next question was on paragraph 100, relating to china, porcelain, and crockery ware—the Finance Committtee recommending a reduction of the rates in the House bill from 66 to 55 per cent. on decorated articles, and from 55 to 50 per cent. on plain white and undecorated ware. Two members of the Finance Committee, Messrs. Sherman and Hiscock, expressed their opposition to the Senate amendment. Mr. Allison supported them.

Mr. Vest moved to make the rates 45 and 40 per cent., respectively. Then Mr. Plumb took a prominent and remarkable part in the discussion, inveighing against the exorbitant demands of the high protectionists. He produced a letter from a merchant doing business in St. Joseph, Mo., and Atchison, Kan., stating that on an invoice of crockery he had paid that day a customs duty of $16.40; that under the pending bill the duty on the same invoice would be $31.32, and under the McKinley bill $50.12. The whole tendency of civilization, Mr. Plumb said, was toward the reduction of prices of all products of human labor. To claim that the tariff has been the sole or the main factor in the reduction of the prices of manufactured goods was to ignore all the forces of civilization. The American people were entitled to have cheap goods if competition could bring that about. When, he asked, was the time coming when the people of the United States would get some benefit from the establishment of home industries? But just as fast as the point was arrived at when lower prices might be expected the manufacturers came to Congress and said that they wanted more duties, whereby that downward progress of prices might be arrested. The people of the United States ought to have their "inning" some time, and he thought that that time had come.

He had no idea that what he might say was going to affect the vote of the Senate. He could conceive and he could see that the cohorts of protection were so organized that the bill was to go through substantially as it came from the Finance Committee. The manufacturers had had from Congress precisely what they asked, and yet, so far from their being satisfied, another bill for their benefit was to be put through without debate, if that could be brought about, on the theory that the country was hungering and thirsting for more tariff legislation. He believed in distributing the duties that were necessary for the purpose of raising revenue for the support of the Government in such a way as to equalize the conditions existing between the manufacturers of this country and those abroad. If he were in doubt, he would resolve that doubt in favor of the American manufacturers. But if he knew what the exact conditions were, he would put the home and the foreign manufacturer on the same footing precisely. He should be recreant to his duty if he gave his support to such a proposition as the chinaware schedule.

The Senate, he continued, owed some duty to the American people as well as to the manufacturers. There was a point where political sympathies ended and where business interests began. The Democratic party had its full share of responsibility for the iniquities of the present tariff law and of that which was now proposed. The Democrats in the House had had the opportunity of correcting the errors and wickedness of the McKinley bill, but they had sought to evade the responsibility of their votes, when by joining with the Republicans who were opposed to that bill they might have eliminated many of its errors. He could see the game of battledore and shuttlecock between free trade and protection constantly going on for political advantage on the one side and personal advantage on the other, and between the two extremes the great body of the American people were being crushed and ground. He would apply the rule that whoever demanded a tax for his own benefit should be ready to show conclusively that his interest was also the public interest. The demonstration should be made that every single penny of tax proposed was absolutely necessary.

HOW CLEVELAND WAS BEATEN.

Compact Between New York Brewers and Quay in the Last Campaign Exposed.

[Louisville (Ky.) special.]

Several days ago, in the United States Senate, Senator Hiscock, of New York, paid his respects to the Democracy of New York, and declared that in that State the party gained its strength by affiliation with the liquor interests and the most degraded elements of the population of New York City. Among those who paid particular attention to the debate was Col. John M. Atherton, the President of the Liquor Dealers' National Protective Association. Col. Atherton was in New York the greater part of the last Presidential campaign, and to-day in an interview stated that there was an understanding or compact between Boss Quay and the Brewers' Association of New York to work for the defeat of Cleveland in that State, Secretary Thomas, of the Brewers' Association, being the manager of Quay's literary bureau.

A Friendly Argument.

"I don't believe much in the Bible," said a collegian to a Quaker.

"Does thee believe in France?"

"Yes, I do. I never saw it, but I have plenty of proof there is such a country."

"Then thee does not believe anything unless thee or thy reliable friends have seen it?"

"No; be sure I don't."

"Did thee ever see thy own brains?"

"No."

"Does thee believe thee has any brains?"

I WANT to be an iceman,
And with the icemen stand;
A piece of ice before me,
And my ice bill in my hand.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

AND

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

AFFAIRS IN INDIANA.

INTERESTING ITEMS GATHERED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

What Our Neighbors Are Doing—Matters of General and Local Interest—Marriages and Deaths—Accidents and Crimes—Personal Pointers.

—The fifth reunion of the Second Indiana Cavalry will be held at Brazil on the 17th and 18th of September.

—The Fifth annual reunion of the Fifty-ninth Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, will be held at Martinsville, Thursday, Sept. 18.

—The engine of a Monon passenger train was derailed and wrecked at New Albany. The fireman, F. W. Reels, received slight injuries.

—Exurn Cox, an aged farmer living near Armiesburg, while crossing the C. & I. C. track at Leatherwood was struck by an an engine and killed.

—A movement is on foot at Crawfordsville to raise $100,000 to secure a natural gas pipe line. The line will also go through Thorntown and Darlington.

—John Woirldge, who lives about four miles west of Tipton, had his right hand caught in a tile-mill. It was crushed so badly that it was necessary to amputate it just below the wrist.

—Rev. James Campbell, of the M. E. Church, Mt. Healthy, is under arrest, charged with seduction and abortion. His victim is the 16-year-old daughter of a wealthy farmer named Huntsman.

—Calvin Cromwell, a laborer, was engaged in digging a well at Indianapolis, and when thirty-three feet down, called to be taken out. He was drawn to the top of the well, but fell back dead. He is supposed to have been overcome by damp.

—The annual old settlers' reunion at Meharry's grove will be held on Thursday, Aug. 28. Among those who have been invited to make addresses are Judge Rabb, of Williamsport; Prof. Kersey, of Valparaiso; and Mrs. Dr. Mary Haggart, of Indianapolis.

—Ed Campbell, a workman at the glassworks building at Hartford City, fell from the wall, a distance of twenty-five feet, alighting on his head and shoulders. He was picked up for dead, but recovered and is all right. It was a frightful fall, and a remarkable escape.

—Harry Smith, a young man living in the northern part of Montgomery County, received a charge of bird-shot in one of his hands about six weeks ago. Blood-poisoning set in, and, failing to receive proper attention, maggots have been allowed to breed in the decaying flesh. The young man suffers fearfully, and cannot get well.

—At Crawfordsville, burglars, by using a pole and reaching in at open windows, secured the pantaloons of several slumbering men, and, after securing the money in the garments, threw them away. Frank Nuckols lost $8, and found his pants on the sidewalk in front of his house, George Schlemmer found his suit of clothes in the school-house yard, and his watch and 75 cents gone.

—The Muncie Natural-gas Land-improvement Company has closed a deal in which $2,000,000 worth of property was transferred to Meyer Auerbach, of New York City, and Baron Forstner de Demberoy, of Holland, both wealthy men, the former being five times a millionaire. The particulars of the deal are not yet known, but it is expected property at Muncie will advance largely because of the transfer.

—Steps are being taken to bring suit in the United States Court against the receiver of the Crawfordsville Waterworks Company on account of an alleged failure of the company to keep a sufficient supply and pressure of water in case of fires. Crabbs & Reynolds want $3,000, being their loss, above insurance received, in the burning of their elevator, and the insurance companies want $4,000 on account of the burning of Martin's ice-house.

—A terrible gas explosion occurred at Terrehall, near Kokomo, and two persons will probably die from the effects. Levi Fenn, while running a traction engine, ran over a high-pressure natural-gas pipe. The heavy engine wheels broke the pipe, allowing the gas to escape. The fire in the engine furnace caused the explosion. Fenn was thrown twenty feet in the air and was burned about the head and hands. He will probably die. His wife, who was ill, is at death's door. Mr. Fenn is a prominent and wealthy citizen, and proprietor of the Terrehall heading and stave-works.

—Edinburg is experiencing a steady, substantial boom in real estate and business interests. Lots are in demand and streets are being extended. Every dwelling house is occupied and there is urgent demand for more. In the near future there will be erected twenty-five dwelling houses. The building boom is extending south and east. The Cabinet Company, lately organized there, after refusing very flattering inducements from neighboring cities, has purchased ground and will immediately erect a three-story brick building, 50 by 120 feet. This company will employ at least 120 men.

—Mrs. John Fulford, who resides eight miles south of Martinsville, gave birth to a babe a few days ago without a tongue. The little one is bright and healthy, and bids fair to live as long as its brothers and sisters that were more fortunate.

—The Talbot Paving Company, of Detroit, was awarded the improvement of Washington street, Hartford City. The street is to be paved with cedar blocks and will cost $37,000 exclusive of sidewalks. The entire improvement will cost about $50,000.

—While Edward Cooper, a young man from Poneto, eight miles north of Montpelier, was riding on a flat car, the cars jammed together with such force that it threw him under the cars and cut his right arm off above the elbow.

Rev. Samuel Baechler, pastor of the Lutheran Church of Hartford City, was overcome by heat during a sermon. He gave the benediction, was carried home, but died at 5 o'clock next morning. He was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, Jan. 18, 1827, and lived there nearly all his life. He moved from Goshen to Hartford City two years ago.

—John McWilliams, aged 47 years, was run down by an engine of the J., M. & I., near Pearl street and Railroad avenue, New Albany, and so badly injured that he will probably die. He was intoxicated and standing beside the track.

—Alf C. Mayo, an Indianapolis traveling man, was ejected from a Lake Erie and Western train seven miles north of New Castle, for refusing to pay the 10 cents extra demanded of passengers who have no tickets, by a late rule of the company. Mr. Mayo is a large man, and it took the conductor, brakeman, baggageman, and engineer just twenty-two minutes to remove him from the car. He has employed able legal counsel, and will sue the company for $10,000 damages.

—An old German farmer named Herman Ruhl, who has occupied a small farm in the vicinity of Bloomingdale, a suburb of Fort Wayne, died recently in horrible agony. Some time ago deceased was driving his horse, when the animal coughed and blew saliva in the face of its driver. Last week Ruhl's face became literally incrusted with small pimples, and these spread over his body until eventually it became a mass of sores. Medical science was of no avail. Dr. Jansen, a local physician, says that death was due to blood poisoning, caused by the obnoxious matter from the horse becoming absorbed into the man's system. It is supposed that the animal was suffering from glanders.

—A sensation was caused in Fort Wayne by the unearthing of about four hundred pounds of silver that had been melted in bars eight inches long, three inches wide and an inch thick. The treasure was found buried three feet below the surface of the ground by workingmen engaged in excavating a cellar. The bars were compactly placed together, and about them were dark lines, indicating the remains of a box in which they had been deposited. Mr. Schroeder has owned the property forty years, and at the time he came into possession of it an old log house occupied the spot where the treasure was discovered. There is not enable theory of when or by whom the silver was buried.

—Dr. J. G. Rogers, Superintendent of the Northern Hospital for Insane, asked the Attorney General recently for an official opinion as to the powers of the Board of Trustees to use any part of the institution's maintenance fund for the purpose of insuring the real and personal property under the Board's care. The Attorney General replied that the trustees may legally make an expenditure out of their maintenance fund to procure a reasonable insurance upon the buildings and personal property of the State under their control. He holds that to maintain is to bear the expense of; to keep up, and that the matter of indemnifying the State against loss by fire or other casualty comes under the head of "keeping up" the property.

—The accidental finding of the very excellent mineral springs, some six in number, no doubt will prove a very valuable discovery to Brownsburg. They yield an inexhaustible supply of pure spring water, possessing marked medicinal properties highly beneficial in the treatment of diseases due to a rheumatic tendency or a depressed vital condition of the system. The springs are located in the ravine adjacent to town on the south, amid beautiful surroundings, where the natural surface of the country is one of romantic landscapes and scenic beauty. A movement is already started to organize a stock company for the purpose of leasing the grounds and building a medical lake park, with sanitarium and hotel, with all the conveniences of a model resort.

—While some workmen were engaged in grading a new street through East Warsaw, a large number of human bones were found eighteen inches below the surface. The clay in the vicinity of the bones was burned as hard as brick, and every indication pointed to the fact that a human body had been cremated at the spot. It is said that many years ago an aged man who resided in that locality, and who was reported to have untold wealth concealed about his house, mysteriously disappeared, and all efforts to find him proved futile. The discovery of the bones alluded to is regarded as a partial solution to the mystery. It is thought by some that the old man was murdered for his money, his body burned and hurriedly covered up by the murderers. The matter will be investigated.

—Conductor Lew Stinson, of the Evansville & Indianapolis Railroad, while en route to Evansville on the regular passenger train, espied the body of a man lying near the track a few miles south of Washington. He stopped the train and picked the body up. It was cold and stiff, and had evidently been dead for some hours. Examination of the body revealed three terrible gashes in the head, one in the back of the head, one over the right ear, and one in the forehead, all of which appeared as if caused by blows with an ax or hatchet. The body was identified as that of Mr. George Lowrey, one of the wealthiest and most prominent farmers of Daviess County, who was about 60 years of age. He leaves a large family. It is the opinion that he was murdered and his body placed beside the track.

—Bert, the 8-year-old son of Adam Bowers, living north of Brazil, fell from an apple tree, breaking his arm and receiving injuries that may prove fatal.

—The mail route from Crawfordsville to Alamo is to be changed. Heretofore it has been by railroad to Troutman's Station, thence to Yountsville, from where it was forwarded to Alamo. The Alamo people objected to their mail coming through the Yountsville postoffice, and now it is to be sent by a hack line direct between the first-named points.

—James Stuart, an employe at Peter Waits & Sons' planing mill at Knightstown, was fatally kicked by a horse. He was engaged in putting the horse away for the night when he was kicked in the head.

—A peculiar case of mingled grief and joy was that which occurred to Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Griffett, of Nashville. In one room of their pleasant home lay their little sick boy, and, in the other, the mother in confinement, and almost at the same instant the little boy breathed his last and died, a little girl was born to the mother.

HUMOR.

The after-clap—An encore.

Speaking about "circular letters," O is one.

A mile shake—discharging the driver of a wagon.

"I can't see what you are driving at," was the remark of a blind horse.

"This is a hard set," as the hen said when she was trying to hatch a porcelain egg.

First fisherman — What luck? Second fisherman—None at all; can't get the cork out.

Will—Don't you think Miss Plain homely? Bill—I used to think so before I learned she was an heiress.

"Well, Tommy, do you know that you have got another little brother this morning?" "Oh! have I! Does mother know?"

Billings—Well, my boy, are you satisfied with married life? Benedict—Satisfied? Why, I am perfectly satiated with it.

"What shall we do to get our young men to the front?" asks a writer. The answer seems plain: Induce the older ones to take back seats.

She—I do believe Grace Thorndike gets engaged to as many as twenty fellows every summer. He—Aha! A kind of three day's grace, as it were.

An old sailor at the navy yard observed that there is one advantage in Arctic explorations. In the face of the gravest perils one can always keep cool.

A matter of paste—"Ye see Missus Stookey's d'monds yit?" "Yes; but I b'lieves dey's paste." "I shouldn't wondah. Her man's a billposter, anyhow, ye know."

Minister—I would not consult Elder Close on the subject. He never gives assent to anything. Deacon—No. I've noticed that when the collection plate is passed around.

"What's the reason, doctah, that you signs yourself Jawge Washington Jones, P. D. Q?" "Dose yere lettahs my title. I ain't no simple M. D. Ise a Pill Doctor of Quinine in de swamps."

Circumstantial evidence—Mrs. Yerger (to colored servant)—Do you know when Col. Yerger came home last night? Sam—I dunno, mum, but when I tuck his boots at 7 o'clock, they was warm.

"Johnny, Johnny!" said the minister, as he met an urchin one Sunday afternoon carrying a string of fish; "Do those belong to you?" "Ye-yes, sir, you see that's what they got for chasing worms on Sunday."

She—Oh, just look at that bonnet, Clarence! buy it for me, there's a dear. It's the dearest little thing in the world. He—One moment. Does the superlative adjective refer to the price, or to the bonnet?

"John," said Mrs. Billus, anxiously, "you whipped Willie too hard. His spirit is utterly broken." "What makes you think so?" inquired Mr. Billus. "He asked me a little while ago if I didn't want to cut his hair."

Mrs. Merritt—I hear your daughter lost her place as typewriter. Did she make some mistake? Mrs. Badger—Yes, she fell in love with one of the clerks before she had given her employer time enough to take a liking to her.

A COMPROMISE.

"Och, Father O'Reilly," says Patrick, so slyly,
"It's howly Saint Peter I wish you could be;
Yerself in that station wud be my salvation—
Ye'd let into heavin the likin's of me."
"No, Patrick; don't flatter yourself on that matther," Says Father O'Reilly, "I know ye too well,
But for yer consolin', I'd best be controllin'
The gates of the divil, to bar ye from hell."

Mr. Gotham—It is time for us to start for Mrs. De Avenoo's—but, ahem! Don't you think you ought to spruce up a little? Col. Kaintuck (of Louisville)—Oh! ah! Yes, certainly. Just wait a moment, until I take a fresh quid and reverse my cuffs.

"Progressive conversation parties" have been introduced as a new form of amusement. A progressive conversation party takes place when three young ladies meet for the first time in three days; and when a man finds that his wife has used his razor to open a fruit can, he's that kind of a "party" all by himself.

Whiffers—Ah! How do you do? Well, out with it, old man. What success? You said you were going back to your native town to hunt up your first love, from whom you parted years ago—the 'airy, fairy Lillian' you raved about, you know. Did you find her? Bliffers (sadly)—Y-e-s. She's drawing $20 a week as the champion fat woman of a dime museum.

The Chinese Compositor.

That the public may see what the Hong Kong Telegraph has to put up with from the man with the queue, it publishes a portion of a familiar piece as "set up" by a Chinese compositor:

"The Burial of Sir John Moon.—Not a drum was heard not a funeral note as his corse to the ramparts. We hirmed not a soldur discharged his farewell shot O'er the gram when our Hero we buired. We buired him doubly at dead of night. The soda with our bayonets turming. By the shuggling moonhearrs mirty light and the lantern drinly buning. No melen coffin enclosed his breast not in shut nor in shorsed we wound him. But he lay like a wanior taking his not. Wilt his martial clock around him. Few and short were the prayers and, we we spoke not a word of sorrow. But we steadfastly galed on the fall that was dead and we bittelly thought of the morrer."

A Startling Reminder.

A young lady living in a town not far from Des Moines was a guest at a progressive euchre party the other evening. At least twenty of "the 400" were there and all enjoying themselves as only progressive euchre players know how, when suddenly our young lady friend looked up at her partner and in a voice loud enough to be heard all through the room, "Oh, Charlie, do you know I am soon to become a mother!" A dead calm fell on the party, but it was hilariously broken when the young lady naively explained that she was soon to be married to a most estimable gentleman who is a widower and has three interesting children.—Des Moines Graphic.

Was Glad She Told Him.

"William," said Mrs. Bixby from the head of the stairs to her husband, who had come home at an early hour in the morning, "there is some angel cake in the pantry, a new kind that I made today. I put it where you can easily get it."

"All right, dear," responded Mr. Bixby. "How considerate of you. I might have eaten some of it without thinking." And the grateful husband made a lunch on cold corned beef.—Boston Herald.

A Man of His Word.

Gilhooly and Gus De Smith were strolling carelessly past a saloon. After they had passed twenty steps beyond the saloon, Gus De Smith stopped and said:

"Let us go back and wet our whistles."

"I thought you promised your wife not to take a drink," replied Gilhooly.

"No, I didn't make any such fool promise as that. What I did promise was that when I came to a saloon I would go past it, and I have kept my promise like a little man. I have passed the saloon, as I said I would. Now, let us turn around and get a drink as a reward for having kept my promise."—Texas Siftings.

Encouragement for the Feeble.

So long as the failing embers of vitality are capable of being rekindled into a warm and genial glow, just so long there is hope for the weak and emaciated invalid. Let him not, therefore, despond, but derive encouragement from this and from the further fact that there is a restorative most potent in renewing the dilapidated powers of a broken-down system. Yes, thanks to its unexampled tonic virtues, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is daily reviving strength in the bodies and hope in the minds of the feeble and nervous. Appetite, refreshing sleep, the acquisition of flesh and color, are blessings attendant upon the reparative processes which this priceless invigorant speedily initiates and carries to a successful conclusion. Digestion is restored, the blood fertilized and sustenance afforded to each life-sustaining organ by the Bitters, which is inoffensive even to the feminine palate, vegetable in composition and thoroughly safe. Use it and regain vigor!

He Was the First.

St. Peter—None but the good can enter. What have you ever done to gain entrance here?

Austin Man—Done! Why, I was the only man in the State who did not get off a joke on the new dam they are now building across the Colorado River.

St. Peter gazed at him long, but with tender, loving eye. Then he threw the gates open wide enough to admit a freight train sideways, as he murmured softly: "Verily, you belong among the truly good."—Texas Siftings.

Undoubtedly the Last.

Jones—Who is that striking-looking man over there? Seems like a popular sort of chap.

Brown—Mistake! He's the last man we fellows will have anything to do with.

Jones—Extraordinary!

Brown (easily)—Not at all; he's the undertaker.—Texas Siftings.

ALBERT BURCH, West Toledo, Ohio, says: "Hall's Catarrh Cure saved my life." Write him for particulars. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

There Was No Prohibition There.

"I have had a delightful evening," he said, as he took his hat and rose to go. "May I call again?"

"I shall be glad to see you," she replied, with a blush.

As he walked out into the hall he saw in the mirror of the hat-rack a reflection of the roguish girl slyly throwing a kiss at him, and he turned back.

"I must have that in the original package," he whispered.

He was a Kansas young man and he got it.—Chicago Tribune.

Good News for Fat People.

Dr. Snyder, herbalist, 243 State St., Chicago, whose advertisement appears in this issue, is no doubt the great reducer of the age. He takes "fat folks," overloaded with adipose tissue until they are a burden to themselves and a charge upon their relations and friends, and in a short time reduces them, at the rate of 15 to 25 pounds per month, and making different persons of them. What was monstrous becomes trim, well built and able to run a foot race with a trained pedestrian.

A once very fat friend of ours, is not now recognized by half the people he meets, so great has been the change in his weight.

Jones' Revenge.

Muggings—Funniest thing happened the other day—Jones was trying to make his mule drink out of a bucket, when the animal kicked him.

Cobb—Ah, then, did Jones kick the mule?

Muggins—No, he kicked the bucket.—Life.

People do not discover it until too late that the so-called washing powders not only cut up their clothes, but ruin their skin. Use nothing but Dobbins' Electric Soap. Have your grocer keep it.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS
One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in
Prickly Ash Bitters!
It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. Send 2c stamp for copy of "THE HORSE TRAINER," published by us.

The turning point in woman's life brings peculiar weaknesses and ailments. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription brings relief and cure. It is a powerful, invigorating, restorative tonic and nervine. It imparts strength to the whole system in general, and to the uterine organs and appendages in particular. "Run-down," debilitated and delicate women need it. It's a legitimate medicine—purely vegetable, perfectly harmless. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. Nothing else does as much. You only pay for the good you get. Can you ask more?

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION
MODENE
AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.—DISCOVERED BY ACCIDENT.
In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes, and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CANNOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without the slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward.
—Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.—
Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail, in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER. (Cut this out.)

We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE OR THE SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

Strange indeed that A PLAIN THING like SAPOLIO should make everything so bright, but "A needle clothes others, and is itself naked." Try it in your next house-cleaning
What folly it would be to cut grass with a pair of scissors! Yet people do equally silly things every day. Modern progress has grown up from the hooked sickle to the swinging scythe and thence to the lawn mower. So don't use scissors!
But do you use SAPOLIO? If you don't you are as much behind the age as if you cut grass with a dinner knife. Once there were no soaps. Then one soap served all purposes. Now the sensible folks use one soap in the toilet, another in the tub, one soap in the stables, and SAPOLIO for all scouring and house-cleaning.

The Wabash Road.

J. L. Davis, J. J. VanAuken, J. F. Johnson and E. B. Gerber went to Detroit last week to see the Wabash officials. They found the officers ready to talk over the matter and got from them a promise that nothing definite would be done, till they came down and examined our line and gave our people a full hearing. In the meantime however, they are going forward getting the refusal of the right of way along the Montpelier line, though they pay no money down. They appear to want to make themselves sure to hold that line if they should should need it. Our people may as well make up their minds that there will be a brisk fight if we succeed in getting the new line.

Surprised by His Children.

Eli Bensinger, one of the COURIER'S good friends, who resides east of town, was agreeably surprised on Monday by the sudden arrival of his children and grandchildren for it was his 77th birthday. They had a garnd dinner, talked over old timec and had a splendid time generally. Three of the children and two grandchildren were present. Few are so fortunate as to reach the age Mr. B. has attained, and we are glad to hear that this family reunion was so successful.

Grand Picnic.

Tuesday afternoon, the ladies of the Relief Corps invited a number of their friends, and with well-filled baskets wended their way out to the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Stimely, west of town. There they found all in readiness to give them a cordial welcome, Mrs. Stimely is a member of the corps. But as she has been in poor health and not able to attend the meetings of the Corps very often, the ladies took this way to bring the corps to her and make her relations to the society as pleasant as possible. The afternoon was spent in social conversation till tea time, when under large evergreen trees, a long table was spread and filled with all the dainties of the season. After all had partaken of the supper, the buses began to come, and the guests soon after took their departure to the city, all feeling that they had had a most enjoyable gathering.

Teachers' County Institute.

The county institute begins here on Monday, Sept., 1, and closes Friday evening of the same week. Good teachers have been secured by Mr. Merica and we are assured of work, equal to the best ever done at previous institutes. The lecturers are of more than ordinary ability. Dr. T. J. Bassett lectures Monday evening; Prof. Chas. DeGarmo, of Normal, Ill., lectures Tuesday evening; Miss Lucie May Wiant gives an elocutionary entertainment Wednesday evening and on Thursday evening we have the famous Frank Beard, the caricaturist, of whom every body has heard. He is at present doing this line of art work for the "Judge" magazine. Friday evening is the lecture by Geo. R. Wendling, one of the very best in the field. Bassett and DeGarmo will do work all the week. We also will have president H. B. Brown of the Valparaiso Normal, a part of the time. All in all, it will be a grand institute. We hope to see every teacher present, and as many of our citizens, here and elsewhere, as can spare the time to attend. It will richly repay anyone.

Keep at It.

The Dispatch has now found a candidate for a state office, who uses letter heads printed at Indianapolis, instead of using those printed at his home, and by men who had to assist in giving him the office he now enjoys. These officers, the most of them, before they were helped into a soft place, had no letter heads at all. Then they would gladly have used the elegantly printed heads made at the home office. But as soon as they get into office through the help of the home printers, then they find home printed work not quite fine enough, and at once order lithographed heads from Indianapolis at more than twice the cost. It is time for the home printers to look out for this. And now is a pretty good time. The COURIER and the Dispatch are both now in a pretty good shape to go to the various candidates and ask them what course they propose to take, in case they are elected. Will they at once turn their backs on us, and get their work done elsewhere, or will they be satisfied with neat work done by the men who helped to elect them? They are at liberty to interview the COURIER on this interesting subject at any seasonable hour.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

W. J. McELROY, Macon, Ga.

Ignorance or Misrepresentation.

The Lagrange Standard in speaking of the American ships that have first returned from Europe says:

"It is well to reflect that every one of our war ships is the product of republican statesmanship. The republican Congress of 1881, and a republican administration, gave the word, and all that the administration of Cleveland did was to carry out the plan. It did this grudgingly, and hounded shamefully John Roach, the builder, into his grave."

Our own opinion is that the Standard is ignorant, for we cannot see that it could gain very much by misrepresenting a thing about which it knows the truth. So we will enlighten it. Republicans were in power for twenty-four years. In the last twenty years, a time time of peace, they wasted the largest and best navy we ever had, and did this while using up three hundred millions in money to keep it up. Goaded at last by democratic accusations of their extravagance and dishonesty, enough of them were induced to join the democratic members of Congress to make a reasonable appropriation for more ships. Some of them had been commenced when Cleveland came in, but were in such a state of construction, that work had come to a standstill and they were likely, under republican mismanagement, to go to the junk shops and be sold for old iron, as the other ships of the navy had been. Democrats took hold of the work, not "grudgingly," but gladly, patriotically, and determined, we would build ships that would float. So, the contract was taken away from John Roach, and his corrupt gang of boodlers, who were claiming that the government must pay them a few extra thousands. The ships were built, and John Roach taught a lesson in honesty. He was not "hounded to his grave." He had tried to go into fraudulent bankruptcy—a crime against the laws, and for which he should have been punished, instead of being lauded by republican papers as a martyr. He was forced, however, to give up the bankruptcy, as he was worth a vast sum of money. He died a few years later, as peacefully as any other boodler dies, and worth about two million dollars. And the ships that the Standard boasts about were built under democratic administration, and were nearly completed when Harrison came in. The Standard ought to cut this out for its scrap book so as not to make such a mistake again.

Kaskaskia.

All lovers of our early history will remember the old French town of Kaskaskia, so often mentioned by the earlier explorers of the Mississippi valley. It will surprise them to hear what changes have taken place in the old town. A canoe party going up the river lately writes: "Six miles below St. Genivieve is Kaskaskia, on the Illinois shore. About fourteen years ago this place was a city extending back a long distance from the river, but the river suddenly began moving toward it and the townspeople saw themselves and their land pushed back at such a rate that they constructed a great stone dike in the river to protect themselves. To-day the stone work of the dike is across the Missouri, and the willows have grown and covered it up. There is a little of the city left. The old church still stands, and when the faithful old sexton tolls the bell it peals out so plaintively that one might think it the funeral knell of the vanishing city

This old bell was brought to Kaskaskia in the days when even steamboats were unknown. It was brought from Holland to America, then transported on mules to Pittsburg, by flatboat down the Ohio, and then on a barge "cramped" up the Mississippi. That is, a flatboat was pulled up the river by hand, a long line being run out ahead, fastened to a tree and then "Heave ho!" against the current. The houses, barns, the little cemetery, homes, churches and all are going and it is the saddest looking sight I ever saw."

A Scrap of Paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by physicans that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. King's New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. For fuller particulars send stamp to W. H. Cole, Druggist, Fort Smith. Trial bottles of this wonderful Discovery Free at Robbins & McCord's, Druggists. 4

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

From The Rambler.

INDEPENDANCE, KANSAS,
August 6, 1890.

After a ramble of ten days. I have come to a halt at this pretty city of four thousand inhabitants, where I will receive my mail for at least thirty days. I will be at home here, to my friends that wish to address me by letter. From this place, I shall continue my trip for business and pleasure, by rail and livery, to reach all parts of this great Southwest part of our country, namely, southern Missouri, Arkansas and Indian Territory. My stops thus far, have been, Springfield, Ill., Hannibal and Kansas City, Mo., Ottaway, Humbolt, Parsons and Independence, Kans. All of these places, are fine enterprising cities, with immense wealth to advance the best interests of the people. They are built up with fine blocks from sandstone and brick, with magnificent fronts of three and four stories in heigth. I have within the last three days, seen a town of four years growth, named Dennis, that has a population of 2,500, with all modern improvements, splendid churches, and two fine school houses. The streets and lawns are shaded with the beautiful catalpa trees, which are decked with great, broad leaves and delicate white flowers, from which a bean pod ten inches in length is produced, that hang from the branches, and make the tree a great favorite here. I find its people are made up of families, who when the parents were young, married their best young man, or the girl adored, and came west to grow up with the country, and gain themselves homes. Through these means they have borne to their children who have grown up to young man and young womanhood, a disposition of brilliant stars, which either singly or en-masse form the best society known, whose homes are filled with music books and good papers, with all the attractions of an eastern home. Why should it not be thus? We know it was the deep thinking, and enterprising young people of the different states that have effected these results. I have been given a grand reception wherever I have gone. I am giving a few temperance lectures. The people are agitated at this time on account of the "original package" houses that are now opened against the will of the people, by the decision of the U. S. supreme court. I will say that this is the prettiest country that I ever saw. It is rolling enough to make the most beautiful landscape views imaginable.

WHAT IS RAISED ON THIS SOIL.

Wheat and corn are plentifully and extensively raised. Castor beans are grown by the hundreds of acres, and are worth $2 per bushel; flax is being cultivated as a safe and paying investment; cattle are also becoming extensively raised. Fruits, such as, apples, peaches, pears, plums, grapes and small fruits are all doing well. Melons are extensively grown for the markets, and attain a great size. All vegetables are doing well Some vicinities have been hurt by the drouth, but other localities are all right, and those people are feeling happy and contented. I will write up my next ramble from the Indian Territory, and give your readers the facts just as they are.

BAN. SWART, The Rambler.

That's the Talk.

South Bend Times: Indiana's state debt amounts to $8,540,715, drawing interest at the rate of $273,825, and increasing at the rate of $400,000 a year. There will have to be some judicious financiering done hereafter, to avoid serious embarrassment. Careful, prudent men should be sent to the legislature, and business men chosen as auditor and treasurer of state, to help matters along. It is high time to dispense with such highflyers as Bruce Carr, the present auditor of state, who hardly ever sees the inside of the state auditor's office once in a week and who feels a much deeper interest in a game of base ball or a horse race than he does in the fiscal affairs of the state, beyond drawing his salary. It is mighty poor policy for a great state like Indiana to elect men of the Bruce Carr stamp to an important state office.

TWO GRAND DISPLAYS

THAT MUST INTEREST AND DELIGHT EVERYBODY.

A Great Convention of Man's Most Faithful Friends and Servants—Also the Wonders of the Waters—Immense Displays of Dogs and Fishes About To Be Exhibited.

Earlier than human history, either written or traditional, is the relation of master and servant between men and dogs. The earliest traces of human existence in cave drifts, and ancient mounds, and the ashes of savage villages that existed before the age when the world was covered with ice, show the bones of dogs and men commingled. It is not doubted that the dog was the first animal domesticated by man. But the dog is not, probably, an original animal. It is disputed whether nature ever produced dogs—even the wild dog—and contended that dogs are the product of unknown centuries of human breeding from wolves and jackals, gradually evolving the dog from these animals. Nature has made wolves and foxes suitable to all climates and almost all environments, though jackals adhere to warm climates. It is supposed that the mixture of these bloods under man's supervision finally produced the dog. All his cogeners are carnivorous; but domestication has made the dog omnivorous. But in the matters of scent, fleetness, courage, power, endurance and intelligence the dog is still not so far superior to his wild ancestry, the wolf, fox and jackal. His superiority is mainly in specialities promoted for human use, and this only in degree and not in kind.

In most, if not in all, respects the dog is the most intelligent of animals. So high is his intelligence that, even when still nearest a wolf ancestry, he learns to understand some human speech, and he is a keen observer of the gestures and actions of his master. No other domesticated animal serves man voluntarily, or attaches itself strongly to one person or family.

In all ages and races the relations between men and dogs have been the theme of history, tradition, poetry, and even sacred writing. Among the virtues of the dog are some of the noblest, and the animal seems to touch their acme of development. Even the wild Indian recognizes these virtues; and, in his religion—

> "He deems, admitted to that equal sky
> His faithful dog shall bear him company."

This universal interest in dogs is exhibited by the crowds that attend a grand dog show, like that of which constitutes an interesting part of the Detroit International Fair and Exposition, Aug. 26 to Sept. 5, inclusive. This will be the most important dog show ever held in the west. Nearly 1,000 of the finest dogs in the world will be shown, with many extraordinary entries. There will be the largest dog in the world, weighing 16½ pounds more than the smallest horse, and the smallest dog in the world, which lies at full length on a lady's hand, and is smaller than an ordinary rat. The two great bloodhounds that were used by the London police to hunt the noted Whitechapel murderer, "Jack, the Ripper," are entered from London, England. A pack of enormous wolf hounds from Siberia are also entered. These grand dogs have never before been seen in America, and they are rare even in eastern Russia outside the imperial kennels of the czar. August Belmont's pack of fox terriers, that have just won the world's championship in England, will appear; also the grandest looking immense dogs in the world, of Prince Bismarck's great breed of German mastiffs, or Great Danes. Many ladies of distinction in Canada, Boston, New York, Washington, etc., have entered their costly pets for this exhibition. One dog will be shown that has in single combat. The best and most valuable dogs of all breeds will be shown. Among them will be the Gordon setter champion, Little Boy, valued at $10,000; the Irish setter champion, Elcho, Jr., valued at $10,000; also the Westminster club champion pointers, Lad and Lass of Bow, valued at $5,000 each; J. Shelley Hudson's English champion setter, Dad Wilson, valued at $5,000, and Bohemian Girl, valued at $5,000, and many other grand specimens.

KILLED TWENTY-FIVE GRAY WOLVES

In all ages fish have been objects of great and universal interest. But it is only in modern years that they have been studied and understood, and have had governments undertake their propagation and rearing. One of the greatest of these government establishments of peopling the waters is the Michigan State Board of Fish Commissioners. Under their supervision a magnificent display of all kinds of live fish that inhabit the waters of the great lakes and their tributary rivers, besides many from distant waters, will be shown at the Detroit Exposition. Enormous aquariums, with plate-glass sides, will be so arranged that visitors can see all manner of fish, each kind in its separate compartment, properly labeled, with electric lights so illuminating the crystal water that the fish seem to be swimming in liquid sunlight, bringing out all the beauties of their brilliant colors and elegant forms. There will be a canal, up which trout and salmon will leap. Animals that prey upon fish will also be shown. The fish exhibition last year was always surrounded by a dense crowd of interested people. This year it will be the finest fish exhibition ever shown, and will be one of the great features of the Exposition. Alike as a beautiful show and as a most instructive lesson in natural history, this exhibition will be one of the most rare and valuable displays ever made, and it is safe to predict that it will attract the attention of admiring thousands at all hours during the Exposition, while it will be the delight of lovers of the rod and reel, and the close study of all interested in pisiculture, which is of such vast commercial and food value throughout the immense region of the great lakes and rivers.

May Thank Her Stars.

The narrow escape of Mrs. B. M. Searles, of Elkhart, Ind., from a premature death is wonderful. She states that "for twenty years my heart troubled me greatly. I became worse. Had smothering spells, short breath, fluttering; could not sleep on my left side, had much pain in breast, shoulder and stomach. Ankles swelled. Had much headache and dizziness. Treatment did me no good, until I tried Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and restorative Nervine. The first bottle helped me, and I was soon virtually cured. For sale at F. E. Davenport's drug store. Every Christian Mother.

Should be careful with her children. The damp atmosphere of our climate often brings on coughs, colds, etc., which if not attended to in time lead to that dreaded disease consumption. To prevent this, it is the duty of all mothers to have a remedy near to check these coughs that your children may contract, and you cannot get a safer or more reliable remedy than Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. You can buy this for 25 cents of F. E. Davenport.

Lines on Nathan Hathaway.

Dearest Nathan, thou hast left us
  Gone to join the angel band.
God knew best when He bereft us,
  Of thy loving, guiding hand.

When thou left us in His keeping,
  And departed for that shore,
Well thou knowest God's best blessing
  Were above, for us, in store.

Oft we think of thee, dear Nathan,
  Long to see thy loving face;
But if Jesus thought 'twere better,
  We will bear it through God's grace.

Whilst thou lived, thou wert like others,
  Trials, crosses, and cares to bear;
But the Savior sent the message--
  Thou art gone a crown to wear.

Well we know thou art with Jesus,
  Praising God around the throne:
And the angels join the chorus--
  Prise Him, Nathan, till we come.

Yes we know that thou didst love us,
  As children are by Nathan loved;
But thou didst leave thy wife and children,
  All to join the band above.

We will always live, dear Nathan,
  Live for good, for heaven, for right,
So that when our journey's ended
  We will live where there's no night.

Oftentimes we long to join thee,
  And to feel thy kindness once more;
Dearest Nathan come to meet us
  When we touch that shining shore,

Then we'll gather 'round the Savior,
  In one sweet unbroken band,
There to sing, shout and praise Him,
  And take no more the parting hand.

Ahead of His Pa.

(Communicated.)

Once there was a Methodist preacher who had a boy, possessed of more than ordinary activity in thought. The father preached a sermon on baptism to his congregation. The boy was present and listened attentively. The minister took his text from Col. II: 12—"Buried with Him in baptism, wherein also, ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." He called as a witness, Romans VI: 4. After the sermon was finished, he had the recipient take a seat on the bench, where he sprinkled a few drops of water on his face. The father returned home, he having an appointment for the afternoon. After dinner was served, the father started through the lane gate, and saw that one of his geese had died. He called the son, who had heard the sermon on baptism, to come and bury the goose in a particular fence corner. When the father returned he saw the goose lying on top of the ground. He came on to the house, found the boy, and began to chastise him for not burying the goose. The boy insisted that he had buried the goose. The father grew harsh with the son for lying. The son explained the matter, by saying that he had put the goose in the fence corner, sprinkled a handful of earth on the goose and pronounced her buried. Then, with a smile, he reminded the father of the sermon on baptism as a burial, and, that, he too sprinkled. He then requested his father to set forth a better example of a burial, and he would see to it that the goose was properly buried.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

For September, 1890. The citizen soldier has the place of honor in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for September. The frontispiece is a fine equestrian portrait of Colonel Daniel Appleton, Seventh Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y. The paper, by Lieutenant A. C. Sharpe, U. S. A., on "The National Guard, of the United States," is the most concise, comprehensive and interesting illustrated magazine article on this subject ever published. William Hosea Ballou gives a graphic description of "The Great Cotton Belt." Capt. J. S. Payne's thrilling article, "Camping with Crook," embodies a tribute to the great Indian fighter, and is a valuable contribution to contemporary history. Other timely and beautifully illustrated articles, such as "Florence and the Beatrice Dante Festival;" "The Green Vaults of Dresden;" by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer; "The Adirondacks as they Are," by Frederic G. Mather, and "Some Poisonous Plants," by Dr. L. B. Fletcher, are among the main attractions of this specially interesting number. There are, as usual, short stories, poems, literary and descriptive essays, in abundance.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Fifteen Killed and Twenty-three Injured on a Massachusetts Railroad.

Boston special: There was a disastrous railroad accident on the Old Colony Railroad and fifteen were killed and twenty-three seriously injured—three fatally and several more slightly. The train was Wood's Hall express. It consisted of a locomotive, Engineer Babcock, Fireman John Ryan, baggage car, smoker, Pullman car and four coaches heavily loaded. Just beyond President's bridge, near Quincy station, the engine left the track, from a cause unknown, and plunged into an embankment twelve feet high and was buried up on one side. The tender, baggage car, smoker and Pullman passed by the engine and were stretched along for a distance of 100 feet beside the track. The foremost passenger coach left the rails, the foremost truck swerved to the left and plunged diagonally through the car. The car fell upon the left side, upon the engineer. The forward portion was torn to pieces. The passengers were fifty in number, many of whom were thrown into the rear corner, from which seven dead bodies were afterward taken. The escaping steam from the engine instantly filled the cars. The forward cars were forced over upon the outward bound track, completely blocking traffic. Only three persons on the other cars were injured. These were the fireman who was instantly killed and hurled under the engine; the engineer who jumped and was only slightly hurt, and the Pullman car conductor, B. B. Benson, slightly. Three rear passenger coaches did not leave the track and the occupants received no worse injury than a slight shaking. There are various theories as to the cause of the accident. For several feet back along the track there is a sort of furrow which seems to indicate that something about the engine broke and plowed into the soil for some distance, finally derailing it. The general impression, however, seems to be that the engine was thrown from the track by spreading rails, and it is stated that a gang of workmen had been repairing that portion of the track, and may have left some of the rails insufficiently spiked. There was no switch near by on that track, so that the disaster could not have been caused by a misplaced switch, as was rumored.

Disastrous Cyclone.

A Wilkesbarre, Pa., special, dated the 20th inst., says: At five o'clock this afternoon a terrible cyclone struck the city. Hundreds of houses were unroofed, and partially blown over or completely demolished. How many people were killed is not yet known. Women and children are in the streets crying and wringing their hands. The damage will reach hundreds of thousands. Passenger trains and locomotives were blown over, and every wire in the city is down. No fires have followed. The total death loss, so far as ascertained, is twelve. Undoubtedly fifteen or sixteen are killed. The Murray shaft fan house was blown down and fan stopped. Twenty-seven men were in the mine but it is hoped they can be gotten out safely.

LATER—Reports from Sugar Notch, three miles from here, says the destruction of property is terrible. Fifteen persons were killed. At Parsons and Mull Creek, four miles from here, coal breakers in all directions have been more or less damaged and the number of killed are ten.

The New York Central Strike.

New York special: The refusal of Vice President Weeb to arbitrate with Powderly has greatly intensified the feeling between the strikers and the Central, and the situation is now in a more serious condition than at any time since the strike began. The general feeling is that trouble is bound to ensue in a very short time. The strikers are growing desperate and the refusal of the road to meet them in arbitration, has served to make them willing to listen to violent advice. Meantime the railroad is generally getting out a fair portion of its business and increasing it daily.

Killed in Ambush.

Willis Bell, an Oldham County, Kentucky, farmer, was shot in ambush. He was returning home with his brother-in-law, Jack Maxfield. The latter left the road and Bell rode on. Before a quarter of a mile had been covered by him there was a blast from the bushes and Bell fell off his horse. The tracks from the bushes led to Maxfield's house and he was jailed.

Explosion in a Coal Mine.

An explosion took place in the McCracklin coal mine, near Farmersburg, Ind., caused by gas becoming ignited from the miner's lamps. Emory McCracklin, an operator, was taken out dead, and his brother Frank was so badly burned that he cannot recover. Lafayette Saunders, another operator, is still in the mine and thought to be dead.

Sailed to Alaska.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Nettleton states that the revenue marine cutter Corwin has been ordered to sail from Port Townsend, Wash., to Alaskan water. The statement is authorized that no special significance attaches to the order.

A Noble Charity.

At the convention of the National German Catholic Union at Baltimore the committee made a report showing deaths of sixty-one members in the past year to whom $59,750 were disbursed in benefits.

After the Private Detectives.

The private detective agencies of Chicago are to be brought up with a sound turn by the city government.

STILL STRIKING.

Fight Between Pinkerton's Men and a Crowd at Albany, New York.

Albany (N. Y.) special: The greatest excitement reigns here among the strikers and the public generally over a fracas between the Pinkerton men and a crowd of people. A freight train was coming down the grade from West Albany about 7 o'clock. The car had two Pinkerton men on it, and as they got down near the Van Poert street crossing, a small boy fired a stone, striking one of the guards. Instantly the guard brought his rifle to his shoulder and fired. The ball missed the boy, but struck a man named John McCarthy, who was in his own yard, in the leg. Instantly the other Pinkertons who lined the track opened fire on the crowd near the station. As if by magic the place suddenly swarmed with strikers, but almost as quickly a squad of blue-coated policemen came upon a run. The crowd was kept back with difficulty. Chief of Police Willard ordered the arrest of five Pinkerton men who were told to shoot. All were locked up, and telegrams were sent out to intercept the train and arrest the man who fired the shot. So excited was the crowd that the Pinkerton men, to the number of fifteen, applied at the station house to be locked up for protection. The Knights of Labor have issued a bulletin, calling on their members to stay away from the railroad and preserve the peace, but the excitement is still intense and trouble is feared.

IT STILL CONTINUES.

Situation of the Strike on the New York Central.

Albany (N. Y.) special: All is quiet here; twenty freight trains were sent west from the West Albany yards, five also to Boston and four to New York. The blockade is being raised. A strong police guard has been placed along the tracks within the city limits. The Maguire boy, who was shot by Frank Hatton, the detective, is in a critical condition. Pinkerton reports to the railroad company that his men shot into the crowd on Sunday only after being assaulted by the strikers. He claims that the police interfered with his men. The police denies this. It is rumored that the New York Central will remove its repair shops, employing 1,500 men, to some other place in view of the present strike. Charles Dillon, a New York Central passenger conductor, was brutally assaulted near his home by three strikers. Two of them have been arrested. Twenty Pinkerton men are now in the hospital here.

Thomas Hatton, the Pinkerton man who shot the boy, Dwyer, at Albany, was held for assault in the first degree to await the result of the boy's injuries. No bail will be accepted, as the attending physicians say the boy will probably die.

The strikers have issued the following bulletin: "Advices just received from Buffalo are that the Supreme Council and General Executive Board are on their way to New York. The longshore men refuse to handle New York Central freight or grain. Everything is fast at this point."

At a meeting of engineers held at East Albany, comprising men on the Hudson and Mohawk divisions, it was unanimously resolved to stand by the Knights of Labor in their present trouble.

BOLD BRIGANDS.

Seven Road Agents with Winchesters Hold Up the Missouri Limited Express Train.

A special from Kansas City, Mo., says: The Missouri Pacific limited express due in this city from St. Louis at 7:30 a. m., was held up at the Otterville water tank, thirteen miles from Sedalia, and the express company's safe cleaned out. The robbery occurred one mile east of Graves' Crossing, which was the scene of one of the exploits of the James boys' band several years ago, and it was one of the boldest pieces of that kind of work ever carried out in the State. When the train left Tipton, two men got on the end of the mail car and after passing Syracuse, they climbed over on the engine and politely informed the men in charge that they wanted to stop at Otterville. This was done. The engineer was then compelled to call the express messenger out. By the time he had opened the door, five more men with Winchesters and shot guns appeared. One of them got in the car, getting the keys, cleaned out the safe and vanished in the darkness. None of the passengers were disturbed and they knew nothing of the affair until the train started. The officials claim there was nothing of value secured, but it is understood, on good authority, that a valuable package of jewelry was taken besides several money packages. There are two bloodhounds kept within two miles of the scene of the robbery and they are in pursuit of the robbers. One of the robbers was about thirty-five years old, light complexion, light mustache; another was about twenty years old, smooth face, black slouch hat and brown suit. There were five others outside armed with shotguns. It is estimated that they got from $30,000 to $75,000.

GRIZZLED HEROES.

Boston special: Commander-in-chief Wheelock G. Veazey, of the G. A. R. Such is the way the Inter-State Commerce Commissioner and ex-Vermont Judge can now write his name. The election took place rather unexpectedly, but it passed off without any friction. Three names were presented to the convention, those of Gen. Veazey, Gov. Hovey, of Indiana; and Col. W. R. Smedberg, of California. Warner Miller presented the Vermonter's name to the veterans in an earnest and eloquent speech. Then followed an interesting scene. The intimate friends of the other candidates urged their claims. When one by one the great departments came forward for Veazey, the spirit and enthusiasm became contagious and the up-shot was the withdrawal of the other candidates, both doing it in most graceful words. Col. Veazey thus succeeds Gen. Alger as the unanimous choice of the body.

Richard F. Tobin, of Boston, was elected Senior Vice Commander on the recommendation of the Massachusetts delegations, and George B. Creamer, of Baltimore, Junior Vice Commander. B. F. Stevens, of Kentucky, was elected Surgeon-in-chief and M. W. Reed, of Denver Chaplain-in-chief. Gen. Veasey named as his Adjutant General, Joseph H. Golding, of Rutland, Vermont, and John Taylor, of Philadelphia, Quartermaster General. Detroit was chosen as the place for holding the next National encampment. After the installation of officers the encampment closed.

A FATAL COLLISION.

A Limited Train Runs Into a Freight at Augusta, Mich.

Battle Creek (Mich.) special: As the east-bound North Shore limited on the Michigan Central Railroad was passing Augusta, a small town nine miles west of here, it ran into a standing freight train while running at full speed, and crashed through the depot building, completely demolishing it. The engine then exploded, blowing the fireman literally to pieces and killing the engineer, Charles McRoberts. One brakeman is missing and it is thought he is buried in the debris. Many occupants of the forward coaches were seriously injured and others more or less injured. Physicians were summoned from this city. The limited did not stop at Augusta, it having the right of way, and was running about fifty miles an hour. Of the passengers only nine were injured seriously. Their names could not be obtained at this writing, except that of George B. Murray, of Detroit, ribs crushed and severely injured. Both the engineer and fireman lived in Jackson. Of the express train the baggage car and two sleepers were demolished, and how the occupants escaped is a miracle.

Dashed to Death.

A fatal wreck occurred on the St. Louis, Alton and Springfield Railroad at Plasa Creek, five miles north of Alton, Ill. A construction train and the regular passenger train collided, wrecking both engines, killing three men and injuring ten. Fireman Smith of the passenger train, was pinned to the boiler head and crushed to death. The others killed were Charles McGee, who was completely decapitated, and a man named Murray, who was crushed to death.

DASTARDLY DEED!

Miscreants Place Obstructions on a Railroad Track and Cause a Fatal Wreck.

Pittsburg special: The Atlantic express, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, carrying a large excursion party en route for Atlantic City, ran into a huge pile of railroad ties and rails piled upon the track at Osceola station, twenty miles from Pittsburgh. The engine and baggage car were thrown fifty feet over the embankment. The remainder of the train, consisting of seven sleeping cars, were all thrown from the track upon their sides. The escape of the occupants from fatal injury was miraculous; only four of the passengers were injured, and they but slightly. Engineer Yank Sullivan and a friend, Robert Goodwin, also an engineer, who was riding on the engine, and a man named Hirsch, who was stealing a ride on the front baggage car, were instantly killed. They were buried under the engine and baggage car over the embankment. Sullivan's body was recovered four hours after the accident. Goodwin and Hirsch were not taken from the wreck until this morning. Sullivan resided at Glenwood, and leaves a widow and six children. Goodwin was going to visit his family, who reside at Connelsville.

It is reported that the obstructions had been placed on the track with the intention of killing some of the members of the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, who were upon the train.

BAD EXPLOSION

From an Unknown Cause Does Fatal Work in a Soap Factory.

An explosion originating from some unknown cause, occurred on the third floor of the Kendall Manufacturing Company's large soap factory, at the corner of Page and Friendship streets, Providence, R. I. The principal damage was done the third floor, where flames burst forth and acids were flowing about. There were seventy persons at work there, and of these ten were taken to the hospital badly burned. Michael Carrol and John McElroy are probably fatally injured. Their clothing was torn from their bodies and their flesh burned and blistered so badly that it dropped off in patches. Most of the others injured were young boys employed in packing. Coleman, a lad of 11 years, jumped from a second story window into the street. He succeeded in reaching the street with his clothing on fire. The flames came with the suddenness of a flash of lightning, and those in the rear part of the room suffered most.

A Bloody Deed.

Crestline (Ohio) special. J. J. Kirtland, foreman of the Pennsylvania Company car shops at this place, was found lying on his face in a ravine in the rear portion of his lot. He had been dead several hours when found. There is little or no doubt that he was waylaid and robbed and thrown in the ravine where he was found. The last seen of him alive was when he drew his wages from the pay car at a late hour the night before, and this, together with his watch, are missing. The most prevalent theory is that he was chloroformed and robbed and thrown on his face in the water where he smothered, as there is no mark of violence on his person. A small portion of his watch chain was still hanging to his vest, which strengthens the theory of robbery. Mr. Kirtland was about fifty-two years of age, and has been in the employ of the company for thirty years. He leaves one child, his wife having died several years ago. He was a prominent Mason and Knight Templar, and that order will have charge of the funeral.

Six Persons Shot on a Big Four Train.

When the "Bum Train" out of Cincinnati on the Big Four Railroad had reached Addyston station, a quarrel was started between George Tiehl, a white moulder and Barry Beckley, a colored man known as "The Devil-Catcher." Tiehl and Beckley clinched, whereupon the former drew his revolver and shot Beckley. Edward Bennett, Tiehl's friend, joined his companion, and the two placed themselves in the center of the coach and began a fusilade, firing at every one in their path. Before they leaped from the train into the midnight darkness, not less than half a dozen men and women were more or less seriously wounded.

Fearful Fire.

The immense distillery of the Kentucky Distillery Company, owned by Borkhouse & Co., was destroyed at Louisville. In the warehouse were 30,000 barrels of whisky. The whisky is valued at $600,000, and the buildings will run this up to over a million. The Government loses $890,000 in taxes, and this makes the total loss over $1,700,000. Many employes of the distillery had narrow escapes from the explosion of whisky barrels which exploded like cannons. The flames were so hot that it was difficult to get within a hundred yards of the fire. Only one person was injured, John Smith, a fireman, having his arm broken.

Strategy Succeeded.

San Diego special: Ernest Wolffe, a cattle dealer near the Mexican line, a few days ago crossed the border for his cattle and on returning with them was forced to pay $500 to Mexican officers as export duty. Next morning he crossed the line again and was arrested and imprisoned. Fifteen of his friends armed themselves to free him, but finally decided to try strategy first. One of them went to the guard house with a quantity of drugs and succeeded in drugging all the Mexican officials. He then released Wolffe and fled. Further trouble is feared.

Lassoed by Her Lover.

Nellie Taylor, a dissolute woman, had an experience recently that may end in death. She was lassoed by her lover, "Bud" Harris, hanged to a gas fixture, and escaping, was chased through the streets by Harris, who fired at her, the bullet passing close to her head. She was rescued by police officers just as her would-be murderer had again adjusted the lasso around her neck and was about to finish his brutal work. Her physician says she will probably die from the shock to her nervous system. Harris was arrested.

Acquitted by the Jury.

An important State case was tried in the Circuit Court at Decatur, Ind., at the instigation of Rev. Berg, pastor of the German Lutheran Church, of Root Township, Adams County. Henry Gerke, a wealthy member of his congregation, was indicted by the grand jury for provoking a breach of the peace in calling the minister a liar and a cheat. The whole congregation was summoned to testify at the trial. The jury found Gerke not guilty, leaving the minister to bear the odium.

Let 'Em Fight!

Western cracker dealers are going into the fight against the Eastern combine in earnest. The Lillibridge Bremmer Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., has joined forces with the Western firms and has placed the limit of cut rates at actual cost, but these figures will be lowered five per cent. if necessary. It is said that the Western body has purchased a site in New York for the erection of a plant, and when completed the Eastern trust will have competition in its own territory.

Fatally Burned.

Mrs. John Breit, wife of a young farmer living near Decatur, Ind., was fatally burned. She was alone in the house getting supper, when her clothing caught fire from the kitchen stove and before she could summon aid from the neighbors residing near by, all the clothing on her person burned off and the flesh was horribly roasted in many places. The house also caught fire but it was finally saved. She will die.

Crushed to a Pulp.

The ten-year-old son of Simeon Stearns, a prominent farmer living five miles north of North Vernon, Ind., met with a frightful accident. He was riding on a log-wagon with his father, and, while the wagon was going down a hill close to his house, he fell, and the wheels passed over his head, crushing it into a pulp. His father did not miss him until he had reached the bottom of the hill.

Schwienfurth's "Heaven."

Rockford (Ill.) special: Mary Weldon, one of the angels at the Rev. Schwienfurth's "Heaven," four miles west of here, gave birth to a girl baby recently. According to her story the "Holy Ghost" is responsible for its parentage. A committee of citizens has been at work and have consulted the law officers with a view of bringing legal proceedings to break up Schwienfurth's paradise.

Rich Silver Mine.

A few weeks ago a supposed silver mine was discovered at Pleasantville, Alamont County, near May's Landing, N. J. A shaft has been sunk and the owners have great hopes in the find. Experts who have assayed samples of the ore claim that it contains enough silver to pay for working it. It is stated that an English syndicate is trying to purchase the property.

One Killed and Another Hurt.

Two Rosedale, Park County, Indiana, miners, drunk and lying on the track of the Terre Haute and Logansport road, were run over by a freight train. Kit Setree was instantly killed and Thomas Perry will lose an arm. Other intoxicated minors gathered about the spot and, picking up the pieces of flesh, put them in their pockets.

The Boiler Bursted.

The bursting of a boiler in the gas works at Lincoln, Neb., caused the death of two men—William Duenen and Lum Maggard. Pouring cold water in the nearly empty boiler is the supposed cause of the explosion. Duenen was a married man, aged 36, and leaves a family.

Dangers of Journalism.

J. M. Bently, editor of the Azusea, Cal., News, was taken out by armed men and tarred and feathered for publishing an article reflecting on the conduct of Miss C. E. Frazier while teacher of the Azusea grammar school. The parties implicated are being arrested.

Two of Pinkerton's Men Killed.

Alfred Ludington and George D. Rossiter, of Philadelphia, two of Pinkerton's detectives stationed at West Albany, New York, were killed by a passenger train. They had been to get a drink of water and were returning to their posts at the time.

Young Ladies Fatally Injured.

Two daughters of Samuel McLeery of Columbus, Ind., were driving in a single buggy when the horse took fright, running down a hill and dashing the buggy to pieces. The young ladies were thrown out and fatally injured.

Man and Wife Killed.

Levi Troyers and wife, while crossing the track at the Bristol Cut, near Goshen, Ind., in a buggy, were struck by an engine and both killed. The cut is so deep that it is impossible to see a train coming from either direction.

Twelve Monks Burned to Death.

Athens special: Fire is raging on Mount Athos. Several houses and four churches have been gutted. The granaries and the contents have also been destroyed. Twelve Monks were burned to death.

Explosion Kills One Man.

The boiler in the saw-mill of William Landis, at Franklin, Ind., exploded, wrecking the mill and causing the death of John Spears. This is the fourth explosion in the same mill within three years.

Fiendish Wreckers.

Another train was wrecked on the Cincinnati Southern near Danville, Ky., by wreckers. No one was injured. The fiends drew the spikes, allowing the rails to spread.

Hanged to a Tree.

Claude McComas, of Delphi, Ind., was found hanging to a tree, in a swamp. He was a bright and gifted boy, and the cause of his suicide is wrapped in mystery.

Wilson Wins.

Potato Blight Spreading.

The dreaded potato blight on the west coast of Ireland is rapidly spreading.

ONE-SIDED COMMERCE.

JAMES G. BLAINE IN THE ROLE OF A TARIFF REFORMER.

The Man from Maine a Believer in Freer Trade but Still the Willing Tool of His Friends the Trusts—His Golden Opportunity.

[A. J. Grover, in the Chicago Herald.]

Mr. Blaine, in his letter to Senator Frye, charges Spain with "taxing" American products to the point of prohibition. Why is a Spanish tariff on imports "a tax" and an American tariff on imports not a tax? Mr. Blaine in the last campaign insisted that the American tariff is not a tax, and Republican papers and leaders have since repeated the disclaimer. Is it not the same tariff whether levied in Spanish or American ports? Mr. Blaine insists that free sugar imported from Spain and taxed flour exported to Spain are "one-sided commerce." Why then is not free pork, lard, and corn exported to France and Germany while the products of France and Germany imported into this country are taxed by us, also one-sided commerce, Mr. Blaine? But in the one case we would have the "one side" and in the other case Spain has it. In the one instance we lose and Spain gains, and in the other France and Germany would lose and we gain.

Is it not time to put an end to this one-sided commerce with all countries as well as with Spain and the Latin American states?

Mr. Blaine has recently discovered reciprocity. He had not made the discovery in his own or the last campaign. But, in fact, reciprocity in principle is not Mr. Blaine's discovery; it is not his patent. He has only discovered and given free trade a new name. For what is reciprocity in principle but free trade? Reciprocity completely carried out is unlimited free trade. Has Mr. Blaine been studying Mr. Garfield's Fifth Avenue Hotel speech, in which he said he was for that sort of protection which leads to free trade? Mr. Blaine, with his accustomed ear to the public heart, knows better than any other American statesman how it beats.

Reciprocity is a cover under which Mr. Blaine advances even beyond Mr. Cleveland's position in his tariff reform message. If we should say to Spain that we will let our people have untaxed sugar, and let the sugar trust go into bankruptcy if Spain will let her hungry millions have untaxed flour, would not this be free trade in flour and sugar between the two countries? Mr. Blaine calls it reciprocity—a newer, smoother, softer word—not a harsh sound in it.

Mr. Blaine says "there is not a provision in the McKinley bill—not a section or line—that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork for the American farmer." True. But we could by reciprocity with Germany and France, as well as with Spain, the Sandwich Islands and with Latin American states, sell four times as much flour, pork, corn and lard. Why not have such an arrangement also with France, Germany, Great Britain and all European nations? France and Germany have begun to tax corn, pork and other American farm products "for the purpose of prohibition," in retaliation for our tariff tax on the products of these countries. Why not seek reciprocity with France and Germany, Mr. Blaine?

Mr. Blaine would reply, if he were perfectly frank, that the true reason is that certain classes of products of German, French, and English mills which the people here largely consume are made in New England and Pennsylvania, and that the home manufacturers get the benefit of the prohibitory tariff tax of 75 to 150 per cent. which we levy for their enrichment, and Mr. Blaine is afraid to carry out reciprocity to the extent of interfering with these profitable businesses of his immediate constituents. He prefers a one-sided commerce with these nations, but dislikes a one-sided commerce with Spain, because Spain does not to any great extent interfere with trusts of the Eastern States, which enrich Eastern capitalists at the expense of the West and South; in which the producers of flour, corn, pork, and beef suffer from the prohibitory taxes on these articles in France and Germany, while the New England capitalists gain what the West and South lose.

Abolish one-sided commerce and adopt reciprocity universally, and we should have free unrestricted markets for the products of the farm—we should in other words have what Mr. Garfield and Mr. Cleveland wanted, viz., as near free trade as general and equal prosperity of all industries require.

Is Mr. Blaine "a Daniel come to judgment?" Is he with his ear on the public heart, under a new name on his banner, marching to the free trade or tariff reform camp? If so, let us welcome, not repel him.

Sir Robert Peel in 1842, by new inspiration, new light, which revealed the old error of the British protective system, saved England from threatened and utter ruin. Peel broke away from the Government party and carried his measures against it. Mr. Blaine has the opportunity now to do for this country almost exactly what Peel did for England. Does he see his chance, and is he about to immortalize himself and become a national benefactor as did Peel? It is by far the greatest opportunity of his life, and in all probability the last. Will he have the high inspiration to seize upon it? If it be possible, let him be encouraged, if he needs encouragement, to see his and the nation's chance. He is the only man living who can take enough of his party with him to accomplish for this country what Peel accomplished for Great Britain.

WHAT IS PROTECTION FOR?

Discrimination Against Americans and in Favor of Foreigners.

[Hon. James K. Jones, in the United States Senate.]

So generous and humane are our people that so long as they could be made to believe that the purpose of protection was to aid infant industries they cheerfully submitted, but when they are boldly and defiantly told that the purpose of the protection of the manufacturers and of their own oppression is to enable American manufacturers to sell American-made goods to foreigners cheaper than our own people are to have them, they have gone too far for even American patience, and the end will soon be reached.

That this is regularly and systematically done in the system of drawbacks, of which I may have something to say later, there can be no denial, but in addition to this there have been some recent disclosures which will doubtless be interesting reading for the people. In the course of the tariff debate in the House, on May 10 of this year, Mr. McRae, a distinguished Representative from Arkansas, called attention to a publication giving prices at which goods were sold by our protected manufacturers to our own people and to foreigners, and he gives in his speech page after page in parallel columns of articles sold cheaper to foreigners than to our own people.

A few days later, on May 20, Mr. Mansur, of Missouri, presented to the House a copy of the export edition of the Mining and Engineering Journal, of New York, in which he stated to the House that there were fourteen pages, containing about one thousand articles upon which prices for export were quoted largely below the prices demanded of Americans. This edition of the Mining and Engineering Journal, he stated, was not to be had in the Library of Congress, nor in the book stores of the city, but that he had to send to New York City for it after learning of its existence. These statements having been denied by numbers of Republican papers, the New Yorld World interviewed a number of manufacturers and published their statements admitting the truth of the charge.

It is said that so sure was a leading Republican member of the House that these things could not be true, that in the midst of the debate he telegraphed to a well-known protected manufacturer in New York asking if he sold goods cheaper to foreigners than to Americans, and within twenty minutes he had his answer, "Of course we sell cheaper to foreigners than to Americans. What is protection for?" There seems to be no room for further denial; but why should there have been any doubt about it at all? The system of rebates which is such a pet with the Republicans, which has been steadily maintained by law for years, and which has been increased and extended at every opportunity, is for this very purpose of selling goods to foreigners cheaper than to Americans, and no protectionist has ever had the audacity to deny this.

I called the attention of the Senate to the operation of this system during the last tariff debate had in this body, and showed that under it in the three years preceding that debate we had remitted $23,336,030.89 tariff dues upon goods because they were shipped to foreign countries for sale, whereas we would have collected and kept every cent of this amount if our own people had bought and consumed these goods. I at the same time called attention to a resolution offered in the Senate looking to a rebate of duties upon all goods shipped abroad and sold to foreigners.

The President of the United States, in his message transmitting to Congress the letter of the Secretary of State advocating reciprocal treaties with American nations, mentions "a rebate of duties upon imported raw material used in the manufacture of goods for export" as a proper thing to do. There is nothing whatever new in this discrimination against Americans and in favor of foreigners by the protectionists. It has been their steady practice, and it would seem that in their eyes the only right an American citizen has who is not a manufacturer is to be taxed. They have only been a little more clearly caught now than heretofore, that is all.

THEY REPUDIATE MR. HAAF.

Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association Officials Pass Resolutions.

(Vandalia (Ill.) special.)

At a meeting in this city of the Executive Committee of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association of Illinois the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, H. H. Haaf, a pretended Organizer of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, has been and is making unreasonable charges against the Farmers' Alliance and its officers; and,

WHEREAS, Said Haaf has pretended to speak by authority of our organization and has assumed to occupy a position unknown to our order, be it therefore Resolved, by the Executive Committee of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association of the State of Illinois having in charge the good of the order, that we request Brother H. H. Moore, President of the General Assembly of our Order, to revoke the commission of said Haaf, if any such commission exists, and require the said Haaf to speak only for himself in any opinion he may hereafter express.

Resolved, That we indorse and commend the upright course pursued by Brother Wilson in refusing to promise to violate the laws of Illinois by loaning the public funds of the State in the event of his election to the office of State Treasurer.

Resolved, That these resolutions be given to the press for publication, in order that all may know that hereafter the utterances of said H. H. Haaf represent but his own individual opinion.

HOW WE ARE TAXED.

During the three months ending March 31 we imported cutlery to the extent of $561,270, and paid thereon a duty of 35 per cent. This represents an annual importation in round figures of $2,240,000, at a cost, with the duty added, of about $3,000,000. Why has this immense outlay been made? It can be accounted for only on one or two hypotheses. Either the American manufacturers are unable to supply the demand, even with the enormous encouragement the duty affords, or they are unable to compete with the foreign makers in respect to quality. Will the increase in the tariff proposed by the McKinley bill advance the consumer in respect to either of these hypotheses? We do not believe that even the protectionist can see its way clear to an answer in the affirmative. If the American manufacturer cannot supply the demand it will be a serious damage to the American consumer to cut off the supply, and it would be no less a serious damage for the American consumer to be remitted to the home manufacturer if the latter makes only an inferior article. In either event the loss would be very poorly compensated by the consciousness that the Sheffield cutlers were suffering as well as the American consumers.

Says the Buffalo Courier: It is the opinion of the Commercial that, "if the McKinley bill passes in anything like its present shape it will result in paralysis to the Canadian agricultural interests."

According to the Federal Bureau of Statistics, the exports of the United States to Canada during the last eight years have exceeded the imports from Canada to the United States from $3,000,000 to $11,000,000 a year. It thus appears that upon the whole the Canadian trade has been quit profitable to the United States. But if, as the Commercial predicts, the passage of the McKinley bill will paralyze the Canadian agricultural interests, the Canadian market for United States products will also be paralyzed. What folly it is thus to destroy a profitable market! And singular to say, many of the advocates of this legislation are preaching reciprocity with the Central and South American countries.

An Arkansas correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal calls attention to one result of protection which he says is sometimes lost sight of. Here is an extract from his letter:

"The duty is so high on cutlery, for instance, that it enables the home manufacturer to furnish our knives, grubbing hoes, trace chains, etc., at such prices as to prevent foreign competition. The consequence is that we have to buy the home article, and the manufacturers make them so worthless that it is often impossible to get a good article. For instance, in the past five years I have purchased on an average not less than four grubbing hoes, or mattocks, per year, ranging in price from 65 cents to $1 each, not one of which was worth bringing home. This protection shuts out a good foreign article, and enables the dishonest home manufacturer to sell his worthless wares at a good price. It induces him to make them worthless, and thereby double and quadruple his sales. Just so of shoes. In the Confederate army I got a pair of 'British army shoes,' by blockade running, which lasted me thirteen months in the infantry service. Now I buy best brogans from Boston or the East, and never a pair has either [illegible]. So it is with tin and many other things. The idea I wish to present is this: A duty that virtually prevents foreign competition enables the Eastern manufacturer to control the market and to increase his sales. The more worthless his goods the more profitable to him, but at the same time the more ruinous to purchasers."

LATEST CROP REPORTS.

CORN STILL SUFFERING GREATLY FROM DROUGHT.

Pastures and Meadows Short—Lower Conditions of Corn—Spring Wheat Going Into the Stack and Threshing Commenced.

[Chicago dispatch.]

While certain districts and areas have been within the last week relieved by rains, yet the country at large stands badly in need of copious rains. With these general conditions there is no improvement in the outlook for corn. Meadows and pastures are still bad and root and vegetable crops continue to suffer. Excellent progress has been made with harvesting spring wheat and stacking and threshing are progressing favorably. Little grain is moving in the interior and prices for corn and oats and, in fact, all food, are generally higher than at distributing points.

Central Nebraska reports that Tuesday night the first rain fell for six weeks. How far, however, it will go toward improving the corn is hard to tell. Fifty per cent. of all the corn in Platte, Polk, York, Clay, 75 per cent. of Seward, Butler, Hamilton, Merrick, and Hall Counties is past redemption. The recent drought has so damaged corn that the result will be from nothing to 60 per cent. of the crop. Even the corn in those portions of the State that withstood the terrible effects of this long and protracted drought did not make any headway toward growing or maturing, but just seemed to hold itself at a certain condition without going backward. Potatoes are in very much the same shape as corn. They will yield from nothing to one-half of a crop. Rising Station, on the Union Pacific Road, in Butler County, shipped out last year over 600 cars of fine potatoes. This year they claim they at best will not have over fifty cars to ship.

Southern Nebraska considers the dry weather has injured the corn crop fully 70 per cent. Corn is selling freely at 50 to 55 cents a bushel to go South and West to local points. The chief reason which has made the drought so disastrous in Nebraska is this: It occurred at the very time when the shoots or ears were forming, and in the majority of the best fields of corn there is only about two-thirds of the stalks that have the semblance of an ear on them. Again, the wind and sun were so hot that they scorched the tassel and injured the pollen to such an extent that perfect ears of corn will be scarce.

The supply of old corn in farmers' hands is surprisingly small. It will not be handled by dealers, as many farmers will have to buy and sell to each other. The supply in dealers' hands is also small. Owing to the good prospects for corn about June 1 the majority of the ear corn in crib was shelled out and sent to market.

From Northern Indiana very gloomy accounts now come as to the damage from the terrible drought. The only good and large crop is the hay crop. There is practically no corn, no potatoes, no vegetables or fruit. Here and there on the river bottom is a small field of corn that may turn out a fair crop, and that is all. Already millers are beginning to look up a supply from abroad to keep their mills running. Central Indiana thinks that possibly it may get two-thirds of a crop of corn under the most favorable circumstances. In Southern Indiana the upland corn is badly damaged. The bottoms are a little better. Since the first of July there has been a shrinkage of over twenty-five per cent. in condition.

Southern Ohio reports that corn has suffered more during the last twenty days than during the whole season, and they do not look for at best over one-third of last year's crop.

Rains the present week have fallen in Illinois as far north as Bloomington. The general impression seems to be that the rains, as they were only local and the season so far advanced, have done no good to corn. For the last three weeks the corn crop has just been at a standstill. Considering the extreme drought, the only wonder is that it is as good as it is to-day.

The prospects for Northern and Central Illinois are for possibly 60 per cent. of a crop, with a probability, however, of not over half a crop. Stock-dealers, wherever they can find lots of corn, say from 1,000 to 2,000 bushels, in farmers' hands, are paying fifty to fifty-five cents for it to feed stock the coming fall and winter.

A correspondent who has just gone through the territory of Southern Minnesota and Southern Dakota, including the Jim River Valley, and stopped at every station, makes this report: An average crop of spring wheat of ten bushels to the acre as a minimum and twelve bushels as a maximum. He also reports that the thrashing machines were turning out a yield of from nine to eleven bushels. Reports covering Southern Wisconsin say that although the average was the same as last year the quantity will not be over half the crop of 1889. The quality will be very uneven, owing to hot weather while the berry was in the milk, causing it to shrink.

Southern Minnesota reports that farmers are now stacking and threshing. The damage by blight is much greater than was expected. Three-fourths of the wheat heads were not filled. The quality will be fair and the yield moderate. Reports from Southern Dakota show that wheat is nearly all in the stack, while a few are thrashing from the shock.

The yields from the thrashing-machine show the crop falling short of expectations from three to five bushels per acre. The highest yield reported is sixteen bushels, and the lowest nine. The rust and blight cut the crop short from 20 to 25 per cent.

Southern Illinois millers are free buyers of wheat, and farmers have been free sellers. Another report from this section says millers and dealers are taking everything they can buy at St. Louis prices, less freight. But little wheat is being shipped. The advance in prices seems only to bring out the wheat from those who cannot hold.

Michigan millers report the demand for flour large, and that they are taking freely all the wheat farmers have to offer. Central and Southern Indiana reports show that the millers are free buyers whenever they can get wheat at prices they consider reasonable. But the rapid advance in the last ten days tends to keep wheat from moving. Southern Missouri reports show that two-thirds of the wheat is now thrashed. Millers have bought all the wheat offered. The more prices have advanced the less wheat comes forward, and during the last week the receipts have been practically nothing.

GATHER IN SEASON.

BY JANE ALDRICH.

Among the green leaves gayly tossing,
The sun brings forth the cherries' gleam,
Beautiful, luscious, cornelian balls,
And in their midst I stand and dream—
Dream with my curly hair a-tangle—
I, but a barefoot country girl,
Dream that my head is crowned with jewels,
And satin-shod at balls I whirl.

Only fifteen that bright June morning,
And my first lover came that way,
Young and handsome, and but a student,
His heart at my bare feet to lay.
But bare feet sometimes spurn a lover;
I was so foolish, and just fifteen,
And love to me meant wealth and jewels,
And gay dresses fit for a queen.

So I tossed some cherries ruby-red,
And laughingly to him I cried:
"The one who wins, when he comes courting,
In a splendid carriage must ride."
"Do you mean it, Mollie, girl?" he asked;
And I answered, "Indeed, I do;
So if you'd bring a million of money,
Why, then I would marry with you."

That was ten years ago, and to-day
I stand under the same old tree;
My dreams were vain, the man with money
Has never come wooing to me.
I am not like the blithe young maiden!
Who was gathering the cherries red,
For curls and roses have sped with years!
That so quickly past me have fled.

Winnie, my winsome little sister,
Stands singing high up in the boughs;
Only fifteen, and a wealthy lover
Is now paying to her his vows.
My student, a judge now worth a million,
Who in his grand carriage can ride,
Stands now where he stood ten years ago,
And young Winnie will be his bride.

BETRAYED;

—OR—

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XXIV—(Continued.)

He thought it bad taste in Clara not to have maintained longer the high ideal his innocence had created for her.

Nevertheless, when he approached her house, and had the presentiment of her approving presence, he was troubled. Doubt and anxiety assailed him.

When he saw through the trees the window of her room his heart throbbed so violently that he had to sit down on the root of a tree for a moment.

"I love her like a madman!" he murmured. Then, leaping up suddenly, he exclaimed: "But she is only a woman after all. I shall go on."

For the first time Clara received him in her own apartment. She was sitting in an arm-chair, and, contrary to her custom, had no work in her hands.

She appeared calm, though two livid circles surrounded her eyes. She had evidently suffered much, and wept much.

On seeing this dear face worn and haggard with grief, Leland forgot the neat phrases he had prepared for his entrance. He forgot all except that he really adored her.

He advanced hastily toward her, seized in his two hands those of the young lady, and without speaking interrogated her eyes with tenderness and profound pity.

"It is nothing," she said, withdrawing her hand and bending her pale face gently; "I am better; I may even be happy, if you wish it."

There was in the smile, the look and the accent of Clara Denton something indefinable, which froze the blood of Leland.

He felt confusedly that she loved him, and yet was lost to him; that he had before him a species of being he did not understand, and that this woman, saddened, broken, and lost by love, yet loved something else in this world better even than that love.

She made him a slight sign which he obeyed like a child, and he sat down beside her.

"Mr. Leland," she said, in a voice tremulous at first, but which grew stronger as she proceeded, "I heard you last night—perhaps with a little too much patience. I shall now, in return, ask from you the same kindness. You have told me that you love me; and I avow frankly that I entertain a warm affection for you. Such being the case, we must either separate forever, or unite ourselves by the only tie worthy of us both. To part would affect me much, and I also believe it would occasion grief to you. To unite ourselves—for my own part I would be willing to give you my life; but I cannot do it, I cannot wed you without manifest folly. You are younger than I am, I think." Then hurriedly:

"But there is another reason. I do not belong to myself. I belong to my daughter, to my family, to my past. In giving up my name for yours I would wound—I would cruelly wound all the friends who surround me, and, I believe, some who exist no longer.

"Well, sir," she continued, after a moment's hesitation, "I have discovered a way by which we may avoid breaking off an intimacy so pleasant and sweet to both of us—in fact, to make it closer, if anything. My proposal may surprise you, but have the kindness to think over it, and do not say no at once."

She glanced at him, and was terrified at the pallor which overspread his face.

She gently took his hand and said:

"Listen patiently."

"Speak on," he muttered, hoarsely.

"Mr. Leland," she continued, with her angelic smile, "you have seen and admired my heart's darling—my friend and companion, Mildred Lester. You know how much she is to me. Since she first came to us I have learned to love her with all my heart. She is more than a friend—more than a sister to me. Having watched over her so long and constantly, I have all a mother's feeling and affection for her. She is, she must ever be the same to me as my own child. She is beautiful—far more beautiful than I am, and since she has wholly recovered her physical health, her mind has developed with marvelous rapidity; and although a portion of her life is yet a blank, in education and refinement she is the peer of any lady in the land. Warren Leland, I desire you to make Mildred Lester your wife!"

Leland started abruptly to his feet and seized the woman by the wrist, casting a searching look into her eyes. Then, as he realized the full purport of her words, he sank back as one thunderstruck.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE LINES DRAWING NEARER.

Clara Denton regarded her companion anxiously for a moment, and then said:

"I swear to you that I shall be very happy if you only tell me you will consent to what I have proposed."

His answer, when it came, was an impatient exclamation of irony and anger. Then he said:

"You will pardon me, madam, if so sudden a change in my sentiments cannot be as prompt as you wish."

She blushed slightly.

"Yes," she said, with a faint smile, "I can understand how you feel about it at this moment; but try to familiarize yourself with the idea, try to look upon me as her elder sister—her mother, if you will, and all may yet come right, and—and we may be very happy soon."

The soul of Leland was a perverted, not a base one, and was suddenly touched at this woman's heroism. He rendered it the greatest homage he could pay, for his eyes suddenly filled with tears.

She observed it, for she watched with an anxious eye the slightest impression she produced upon him. So she continued more cheerfully:

"And see, Mr. Leland, how this will settle everything. In this way we can continue to see each other without danger, because your affianced wife will be always between us. Our sentiments will soon be in harmony with our new thoughts. Even your future prospects, which, in a way, will also be mine, will encounter fewer obstacles, because I shall push them more openly, without revealing to my father what ought to remain a secret between us two.

"He thinks the world of Mildred, and I can let him suspect my hopes, and that will enlist him in your service. Above all, I repeat to you that this will insure my happiness. Will you thus accept the peculiar affection I offer?"

Leland, by a powerful effort of will, had recovered his self-control.

"Pardon me, Mrs. Denton," he said, with a faint smile, "but this is all so sudden and strange." Then abruptly:

"But who is Mildred Lester? You have never told me, and once you promised to do so."

"She is an orphan, of good parentage, and has but one relative in the world, a brother, who is now traveling. To all intents and purposes, my father is her guardian and protector."

"She came to you under peculiar circumstances, I believe?"

"Yes, she was traveling with her brother, and was seriously injured in the great railway accident at Cos Cob. He brought her here, and hired the little cottage belonging to us on the lower road, but soon consented to her being taken into our own family."

"Her injuries affected her mind to a certain extent?"

"They affected her memory. For a long time after the fever left her, all her past life was a blank; but by little and little certain things have come back to her, and again, other things have rushed upon her memory like a great awakening, as, for instance, her musical and other accomplishments. Still, she cannot recall her parents, nor any dear friends, not even her brother, and there is yet a wide gap in her past life."

"It is very singular," mused Leland.

"And yet not without a parallel," said Clara. "I have been informing myself on the subject, and have found many cases quite similar."

"Generally speaking, her mind seems very bright," remarked the gentleman.

"Unusually so; she has a thirst for knowledge, and seems to comprehend, as by intuition, everything she hears and reads."

"And now you have told me all you know about her?"

"Yes, except what you already know, that she is the dearest, the best girl in all the world."

"And, seriously, you wish me to marry her?"

"Yes, it is the one great wish of my heart."

"But pardon me, dear madam. What is it you ask of me? Do you yourself fully comprehend? Have you reflected well on this? Can either of us contract, without imprudence, an engagement of such a delicate nature?"

"I demand no positive engagement of you at this time," she replied, "for I feel that would be unreasonable. You must be fully satisfied about Mildred first, of course. But if you give me any encouragement at all, this is what I propose: You shall secure us respectable quarters in New York, convenient to some great physician—a specialist, and we will remove there with the least possible delay; and whatever can be done to restore her completely to her former self shall be done.

"I believe—I almost know she loves you already, and if you marry her I am convinced she will make you an excellent wife. Think—do think, Mr. Leland; she is so much to me, I love her better than a sister, I regard her—I love her as though she were my own child."

Still Leland did not speak.

"Well, take time to think over it," she went on, "and return to give me your decision, should it be favorable. If not, we must bid each other adieu."

"Mrs. Denton," said Leland, rising and standing before her, "I will promise never to address a word to you which a dear brother might not utter to a sister, or a son to his mother. Is it not this which you demand?"

Clara Denton fixed upon him for an instant her beautiful eyes, full of joy and gratitude, then suddenly covered her face with her two hands.

"Thanks," she murmured; "you are so good! I am very happy?"

She extended her hand, wet with her tears, which he took and pressed to his lips, bowed low, and left the room.

If there ever was a moment in his fatal career when the young man was worthy of admiration, it was this.

His love for Clara Denton, however unworthy of her it might be, was, nevertheless, great. It was the only true passion he had ever felt.

At the moment when he saw this love, the triumph of which he thought certain, escape him forever, he was, not only wounded in his pride but was crushed in his heart. Yet he took the stroke like a gentleman.

His agony was well borne. His first bitter words, checked at once, alone betrayed what he suffered.

He was as pitiless for his own sorrows as he sought to be for those of others. He indulged in none of the common injustice habitual to discarded lovers.

He recognized the decision of Mrs. Denton as true and final, and was not tempted for a moment to mistake it for one of those equivocal arrangements by which women sometimes deceive themselves, and of which men always take advantage.

He saw that the sacred refuge he had sought was inviolable.

He neither argued nor protested against her resolve. He submitted to it, and nobly kissed the hand which smote him.

As to the miracle of courage, chastity, and faith by which Clara Denton had transformed and purified her love, he cared not to dwell upon it.

This example, which opened to his view a divine soul naked, so to speak, destroyed his theories.

One word which escaped him, while passing to his own house, proved the judgment which he passed upon it from his own point of view.

"Very childish," he muttered, "but sublime!"

On returning home, Leland found a letter from his father notifying him of his sister's marriage with Eugene Cleveland, which was to take place in a few days, and requesting him to come to New York without delay.

The marriage was to be strictly private, with only the family to assist at it.

Leland did not regret this hasty summons, as it gave him the excuse for some diversion in his thoughts, of which he felt the need.

He was greatly tempted to leave at once to diminish his sufferings, but conquered this weakness.

The next evening he passed at Nathan Metcalf's, and, though his heart was bleeding, piqued himself on presenting an unclouded brow and an inscrutable smile to Clara.

He announced his speedy departure, and explained the reason.

"You will present my best wishes to your family," said Mr. Metcalf, "and especially to your sister; I hope she may be happy."

"Thanks, sir; I shall bear your good wishes with pleasure."

As for Clara, to tell of all the delicate attentions and exquisite delicacies that the tender female spirit knows so well how to apply to heal the wounds it has inflicted, how gracefully she glided into her maternal and sisterly relations with Leland—to tell all this would require a pen wielded by her own soft hands.

At parting, and while for a moment they were alone together in the hall, she reminded him that he was to secure quarters for herself and Mildred in New York.

He assured her that he would not forget, and then, with a gentle pressure of the hand, departed.

The next day he left Roxbury for the great city.

One week later, Clara Denton and Mildred Lester were established in comfortable quarters on Madison avenue, only one block away from the palatial mansion which sheltered the guilty head of Cora Elliston.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE REPTILE MOVES.

The Hon. Sherwood Elliston remained in New York for some days. At the formal request of his nephew, he called upon his old friend Sidney Leland, and demanded for Eugene his daughter's hand, at the same time assuring the banker that he charged himself with the future of the young couple.

In secret, Floral Leland had long admired, and of late had learned to love, Eugene Cleveland. Her happiness, then, when she heard her father's announcement after dinner that day, may be imagined, but can hardly be described.

Indeed, it would be painful to dwell on the joy she felt, and her only regret was, that Eugene had not come to her in person to press his suit.

But Eugene had not the heart to do so. He remained at his counting-room all the morning, and only called at the Lelands' when he had learned that his overture was accepted.

Once having resolved on this monstrous actions, the worst part of which he did not himself know, he was determined to carry it through in the most correct manner, and by this time he was master of all those arts.

After he had withdrawn, Flora flew to her mother, who, believing in Cleveland, shared her happiness, and they sat together a long time, hand clasped in hand, looking out upon the garden, dimly seen by the soft light of the stars, the daughter blessing her mother, her friends, everybody, and the mother thanking God; both mingling their hearts, their dreams, their kisses, and their tears—happier, poor women, than is permitted long to human beings under the heavens.

The marriage took place the ensuing month. Senator Elliston was present, and when he returned to Washington this time he was accompanied by his wife.

At the earnest request of his bride's parents, Eugene took up his residence with them, and Warren Leland still had a suite of apartments in the same stately and commodious manion.

His political campaign had now opened, and he was very busy, visiting Roxbury or some other town in the Congressional district every day; but in order to be near Mrs. Denton, and particularly Mildred Lester, in whom—must we confess it?—he was beginning to feel a rapidly growing interest, he spent most of his nights in New York.

Finding presently that he could not attend to all his correspondence alone, he began to look about him for a private secretary, and soon one presented himself and was promptly engaged.

It was—Oscar Slyme!

The extraordinary session of Congress that commanded the presence of Senator Elliston in Washington was still dragging its weary length along.

Cora endured it for some time, and then, informing her husband that it was necessary for her to visit New York, promptly returned to that city.

A few days later Oscar Slyme threw up his situation and followed her.

The next day after his arrival he was installed as Warren Leland's private secretary.

He lived in the same house with them. He came early in the morning, after breakfast, passed the day in Warren's private room, and often dined with them, if he had work to finish in the evening.

Instinctively, Flora disliked him from the first.

"His name is a bad one to begin with," she said.

"Yes," rejoined her mother; "but the man himself is a good enough creature, except that I somewhat dislike his catlike style of looking at one."

"I don't like him," reiterated Flora. "He has such a peculiar pride, or perhaps I should say insufferable vanity. But his great fault, in my eyes, is the scoffing tone he adopts when the subject is religion or morals."

Eugene entered the room in time to catch his wife's last remark. He said nothing at the time; but that day, while they were dining, Slyme allowed himself to indulge in a rather violent tirade of this description. It was doubtless contrary to all good taste.

"My dear Slyme," said Eugene, quietly and yet ironically, "to me, and perhaps Mr. Leland, these pleasantries of yours are indifferent; but pray remember that, while you are a strong-minded man, my wife is a weak-minded woman; and strength, you know, should respect weakness."

Oscar Slyme first grew white, then red, and finally green. He arose, bowed awkardly, and immediately afterward left the table.

The moment he was gone, Flora said to her brother.

"You may think me indiscreet, but pray let me ask you a question. How can you confide all your affairs and all your secrets to a man who professes to have no principles?"

Warren laughed.

"Oh, he talks thus out of bravado," he answered. "He thinks to make himself more interesting in your eyes by these Mephistophelean airs. At bottom he is a good fellow.

"But," objected Flora, "he has faith in nothing."

"Not in much, I believe. Yet he would not deceive me. He is an honorable man."

Flora opened her eyes wide at this.

"Well," said her brother, with an amused look, "what is the matter, Flo?"

"What is this honor you speak of?"

"Let me ask you, sis," he replied.

"Great heavens!" she cried, blushing deeply, "I know but little of it, but it seems to me that honor separated from morality is no great thing; and morality without religion is nothing. They all constitute a chain. Honor hangs to the last link, like a flower; but if the chain be broken, honor falls with the rest."

Her husband, who heretofore had remained silent, looked at her with strange eyes, as though he were not only confounded but disquieted by her philosophy. Then he gave a deep sigh, and rising, said:

"Very neat, that definition—very neat."

"Yes, by Jove!" exclaimed her brother, "I didn't know Flo had so much in her!"

That night, at the opera, Eugene was very attentive to his wife. Cora accompanied them; and at parting, Flora begged her to call for her next day in passing to Broadway and Twenty-third street, on a shopping expedition, for this magnificent woman was her idol, and she loved to be with her.

On their return home Eugene remained silent, contrary to his custom.

Suddenly he said, brusquely:

"Flora, are you going out shopping with Mrs. Elliston to-morrow?"

"Yes."

"But you see her often, it seems to me—morning and evening. You are always with her."

"Heavens! I do it to be agreeable to you. Is not Mrs. Elliston a good associate?"

"Excellent; only in general I do not admire female friendships. But I did wrong to speak to you on this subject. You have wit and discretion enough to preserve the proper limits."

For some time after her marriage Flora was quite happy, but gradually she became less so; for the first enthusiasm and first illusions of marriage could not for long deceive a spirit as quick and acute as hers.

A young girl who marries is easily deceived by the show of an affection of which she is the object.

It is rare that she does not adore her husband, and believe she is adored by him, simply because he has married her.

The young heart opens spontaneously and diffuses its delicate perfume of love and its soft songs of tenderness; and enveloped in this heavenly cloud all around it is love.

But little by little it frees itself, and, too often, recognizes that this delicious harmony and intoxicating atmosphere which charmed it came only from itself.

Thus was it here; as far as the pen can render the shadows of a female soul. Such were the impressions which, day after day, penetrated the very soul of poor little Flo.

It was nothing more than this, but this was everything to her.

The idea of being betrayed by her husband, and that, too, with cruel premeditation, had never risen to torture her soul.

But, beyond certain delicate attentions, she felt herself disdained and slighted.

Marriage had not changed Eugene's habits; he dined at home, instead of at a restaurant or hotel, that was all.

She believed herself loved, however, but with a lightness that was almost offensive.

Yet, though she was sometimes sad and nearly in tears, you could see that she did not despair, and that this valiant little heart attached itself with intrepid confidence to all the happy chances the future might have in store for it.

Eugene continued very indifferent, as one may readily comprehend, to the agitation which tormented this young heart, but which never occurred to him for a moment.

For himself, strange as it may appear, he was happy enough.

This marriage had been a painful step to take; but once confirmed in his sin, he became reconciled to it.

But his conscience, seared as it was, had some living fibers in it; and he would not have failed in the duty he thought he owed to his wife.

These sentiments were composed of a sort of indifference blended with pity.

He was vaguely sorry for the poor girl, whose existence was absorbed and destroyed between those of two beings of nature superior to her own, and the fate to which she was condemned.

He resolved never to neglect anything that might extenuate its rigor; but he belonged, nevertheless, more than ever solely to the passion which was the supreme crime of his life.

For his intrigue with Cora Elliston, constantly excited by mystery and danger and conducted with profound address by a woman whose cunning was equal to her beauty, continued as strong, after months of enjoyment, as at first.

The gracious courtesy of Eugene, on which he piqued himself, as regarded his wife, had its limits, as Flora perceived whenever she attempted to abuse it.

Thus, on several occasions, she declined receiving company, on the ground of indisposition, hoping her husband would not abandon her to her solitude.

She was in error.

Eugene gave her, in reality, under these circumstances, a tete-a-tete of a few moments after dinner; but later he would leave her with perfect tranquillity.

Perhaps in an hour she would receive a packet of bonbons, or a pretty basket of choice fruit, that would permit her to pass the evening as best she might.

These little gifts she sometimes shared with her mother, sometimes with Slyme, her brother's secretary.

Slyme, for whom she had at first conceived an aversion, was gradually getting into her good graces.

In the absence of Eugene, she always found him at hand, and referred to him for many little details, such as addresses, invitations, the selection of books, and the purchase of pictures.

From this came a certain familiarity; she began to call him Slyme, or friend Slyme, while he zealously performed all her little commissions.

He manifested for her a great deal of respectful attention, and even refrained from indulging in the skeptical sneers which he knew displeased her.

Happy to witness this reform and to testify her gratitude, she invited him to remain on two or three evenings when he came to her rooms to take his leave, and talked with him of books and the theaters.

Being indisposed for some little time, Eugene passed the first two evenings with her until nine o'clock. But this effort fatigued him, and the poor woman who had already erected an edifice for the future on this frail basis had the mortification of observing that on the third evening he had resumed his bachelor habits.

This was a great blow to her, and her sadness became greater than it had been up to that time—so much so, in fact, that solitude was almost unbearable.

Unfortunately, her father and mother were away, and in the intervals she adopted the habit of retaining Slyme, or even sending for him. Eugene himself, three-fourths of the time, would bring him in before going out in the evening.

"I bring you Slyme, my dear," he would say, "and a good author. You can read him together."

Slyme read well; and though his heavy, declamatory style frequently annoyed Flora, she thus managed to kill many a long evening, while waiting the return of her mother.

We all know with what strange clairvoyance a mind possessed with a fixed idea discovers resemblances and allusions in accidental description. Flora perceived without doubt some remote connection between her husband and Faust—between herself and Marguerite—for she could not help showing that she was strongly agitated.

When Marguerite in prison cries out in her agony and madness, a blending of confused sentiments, of powerful sympathies, of vague apprehension, suddenly seized on her breast. One can scarcely imagine their force—to the verge of distracting her.

She turned on the lounge and closed her beautiful eyes, as if to keep back the tears which rolled under the fringe of her beautiful lashes.

At this moment Slyme cased to read, dropped his book, sighed profoundly, and stared for a moment.

Then he threw himself at Flora's feet, took her hand, and said with a tragic sigh:

"Poor angel!"

A Case of "Sure Thing" Gone Wrong.

"One of my toughest experiences," said a well-known turfman yesterday, "was the loss of a bet of $500 occasioned through a money-lender's extreme caution.

"A number of us were one day discussing a certain Shylock, who was generally conceded to be the closest man in the country to deal with.

"'I'll bet $500 even that I can borrow $1,000 of him on my personal recognizance,' said I.

"'Done,' answered the crowd simultaneously.

"As I could not stake enough for more than one bet they pooled against me. I had a sure thing. The money was placed and off I went with a committee of two to borrow the cash.

"'Mr. Isaacs,' I said, 'these gentlemen have bet me $500 that I cannot borrow $1,000 of you. I do not need the money, but I want you to let me have it for one day only and I'll divide the bet with you.'

"The effect was not what I looked for. Instead of jumping at the chance of making $250 he looked at me, then at the committee (who were confounded at my cool swindle, for they so termed it), and finally he buttonholed me and said:

"'Did you make that bet?'

"'I did,' said I

"'Did you bet $500 you could borrow the money of me?'

"'That's what I did.'

"'Then,' said he in a whisper that I alone could hear, 'go and hedge.'"—Kansas City Times.

LET republicans answer this: How can we expect the state debt to decrease, while the present spendthrift republican state officers are standing with both feet in the trough?

THE Columbus Ind. Republican says, "What this state wants is a republican legislature and a slightly increased tax levy." This frank admission is respectfully submitted to the Waterloo Press.

IT is very laughable to hear republicans talk about Indiana districts being gerrymandered by the democrats. It shows dense ignorance. They ought to be shown a map of the last republican gerrymander of this state.

THE G. A. R. elected a new commander-in-chief last week at the great Boston meeting. The fortunate veteran is Col. W. C. Veazey, of Vermont. Our own Governor Hovey was a candidate, but withdrew early in the race.

A MAN, in Kansas, who was a lieutenant during the rebellion, lately drew $36,503 from the government as his regular pay, for he had never been mustered out. He had been wounded in 1863 and sent home as disabled. He will also draw a good pension on his wound.

IF a tariff does not add to the cost, why do not the consumers and purchasers of taxed articles ask for a high duty? It will be noticed that those who ask for high rates of tariff tax are the manufacturers and producers of manufactured articles. Here is a nut for some ambitious high tax republican to crack.

IF the statements published in the Dispatch, as to the states revenues and expenses are correct, and we suppose they are, what course would the Dispatch advise, to improve it? That paper has volunteered advice on every subject from entomology to bridge building, but seems unusually silent on this point.

REPUBLICAN papers not being able to discuss the tariff robbery, are trying to draw attention from this by talking state finance, and state debt. It now becomes the pleasant duty of democratic papers to inform them that for the past ten years, half at least of the state's business has been in the hands of the republicans. Sorry they don't understand state politics.

REPUBLICAN politicians are going around among the farmers saying in substance, "Give us a majority in the legislature and we will pass a law taxing you higher." Democrats propose to put in a set of state officers, who will attend to business, not overdraw the appropriations, and by saving the state's money, have some left to pay on the debt without raising the levy.

THE New York and Erie railway, better known as the "Erie," bought the Chicago and Atlantic road last week for $5,000,000. This is the road on which the Wabash now runs trains from Chicago to Laketon. And it is also claimed that the controlling interest in the Wabash is now in the hands of the Canada Pacific, that is expecting to run over the Wabash line from Detroit to Chicago.

THE INDIANAPOLIS JOURNAL, the republican state organ, wants "an anti-democratic legislature, that will adopt a plan to put the state out of debt." Please name the plan. The Press denies the plan of raising the tax levy higher. How would it do to put in democratic state officers, and turn out the present republicans, who don't seem to do anything but spend their time in idleness?

SOME republican ought to nudge the elbow of the Dispatch. It gives its party's plans away with such freshness. As in the case of its last spring's attack on the town's credit it now says, the statement of the state's finances "should be clipped out and carefully perused just before election." Quite frank in both cases. All they care for, is to have their "statement" read just before election.

LEMCKE, state treasurer, and Carr, state auditor, both republicans, are asked by the Sentinel, why they borrowed in April 1889, $270,000 more money than the legislature authorized them to borrow. "Was there no money in the treasury at the time? If not, what had you done with the proceeds of the temporary lone authorized by the legislature? I there was money in the treasury, by what authority did you borrow more?" Perhaps the Auburn Dispatch can answer this.

MICHENER, republican attorney general for this state, is also chairman of the republican Central Committee, in which latter business he spends his time, allowing cheap deputies to do his office work. He wants to be the next United States Senator, and so has ordered their papers over the state, including those in this county, to say that democratic extravagance has got the state into debt. But his own record shows whose extravagance has done this. It is the state officers' loose management. In 1879 the democratic legislature fixed the salary of assistant or clerk to the attorney general, at $600, and the democratic officers used only that much. The next legislature was republican, and to please the republican attorney general, Baldwin, they passed a law putting the salary, of assistant at "not over $2,000," and appropriated $1,000 to start with, or $400 more than the democrats had it. But it stood at $1,000 till Michener came into office in 1886, and as the legislature that winter did nothing, he, as chief law adviser, construed the fees of his own office to mean, that the law saying it must "not exceed $2,000," and the appropriation of $1,000 for actual use, were both in operation, and he was entitled to use both. So, he hired a ward heeler extra, as clerk, at $900, and gave his deputy $1,500, or $400 above the outside limit of the law, and $1,800 more than the democrats had fixed it. Our last legislature, again cut the appropriation down to $600, and fixed that as the limit. Yet Michener goes right on drawing $1,800 a year more than the law allows, and a set of republican officers allow it to be done. It is a downright steal, and yet Michener has the cheek to talk about democratic extravagance. With two clerks, he can put in all his time at republican headquarters, and like the other state officers, can lounge around, and let the state government run itself. Give us a democratic legislature, and $600 for clerk hire for that office, and $2,400. And we ask a similar economy for all the other offices.

As to Fairs.

WATERLOO, Ind., Aug. 19, 90.

EDITOR COURIER—In company with President John L. Davis, I went to visit the new fair grounds yesterday. I was pleased to see the progress that had been made in the erecting of buildings. They are of a substantial character, and I think, in the main, well calculated for the different parts for which they are designed. Owing to the extended drouth throughout the entire state, I fear that the exhibits at our county fairs will be greatly affected, especially in the line of fruits and vegetables. But that need not affect the show of live stock, machines and other departments of the fairs. DeKalb county does not have to take a back seat in her live stock departments. As you are aware, we had the services of Mr. Evan H. Peed, of Newcastle, Ind., as an expert judge in the horse department of the Waterloo fair last year. He has been a member of the State Board of Agriculture, for many years, and is recognized as one of the best judges of horses in the state. His services have been called for at many of the best fairs in the state. After giving the class of aged stallions a careful examination and passing upon their merits, he said to me that the exhibit in that class was equal to anything he had ever seen shown at any fair, and was not beaten even by the great show at our state fair. Three of the horses in that exhibit were owned by Messrs. Lockwood and Clark, of Auburn, and one by Simons Bros., near LaOtto. I took it as a great compliment, not only to the men who had the enterprise and public spirit to invest their money in such stock, but also to the farmers of the county, whose patronage makes it possible to introduce such valuable stock in the county. As you well know, the enterprising men of the country who put their money into fair grounds and buildings, do not do so with the expectation of getting immediate cash returns. But the good that such enterprises do to each county can hardly be estimated in dollars and cents. When the first fair was held at Waterloo nineteen years ago, there was not one pedigreed animal in DeKalb county. Let both fairs work in harmony.

Respectfully,
R. M. LOCKHART.

The Old 129th.

This gallant old regiment will hold its reunion in Auburn this year, on the 2nd day of October. They had several towns from which to select, and they chose our own beautiful little city. Let us see that they are not disappointed. We have a reputation for hospitality on occasions of this kind, second to none, and we should maintain it fully for the 129th so many of whose "boys" came from this county. Company F, still has many of its members within our borders, or near here. Let us give them a right royal welcome. Our people will no doubt give them free entertainment, while they are here, and we ought to add an entertainment of a literary character in the evening. Let our people talk it over and get ready. They will be with us Oct. 2. Let us make it pleasant for them.

Special Premium at the Fair.

The Board has made a special premium for display of flowers and flowering and foliage plants; $10 for first and $5 for second premium. Also, they have added in graded draft horses and roadsters the word "gelding." So it will read: "Best mare or gelding," 4, 3, 2 and 1 year-olds.

Judge McClellan's Votes.

Let it be borne in mind by the people, that Judge McClellan's votes have all been in favor of legislation that would reduce their burdens, or in some way favor them and their interests. His income tax bill—if republicans enough to help pass it, would give their help, would relieve the people of many millions of taxes and place that much of the burdens of taxation on those who are able to pay, because their annual incomes are great. And on these great incomes they now pay nothing. It is not the Judge's fault, that this beneficent law is not already in force. The democratic members were in favor of it, and with the help of a few republican members it could have been passed last spring.

His vote on the silver bill, was in favor of increasing the volume of money in circulation and making the silver dollar as good as the gold dollar, just as it ought to be. There is no reason why silver should not have free coinage as well as gold. Before the republicans came into power it was coined free, and no one thought of silver, except as the equal of gold. It must come to this some day. The right will prevail. We are glad to see the farmers especially, discussing these questions. They cannot understand why gold should be petted up and silver abused. One is as good money as the other to anyone except those who can get wealthy by keeping silver in the back ground, and gold at the front. Both these great questions should be discussed in all the farmers' meetings along with the tariff and similar living questions.

* * *

We come now to Judge McClellan's votes on the tariff, as far as Boss Reed gave them a chance to vote. Reed, the tyranical speaker did not give the democrats a chance to speak if he could help it. His plan was not to look that way when a democrat arose to speak. But if a republican arose, he caught the speaker's eye at once and was permitted to speak. But as often as a clause of the tariff bill came up, if Reed permitted amendments to be offered Judge McClellan and the democratic members kept trying to get the already heavy tariff tax reduced in favor of the farmers and common people generally. The motion and votes show this and anyone who will look over the Record can see it. Let the people discuss these things, for the people are the government. The people furnish the armies in time of war and furnish the means for their subsistence while at the front. And in times of peace, they furnish the taxes that help to pay the debt incurred by the war, and what is needed for the running expenses of the government. So we say let the people be heard. Give them at least an equal chance with the man of wealth whose taxes are correspondingly less, while his benefits are greater. The Judge has been sound on these questions. Look and see.

* * *

Judge McClellan, has also favored, the plan of having the government furnish all the paper money used by the people. There never has been any reason why this should not be done. We have now in use three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks. But we use and need several hundred millions more of paper money. Let the government issue all of it. Let the people discuss these questions. There is not half the danger of their getting the country into trouble, as there is from the meddling of Jay Goulds and Vanderbilts.

Solid for McClellan.

The Fort Wayne Journal of a recent date says: We reproduce this morning an article from the LaGrange Democrat on district politics. We notice the Democrat because it merits attention, for in and out of season it has been loyal to the party and all the nominees. Its editor, Mr. Fawcett, fears that if Allen county is not recognized in the state convention some one will oppose Judge McClellan in the congressional convention. We have no interest or purpose to serve by an early or late convention, for nothing, absolutely nothing can provoke opposition to Judge McClellan, especially in Allen county. At first his silence in the halls of congress was oppressive and disappointing, but when he did speak he won at once the attention of his countrymen, and to-day from coast to coast his praises are resounded. His speech on the tariff question is a marvelous effort, and only a great mind could conceive it. In the state contest Allen county asks the support of the district for Mr. Berghoff and will appreciate all outside assistance long after the echoes of the convention are lost in space. He is a warm supporter of Judge McClellan and whatever the fates decree him at Indianapolis, whether the district convention is early or late, he will be at LaGrange, a very good and convenient point, by the way, to vote for and greet Judge McClellan with a solid delegation from this, the Gilbraltar of democracy. Do as much for him, gentlemen of the north, and you won't regret it.

Agree with McClellan.

The Missouri Farmers' Alliance had a monster meeting at Sedalia, in that state last Thursday. The platform they adopted, looks as if they had consulted Judge McClellan before writing it. We quote from the official report to show how near to the Judge's plan the farmers are getting. The report says: "The report of the committee on platform was made and adopted. The principal planks are: That public land shall be reserved for actual settlers and that alien ownership be forever prohibited; that such a revision of the tariff be made as will lay the heaviest burdens on the luxuries and the lightest on the necessities of life; that all money be issued directly by the government and national banks abolished; free and unlimited coinage of silver; an income tax on all incomes over $1,000.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The item published in the Ft. Wayne papers, of the finding while digging a cellar, of four hundred pounds of silver melted and run into bars, was only a story so far as the silver was concerned. The bars were found, but they were iron, or some metal of no more value.

New Dressmaking Establishment.

Miss Maud Sheets, well and favorably known to our people will open a dressmaking establishment in the new Sheets block south of the public square. She will occupy the room at the northeast corner, on the second floor, where all are invited to call and see her work. She has had an experience of three years in business in Garrett and has been very successful. She takes especial pride in giving perfect fits, as all her former patrons can testify. Remember the place.

To The State Convention.

There will be a special train to the democratic state convention, leaving Ft. Wayne over the Wabash Main line Wednesday, August 27, at 12 noon. Fare for round trip from Ft. Wayne to Indianapolis, is only $2.50. This will accommodate delegates and others who may wish to go from DeKalb county and other localities. We start on the south bound Jackson mail train that goes through Summit, at 9:08; Waterloo, at 9:20; Auburn, 9:33; New Era, 9:47, and reaches Ft. Wayne at 10:20. At noon we take the special over the old line of the Wabash, and reach Indianapolis at 4:30 in the afternoon. Returning, leave Indianapolis on Thursday evening after convention closes. But those who want to stay longer, can have one more day, their tickets being good on every train over the same lines on Friday, August 29. Any one can go whether a delegate or not. We hope as many delegates as can, will go, and as many others as possible. It will give all a chance to see the city, and the great Hendricks monument, the soldiers' monument, and many other objects of interest, and at a rate never before secured.

Teachers' County Institute.

The county institute begins here on Monday, Sept., 1, and closes Friday evening of the same week. Good teachers have been secured by Mr. Merica and we are assured of work, equal to the best ever done at previous institutes. The lecturers are of more than ordinary ability. Dr. T. J. Bassett lectures Monday evening; Prof. Chas. DeGarmo, of Normal, Ill., lectures Tuesday evening; Miss Lucie May Wiant gives an elocutionary entertainment Wednesday evening and on Thursday evening we have the famous Frank Beard, the caricaturist, of whom every body has heard. He is at present doing this line of art work for the "Judge" magazine. Friday evening is the lecture by Geo. R. Wendling, one of the very best in the field. Bassett and DeGarmo will do work all the week. We also will have president H. B. Brown of the Valparaiso Normal, a part of the time. All in all, it will be a grand institute. We hope to see every teacher present, and as many of our citizens, here and elsewhere, as can spare the time to attend. It will richly repay anyone.

All who have business with D. Z. Hoffman, and all who have real estate to sell, or parties wanting abstracts, deeds or mortgages made, call at my office over Farmers Bank, first door at the right, on the second floor. D. Z. Hoffman.

Curtis F. Ash, writes us from Kansas City, Mo., for the COURIER to be sent to him. He does not state what business he is in, but as he was always, even when a mere lad, of a natural turn for business we have no doubt but he is where the wide-awake DeKalb boy always gets—in a front seat.

Harter & Co. have fitted up their basement for storing carpets and similar goods. In fact, this will be their carpet room, where their fine line of goods can be seen to the best advantage. The room is neat and newly fitted up, with abundance of light, just what is needed for the satisfactory inspection of pretty colors and designs. It will add to the many attractive features of that popular store.

Mr. Wheelock experienced a strange trouble in his bridge work on Ninth street last week. At the east abutment the workmen, in digging for the foundation came on an old stump, that defied all their efforts for a day or two. At last it was pulled out bodily, after a vast amount of digging and other work. It is a regular old settler and the delay and work of removing it must have made it a pretty dear stump.

J. J. VanAuken has been selected to see that a portion of the east part of the woods on the fair ground is reserved and kept clean for the use of the people who bring their dinners at the fair. A good idea. We are also informed that the weeds will all be cut down on all parts of the ground, which will save people much annoyance. The officers are doing all they can to make it a success. It begins Sept. 8.

The Dispatch is authority for the statement that T. Fuzzy Rinehart has sailed for Europe. Had T. Fuzzy been thoughtful enough to write to the COURIER, we would so far have forgiven him for skipping his polltax as to wire him that "holtz" is the best high German for "stovewood." That knowledge would enable him to procure the material with which to fill his trunk, should he desire to show the Kaiser's marshal the little trick of running off and leaving a trunk full of wood in that officer's hands. "Donnerwetter!" what a time T. Fuzzy could have, if he only had a few pointers.

Farmers' Institute.

A letter from Prof. W. C. Latta, of the faculty of Purdue, informs us that a farmers' institute will be held in each county, $40 for each county having been set apart for that work by the last legislature. The date for DeKalb county is put down as Dec. 3 and 4, a two days session. Prof. Latta desires the opinions of leading farmers and business men of the county as to which is the most desirable place to hold the meeting. All interested should write him at Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana.

The Wauseon boys beat our local base ball club again last Saturday, by a score of 7 to 3. It was a very good game, but there was the usual amount of kicking on the decisions of the umpire.

We see many new sidewalks going down in all parts of town. This is as it should be. Our town is already noted for its good walks, and our people are bound to keep up this desirable reputation.

The board of fair directors met on the grounds Monday to inspect the work already done. Eighteen were present, and all expressed gratification at the way the grounds and buildings had been fitted up.

Supt. Glazier, of the County Home, will take five children who have been staying there, to Mishawaka this week, to the Orphans' Home. But his family will still be the same, for last week a family of five were brought up from St. Joe, and placed in the Home. It is said they have some property. If so, it would seem strange that they could be supported by the county.

The Catholic social Saturday evening was well patronized, everybody appearing to remember that it had been some years since they had asked any patronage of the general public. It proved a very pleasant affair, for the ladies had taken every pains to make it a success, and to make the visitors enjoy it. We did not learn what the receipts were, but we have no doubt they were satisfactory.

The Lake Shore road will sell tickets at half fare, Aug. 27 and 28, from all stations, for the benefit of those who wish to go to Indianapolis to attend the democratic state convention. Our people will probably wish to go over this line to Ft. Wayne, where they can join the excursion going over the Wabash, by way of Peru. The round trip to Ft. Wayne will be only 90 cents. Tickets good returning the 29th.

The Lagrange Democrat, one of the staunchest party papers in the district, has been asking to have the congressional convention held in that town. While it would not be as convenient to some parts of the district as a point more centrally located, still we think the Democrat's view is quite reasonable, and we do not believe the people of this part of the district will object. However, we suppose the entire matter will have to be settled by the committeemen of the several counties. They meet this week in Ft. Wayne to decide the matter, and their decision will no doubt be satisfactory all around.

Hickeville Independent: "The DeKalb county people are putting great energy and a vast sum of money in their new fair ground and buildings at Auburn. The buildings are the best in the state, and everything will be on the same scale. The race track is a perfect level at the pole, and is a standard half-mile track, and in perfect condition. Barns, sheds and pens all new and of the most approved plans. Abundance of shade on the grounds will insure comfort to visitors. Some extra good speed horses have been secured, and lovers of the race will be well entertained. Remember the date, September 8 to 12. Send to the secretary, Cal. Husselman, for all information and premium lists."

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician will be in Auburn at the Hollister House, the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his service in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. tf

Charles Roberts writes that the hub and spoke factory near Antwerp have up a derrick on their land, and will at once bore for oil. Another is preparing for a point west of town, and the Antwerp Gas and Oil company will also put down another well. The oil in the first well is now but 200 feet from the surface. Carpenters are in demand, a number having gone there from Hicksville, Ft. Wayne and New Haven.

The Ft. Wayne fair has just secured the greatest fair attraction ever seen anywhere this season; the Van Norman-Hauser Roman Raceing Combination, composed of L. A. VanNorman and Mrs. Alice Jackson, the champion lady Roman rider of the world. Mr. Van Norman, in his daring Roman chair feat, standing on chairs placed on the back of his running team, making a mile at full speed, in a race with Mrs. Jackson, will be seen on the track each day.

The Dispatch still believes the editor of the COURIER is a bad, bad man. But then, the Dispatch should remember, that in our earlier days, when in the "formative condition" as it were, we had no Dispatch man to be our guardian and guide, to tell us what to accept, what to avoid, and such like, and so on. The silliest point, he makes however, is about "personalities," claiming he has been so, so innocent, and the COURIER so, so bad. We challenge a reprint from both papers.

Elder Ward preached a fine sermon Sunday forenoon at the Presbyterian church. He is always interesting and able. While he is not in as vigorous health as he enjoyed in earlier life, yet as he warmed up to his subject, his old-time vigor came back and the audience forgot the years that weighed heavily on him, and thought of him only, as in his early days, when he was among the foremost ministers of this section. His physical faculties may be weaker, but his head is clear, and his heart as warm as ever. It was a pleasure to hear him again.

Ryan is still gaining strength.

Heavy rain last night ended the dry season.

W. W. Spangler was at home over Sunday.

Reba and Edna Houser are making a visit in Butler.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Swineford are visiting at Ashland, Ohio.

A number of our people talk of going to the Detroit exposition.

Dr. S. B. Johnston has gone to Ohio to attend the reunion of his regiment.

Mrs. W. B. Brown and little son Ralph are spending the latter part of this week at Butler.

Mrs. Don Garwood returned yesterday after an extended visit with Mr. G's people at Cassopolis.

Mrs. R. D. Tefft and daughters Ina and Roe are at home again after a visit with relatives in Ohio.

A daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Griswold is visiting them. She resides at Eaton Rapids, Mich.

J. L. Davis, president of the association has been appointed a committee to secure a speaker to open the fair here.

Don't forget the date of the DeKalb Co. Fair Sept. 8 to 12. Get something ready and go. Good races. Everything new.

There was a runaway on West Seventh street last evening. A buggy was smashed against one of Kiblinger's shade trees. Did not learn the name of owner.

Mrs. Harley Baker, wishes to announce to her former patrons, that she will resume the dressmaking business, at her home on West Ninth street, and asks them to call and see her, when they need work in that line. 33-35.

Lin. Kuhlman had quite a runaway Saturday while he was delivering several barrels of lime in Gas Addition, when, on throwing off some of it, the horse took fright and ran, throwing him to the ground. He was considerably bruised up and his ankle sprained, but nothing more serious.

Grace Weamer and Maud Williams celebrated their birthdays yesterday, by entertaining a large number of their young friends at the home of G. W. Weamer. They received many valuable presents. After enjoying the afternoon and a nice supper, they returned to their homes at a seasonable hour.

Homeopathic Physician.

Dr. I. O. Buchtel, of Ligonier, will locate in Auburn in a week or two. He has secured the fine office and rooms over the marble shop. This will be a convenient location, and one easily found at all hours. The doctor is a homeopathist and his location here will please many of our people who prefer that system of treatment. We knew Dr. Buchtel and his people when he was a boy, and what we knew of him then, and the reputation he has since acquired, we think we are safe in our belief that he will succeed in pleasing our people, and will build up a good practice here. Among those who know him better, we see he stands high, as shown by this, which we find in the Ligonier Banner:

"Dr. I. O. Buchtel has decided to practice his profession at Auburn, and will leave here soon. Dr. Buchtel carries with him the best wishes of the Banner. He is a young man of splendid promise and high attainments: and he has conscientiously prepared himself for the duties of his profession. His earlier studies were under the preceptorship of Drs. Ellis & Newton, and with Ligonier people, that is a sufficient guarantee that the foundations were well laid. His course in the New York medical college, of New York City and the Hahnemann medical college of Chicago, was pursued under the most careful instructors, and the fact of Dr. Buchtel's high standing in his class and with the professors is recommendation enough. We bespeak for him a cordial welcome by the Auburn people, and feel sure they will not misplace their confidence by according it to him."

Our Field of Fairs.

The dates for the Ohio and Indiana field of fairs is as follows: Auburn, September 8 to 12 inclusive; South Bend, September 15 to 19; Ligonier, September 16 to 19; Montpelier, Ohio, September 16 to 19; Goshen, September, 23 to 26; Angola and Hicksville, Ohio, same date; Kendallville, September 29 to October 3; Waterloo, October 6 to 10.

Fort Wayne Fair.

The Annual fair and trotting meeting of the Northern Indiana Fair Association will take place at Ft. Wayne, in September, beginning the 16th and ending the 19th. We are told they will make an extra effort this year to have a good fair. For information, address,

THE SUMMER GIRL.

O, I'm engaged to Ed and Charles,
Likewise to Lew and Walter,
Have promised Jake and Bert and Frank,
To stand before the altar.
But, then, there's, Andy Will and Jim,
Who think I'm just a pearl,
And Dave and Fred—I'm sweet on them,
I'm just a summer girl.

Printing Office for Sale.

To the People of Auburn and Vicinity.

Having been attracted by the beauties of Auburn, her natural advantages, manufacturing interests, railroad facilities and the many other indications which are unmistakably characteristic of a thrifty, prosperous and energetic people, I have felt that it would be a desirable place to live, and upon inquiry I find there is no homeopathic physician residing here. On calling upon some of the leading citizens I am informed that there are many people here who believe in this system of medicine and who would welcome such a physician to the place; to these people and to the public generally I desire to say that after carefully considering the subject in all its bearings I have decided to identify myself with your interests by becoming a permanent citizen and making Auburn my future home. With this in view it is but simple justice to you that I make the following statement: "My medical studies were pursued under the direction of Drs. Ellis and Newton, of Ligonier, Ind., who are physicians of acknowledgd ability and high standing; attending lectures at the New York Homeopathic Medical College of New York City, and at the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago, graduating in good standing from the latter institution, which is the oldest and most thorough homeopathic college in the west. It is my intention to conduct a general practice upon the latest and most scientific principles, giving special attention to the treatment of catarrhal diseases of the Throat, Nose and Lungs, those diseases peculiar to women and children and to obscure and chronic cases. In reference to my qualifications I would respectfully refer you to W. E. Newton, M. D. Ligonier, Ind., C. F. Ellis, M. D. Eureka Springs, Ark., W. A. Whippy, M. D. Goshen, Ind., A. L. Fisher, M. D. Elkhart, Ind., Drs. C. E. Laning, Richard Ludlam and Geo. A. Hall, of Chicago, Drs. Wm. Todd Helmuth, J. W. Dowling, and L. L. Danforth, of New York City. Asking only that share of your patronage which my skill, attention to business and moral character may merit.

I am yours Respectfully,
I. O. BUCHTEL, M. D.

Court.

Vacation had lasted so long that many had forgotten that the long term of court was still running. Work began again Monday, and so far a great deal has been done. Much of it, however, is made up of cases on notes etc., and judgments obtained against parties, and would not be of general interest. The court confirms the division made by the men appointed last spring to divide the lots west of Davis' hardware store, and owned by J. L. Davis, P. J. Lockwood, and Mrs. Eldridge. She case from Butler, of Woodworth vs. Thomson & Waller, replevin of stock of goods, went in favor of plaintiff. Divorce was granted, in case of Bradford Williams vs. Sarah J, at his cost; same in case of Sarah vs. Aaron Embry; August Benner was divorced from Ann Benner and her name changed to Ann Sullivan; Mary F. vs. David Luttman, she was granted a divorce and custody of child and $300 allimony; James and Jennie Tomlinson were divorced, she to have custody or the children and $100 allimony. Adjourned yesterday and will finish Saturday.

Farmers' Alliance Picnic.

The Farmers' Alliance organizations, of this county will hold a grand basket picnic in W. S Kutzner's grove, near Buss' saw mill, four miles northwest of Auburn, on Saturday, August 30, 1890. Col. Harper, of Danville, Ill., will deliver the address. A good band will be in attendance. All Patrons of Industry, farmers and labor organizations are especially invited to attend. Remember the date, Aug. 30.

By order of committee.

TRAMP! TRAMP! TRAMP!

MONSTER PROCESSION OF THE G. A. R. IN BOSTON.

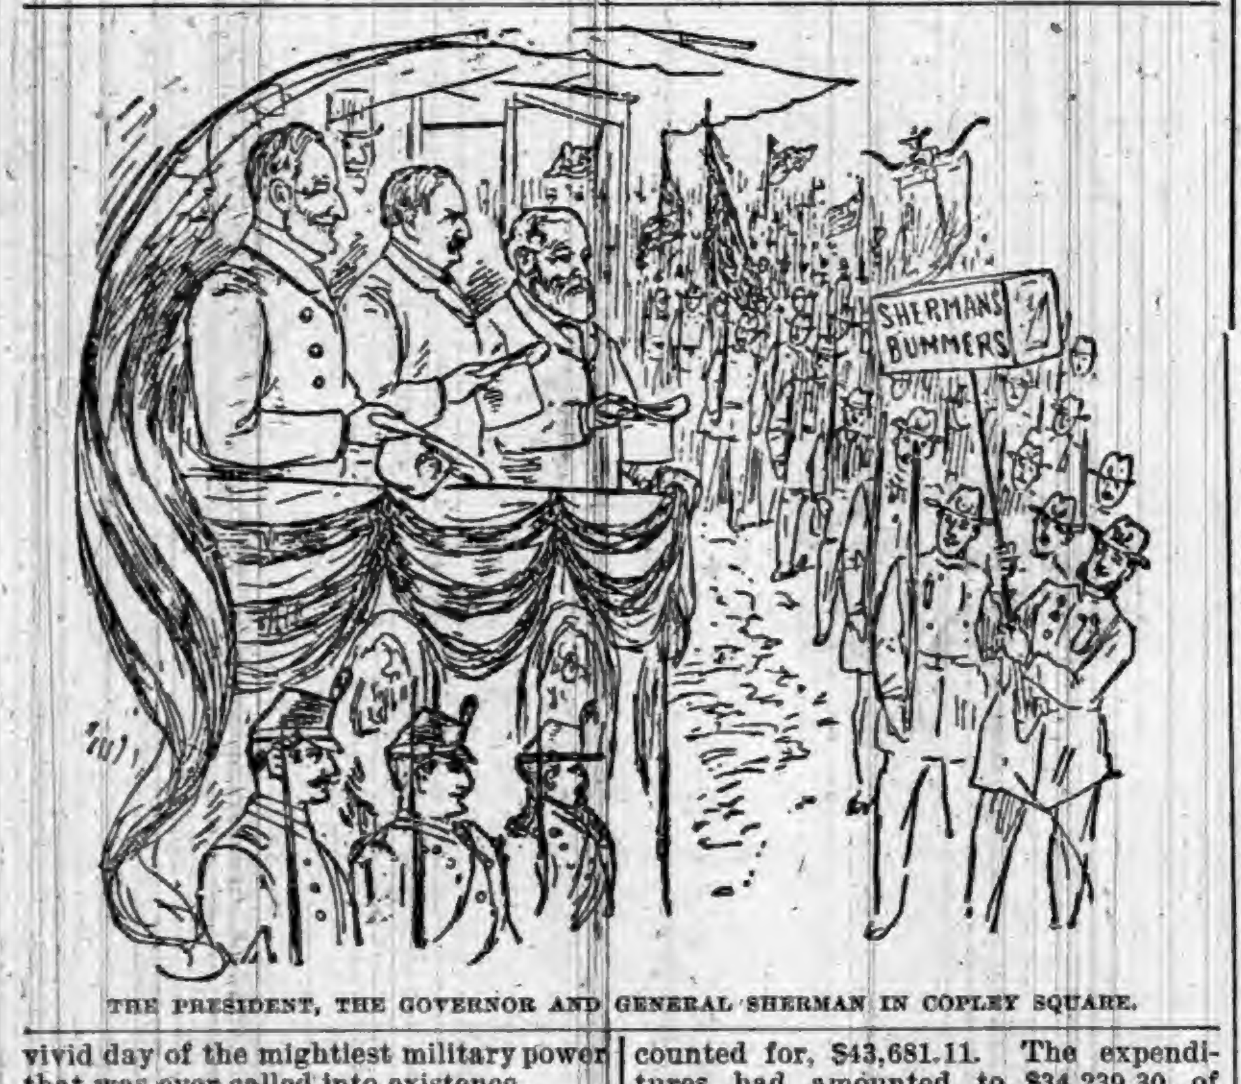
All Former Parades Thrown in the Shade—Adjutant General Hopkins' Report Shows Large Gains in Membership—General Wheelock G. Veazey Elected Commander for the Coming Year.

[SPECIAL BOSTON LETTER.]

THE Grand Army of Boys in Blue has come and gone, and every one of them feels like taking off his hat to the Hub. It is the first time they have ever, as a body, tested Boston hospitality, and they found it not wanting. Everybody went away praising Boston and Bostonians to the sky. "It's a great city and a great people," was a stock expression heard on every hand.

The crowning event of the encampment was the procession. This was unique and impressive. Such a parade would be impossible in any other country than this, for no other country could muster the same number and kind of men, soldiers, yet civilians, scarred veterans of hundreds of battlefields, gathered from the farms and workshops of a continent, to remind us for a brief but vivid day of the mightiest military power that was ever called into existence.

SEVENTY-FIVE, BUT HE MARCHED.



THE PRESIDENT, THE GOVERNOR AND GENERAL SHERMAN IN COPLEY SQUARE.

It was a spectacle of superlative grandeur by whatever standard it was measured. In point of numbers it was immense, and but for the excellent management of its organizers and directors it would have been unwieldy. From 11 o'clock in the forenoon till after sunset this memorable march was kept up, column after column passing the grand stands with wonderful precision and presenting to the spectators a succession of military tableaux, each one in its turn possessing some peculiar and distinctive trait of the State from which it came. Maine's sturdy men displayed the pine cones of their forests; Wisconsin's contingent carried a badger; Vermont's gallant comrades adorned their kossuths with sprigs of green to remind us of their green mountains; the Illinoisans bore banners on which the names and faces of their great citizens, Lincoln, Grant, and Logan, were conspicuous; and so on through the long list of all the States represented. There were 45,500 veterans in line. It was the largest procession the G. A. R. has ever turned out. The President, the Governor of Massachusetts, and Gen. Sherman reviewed the procession from a stand in Copley Square. Undeniably the most gallant figure of the day, and the one most heartily and continuously applauded, was Gen. Alger.

GEN. SHERMAN MULE

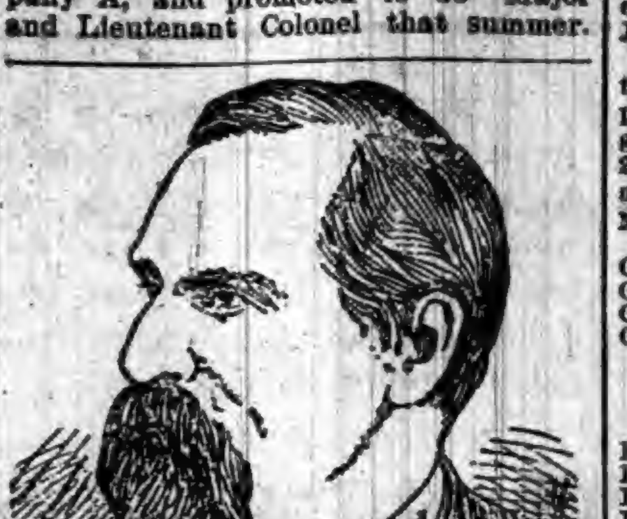
A NON-COMBATANT.

The New Officers.

The chief interest in the encampment surrounded the election of grand officers and the location for the next encampment. General Wheelock G. Veazy, of Vermont, was elected Commander-in-chief, and the next convention will be held in Detroit. Richard F. Tobin, of Boston, was elected Senior Vice Commander, and George B. Creamer, of Baltimore, Junior Vice Commander.

Commander Veazey's Career.

Wheelock G. Veazey was born in Rockingham County, New Hampshire, about fifty-three years ago, and was educated at Phillips, Exeter Academy, Dartmouth College, and the Albany Law School. He had just begun practice in Springfield, Vt., when the war broke out. At the close of his military service he resumed practice at Rutland, in partnership with the Hon. Redfield Proctor, the present Secretary of War. He enlisted as a private in the Third Vermont Volunteers early in 1861, was chosen Captain of Company A, and promoted to be Major and Lieutenant Colonel that summer.



GEN. W. G. VEAZEY, THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The Colonel of the regiment was William F. Smith, who afterward became popularly known as General "Baldy" Smith. Being a West Point man he gave his command thorough discipline, and it distinguished itself at Lee Mills, the first battle of the peninsular campaign in 1862. By this time, however, its colonel had been made a general, and was in command of a division, and Colonel Veazey was his chief staff and was engaged in all the battles of the peninsular campaign. In addition to a leading law practice in 1864 he accepted an appointment as reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Vermont, and held the office eight years, publishing nine volumes. He was a State Senator in 1872-3, and a leading member of that body. Still continuing to practice law, he was appointed register in bankruptcy in 1873, which he held until the law was repealed. In 1879 he was chosen a Judge of the Supreme Court of Vermont, and held this office for ten years, becoming distinguished for judicial learning and probity, and being called to preside at nisi prius over the most difficult trials in the State. In 1879 he was appointed by the Governor a commissioner to report to the Legislature upon court expenses, with a view to retrenchment and reform. Soon after going on the bench he was appointed a commissioner for revising the statutes of the State. In 1889 he was appointed by President Harrison an Interstate Commissioner, and this office he holds at the present time.

Finances of the Order.

The report of Quartermaster General John Taylor, of Philadelphia, consisted entirely of figures. One set showed the official in account with the Grand Army. It gave cash balance Aug. 31, 1889, $12,333.49; receipts from sale of supplies, $22,895.35; receipts from per capita tax, $7,611.06; interest on United States bonds and deposits $825.21; total to be accounted for, $43,681.11. The expenditures had amounted to $34,239.30, of which $15,759.90 had been for the purchase of supplies and $18,512.40 for incidentals, postage, salaries, etc. Another table gives the total assets as follows:

Cash balance on hand, $9,445.81; due by departments, $852.11; United States bonds, $19,800; supplies, $1,571.08; total, $31,669. The Grant monument fund was shown to have been increased by $981.76 since the last encampment, and to amount to $11,114.55.

Report of Adjutant General Hopkins.

The following is Adjutant General Hopkins' report:

Russell J. Alger, Commander-in-chief:

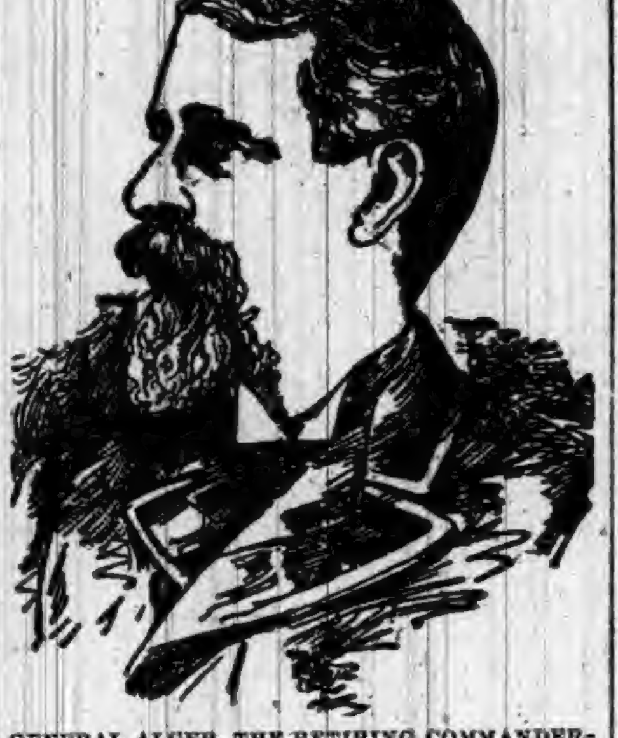
COMRADE—I beg to submit the following report of the business transactions of the Adjutant General's office, and membership and progress and condition of the order for the year just closed. Owing to the fact that the Twenty-fourth National Encampment is held two weeks earlier in the year than the preceding encampment, the reports from some of the departments are not as full as they would have been had more time been given to the posts in the various departments to make their reports. When you assumed command of the Grand Army of the Republic there were forty-two departments, with 6,711 posts, and a membership in good standing of 382,589. The consolidated report for the quarter ending June 30, 1890, shows forty-three departments, with the provisional department of Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and a membership in good standing of 427,981, being a net gain of two departments, 464 posts, and 47,116 comrades.

The following table gives the strength of the several departments, and the gains of each in posts and membership between June 30 1889, and June 30, 1890.

These tables show that on June 30, 1890, there were in the several departments 7,178 posts, with a membership of 397,385. The gains since June 30, 1889, were 520 posts and 20,217 members. The losses were 20 posts and 1,581 members.

Members in good standing June 30, 1889		382,617
Gain by muster	40,027
Gain by transfer	8,320
Gain by reinstatement	20,460
Gain from delinquent reports	13,138
Total gain		81,945
Aggregate		464,562
Loss by death	5,476
Loss by honorable discharge	1,774
Loss by transfer	10,277
Loss by suspension	6,111
Loss by dishonorable discharge	537
Loss by delinquent reports	12,406
Total loss		36,581
Members in good standing June 30, 1890		427,981
Net gain in membership in good standing	47,116
Net gain in posts reporting	464
Members remaining suspended	25,140
Members last quarter by delinquent reports	2,389
Total in suspension		27,529
Total members on rolls June 30,1879		455,510
Adding to this those out on transfer, who are of course still members of the order, gives a total membership of		2,720 458,230

The loss by delinquent reports is caused chiefly by the negligence of post officers in failing to make their reports, and it would seem that there is no excuse on the part of these officers for this negligence. The officers should make a report of the condition of their post at the close of the meeting next preceding the close of the quarter. If this were done, the total number in good standing would appear much larger.



GENERAL ALGER, THE RETIRING COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

If to the number in good standing June 30, 1890, of 427,981, were added the number lost by delinquent reports, and the number suspended, who, although suspended, are members of the order, there would be a total membership upon the rolls of 455,510; to such should be also added 2,720 who are out on transfer cards.

The number of deaths during the year was 5,476.

The amount expended for relief for the year ending March 31, 1890, was $221,350.18; number of comrades relieved, 19,470; others relieved, 8,949; total number relieved, 28,419.

In this sum no mention is made of the large amount of private aid expended by thousands of our members individually or collectively, and of which no record can be kept.

For the quarter ending June 30, 1890, $51,599.01 was expended.

The total amount expended by the Grand Army from July 1, 1871, to July 1, 1890, amounts to $1,987,534.55.

In a table showing the progress made during each quarter in the last thirteen year the following shows the gain in six departments, which take the lead: Ohio, 2,593; Missouri, 2,028; Massachusetts, 1,043; Tennessee, 963; Indiana, 937; Illinois, 779.

Two new departments have been organized. The Department of North Dakota, embraced in the territorial limits of the State of North Dakota, was organized at Grand Forks, N. D., on April 24, 1890. Comrade George B. Winship was elected Department Commander, who appointed Comrade William Ackerman as Assistant Adjutant General, with headquarters at Grand Forks.

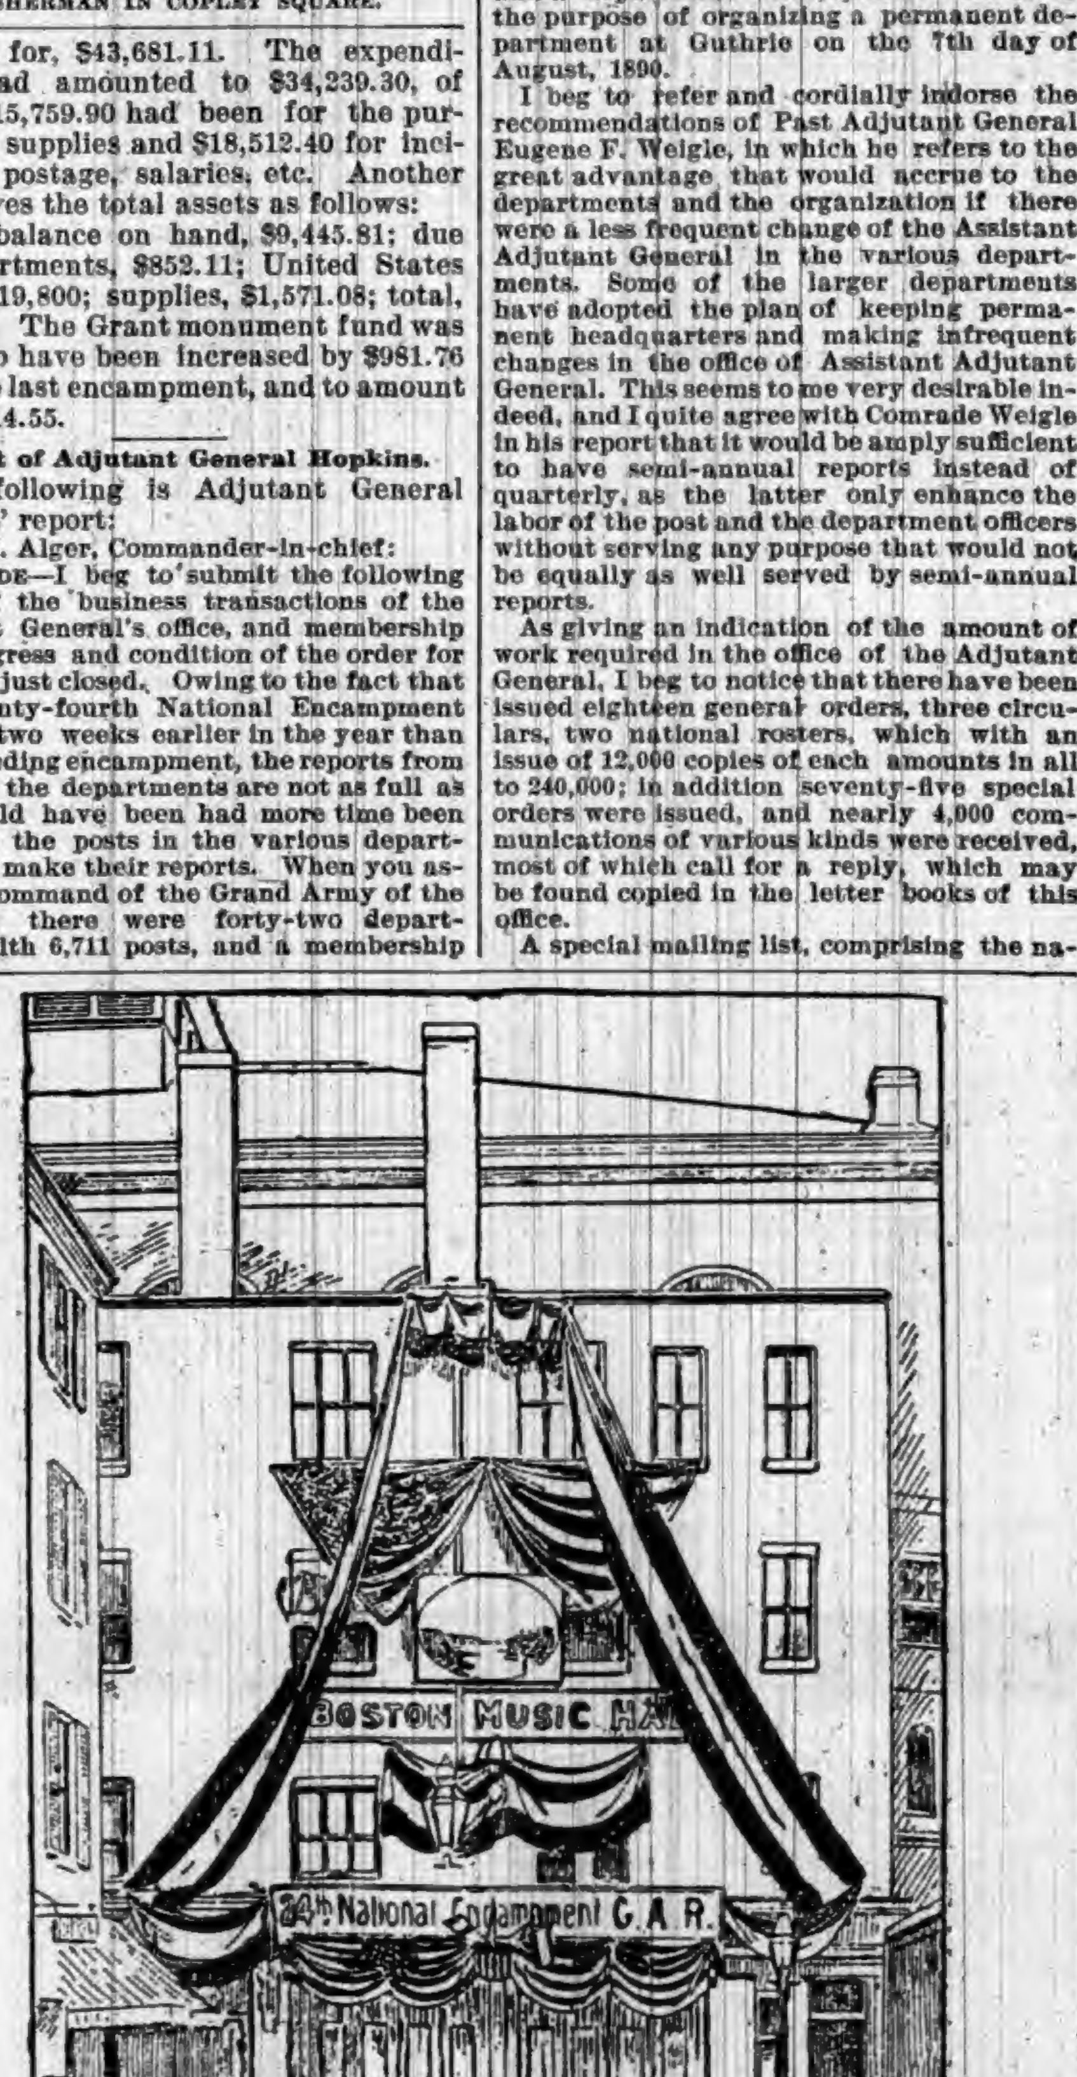
The Provisional Department of Indian Territory and Oklahoma was authorized by special orders No. 21, dated June 23, 1890, and a department encampment called for the purpose of organizing a permanent department at Guthrie on the 7th day of August, 1890.

I beg to refer and cordially indorse the recommendations of Past Adjutant General Eugene F. Weigle, in which he refers to the great advantage that would accrue to the departments and the organization if there were a less frequent change of the Assistant Adjutant General in the various departments. Some of the larger departments have adopted the plan of keeping permanent headquarters and making infrequent changes in the office of Assistant Adjutant General. This seems to me very desirable indeed, and I quite agree with Comrade Weigle in his report that it would be amply sufficient to have semi-annual reports instead of quarterly, as the latter only enhance the labor of the post and the department officers without serving any purpose that would not be equally as well served by semi-annual reports.

As giving an indication of the amount of work required in the office of the Adjutant General, I beg to notice that there have been issued eighteen general orders, three circulars, two national rosters, which with an issue of 12,000 copies of each amounts in all to 240,000; in addition seventy-five special orders were issued, and nearly 4,000 communications of various kinds were received, most of which call for a reply, which may be found copied in the letter books of this office.

A special mailing list, comprising the national and past national officers, members of the Council of Administration, prominent members of the order of the Woman's Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans and soldier newspapers, is now quite large, and makes a large item in postage.

About 900 commissions have been issued.



MUSIC HALL, WHERE THE G. A. R. HELD ITS SESSIONS.

I beg to call the attention of the several departments to the desirability of printing the reports of their proceedings in as nearly a uniform style as possible, to conform to the printed reports of the national encampment.

Commander-in-chief—I desire to express my sincere regrets that our official relations, which have been at all times most pleasant, are so soon to be severed. You have impressed upon me, as you have all the comrades of the various departments you have visited, the sincerity of your work in behalf of the organization.

The amount of time that you have placed at the disposal of the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic was measured only by the time between the dates when you assumed the office and when you will have laid it down.

If I have in any manner merited the confidence which you have placed in me, and my official action has been satisfactory to the members of the organization, I am more than pleased, and abundantly rewarded for the labor.

I desire in as public a manner as possible to express my thanks to the officers of the various departments for their uniform courtesy in responding to my demands made upon them in relation to their departments.

To Assistant Adjutant General James T. Sterling I am greatly indebted for his assistance, so cheerfully and zealously given at all times, and to Quartermaster General John Taylor, Judge Advocate General Austin, and Inspector General Griffith for their aid whenever called upon. Sincerely in F., C. and L.,

GEORGE HOPKINS,
Adjutant General.

All About Lightning.

1. As to the term "forked lightning," the representations of it given by artists, which resemble the so-called thunderbolts placed in the hand of Jupiter, are quite absurd. The flash, when photographed, exhibits itself as a line which is continually changing its course, and is described as "intensely crooked" by a very careful observer. It never proceeds for a time in a straight line, and then turning at a sharp angle, going on further in an equally straight line, as is represented in pictures. The forking of it is very marked and this occurs by side-flashes passing off from the main track and eventually losing themselves, like the ramifications of tree roots. Occasionally the lightning appears to start from a point from which several flashes diverge in different directions.

2. "Sheet lightning"—Whenever a flash passes from cloud to cloud or from cloud to earth, the light produced by it illuminates the sky in the neighborhood, and the more intense the flash the more brilliant and extensive the illumination. At times sheet lightning has been proved to emanate from an ordinary storm, distant more than one hundred miles from the point of observation. It is, however, maintained, and apparently with good reason, that occasionally lightning of the "sheet" type, such as what is called "summer lightning," takes place without any thunder, so that in such cases no actual thunder storm is in progress.

3. "Globular lightning"—This is a rare phenomenon, and one which no one has as yet been able to produce in the laboratory, whereas the phenomena of the two previous types are easily produced. The general description of the occurrence is that a luminous ball is seen moving very slowly, not touching any object, and eventually breaking up with a violent explosion and the appearance of several flashes of ordinary lightning. It is reported that persons have gone out from a house into a street to follow such a ball and watch its movements, so that the occurrence must have lasted at least a number of seconds. Ordinary lightning, as is well known, is practically quite instantaneous. The size of the ball on different occasions has varied from that of an orange to that of a large glass lamp globe, or even larger. Many physicists refuse to believe any accounts of this manifestation of electrical discharge, but the reports of it are too numerous and circumstantial for us to consider them entirely baseless.—Longman's Magazine.

Expert on Beauty.

There is a great deal of sham, writes Eugene Field, in all the show of affection that has been going on at Berlin between the Emperor William and his uncle, the Prince of Wales. It is pretty well known that the two have an ill opinion of one another. Wales hates Berlin because he regards it as a vulgarily democratic town, and he has always looked upon William as a boor. As for the young Emperor, he has been taught by Bismarck to regard England as a nonsensical little patch wholly unworthy of consideration, and he has been heard to remark that the Prince of Wales was simply a petit maitre and a flaneur.

Wales was accompanied to Berlin by his second son, Prince George. After they had been there two days the son broke out suddenly one day with "Father, have you seen a pretty girl since you came here?"

"That's a curious question," replied Wales. "How came you to ask it?"

"Well, I fancied you'd be on the lookout," said George, "and I wish you'd tell me if you see one, for I've got tired of hunting for them. Your judgment in that direction will do well enough for me."

He Liked It.

A party of New-Yorkers, composed mostly of small Wall street speculators, have just returned from a hunting trip down in Maine. During their stay in the Eastern lumber regions the party camped out and cooked their own meals. The first day in camp they drew lots to determine who should do the cooking. It fell to the youngest member of the party. He was also the brightest of the lot, for he got his companions to agree to an arrangement by which he was to begin as cook, and continue in office until some one found fault with the eatables. Then the fault-finder should be his successor. The young man had occasion to bake some bread the very first day. His breast heaved with pride as he placed his maiden effort in this line before his companions at dinner. His companions' breasts heaved with sorrow when they sampled it. One of them, in an unguarded moment, was moved to criticism. He said:

"This is dreadful poor bread." And then, quick as a flash, remembering the treaty made in the morning, he added, "But I like it!"—New York Star.

A Joke for Boarders.

"You've left your old boarding-house, I see."

"Yes, too expensive. Mrs. Hash feeds her boarders so well that they are continually outgrowing their clothes, and what they save in the cheap rates they lose in having to buy new suits."

Then both laugh a sardonic, diabolical, ironical laugh, which only boarders can understand and appreciate.—Philadelphia Times.

The Loud Talker.

Some one has said that "the man who talks foolishness never has the grace to speak it in whispers." It happens that a foolish man will become possessed of a foolish story and he will tell it loud in public places, perhaps twice in the same place, and emphasize it by laughing loudly at it himself. A young lawyer with his first case, as proud as a cat with her first kitten, will—while journeying up or down town, boring some old member of the bar, by the way—give away his whole line of argument to a carful of people. The young man thinks in the trial of his cow case he has unearthed a point that must go up to the Supreme Court to be sharpened; but it does not matter.

The thunder of noise will not answer the same purpose as the flash of wit. An able-bodied colored preacher whose lungs are equal to his religion can be heard a mile away on a fine summer's night. What is he saying? No matter, and never mind. He may be carrying his audience with him, but he can hardly be dropping gems of thought and saying the wise things Edward Everett Hale and William R. Alger say in perfect English with gentle voice. The steam calliope and the German flute cannot be tuned together in a pleasing duet, and the flute will be liked best in the long run. The braying donkey will not become a social favorite while he brays so loud. The man who talks loud is not famous for talking sense. An actor's ranting noise can destroy the best sense of Shakspeare. It would kill the golden speech of advice Polonius gives to his son. So great an actor as Edwin Forrest used with his loud voice to split "Othello" into kindling-wood for critics. He would come to the front and loudly declaim to the audience: "O! now, forever farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!" Salvini would speak this speech to himself almost in a whisper, with such tenderness and show of deep grief in his voice as to bring tears and tell an audience what woeful misfortune it was that had come to the Moor. It is the soft speech that turneth away wrath; and the wise words we are most eager to hear, and the advice that we are most apt to heed, are spoken with gentle voices.

Young America.

"I am sorry for you, Willie," said the surgeon, as he got his implements and bandages ready, "but a part of the finger will have to be amputated. I trust it will be a lesson to you, and that when the next Fourth of July comes you will let the dangerous toy cannon——"

"Doctor," said Willie, setting his teeth hard together, "just say nothing and saw bone."—Chicago Tribune.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

Minor State Items.

—Joseph Demey, aged 19, a cripple, who resided at Brownsburg, committed suicide by shooting.

—Farmers' institutes will be held in forty-two counties of Indiana the coming season.

—Free postal delivery is to be established at LaPorte October 1. The city will have four carriers.

—The supply of natural gas at Vernon is diminishing. Fears are entertained that it is about exhausted.

—Typhoid fever is epidemic in Orange, Harrison, Crawford, Clarke and other southern Indiana counties.

—William Von Busse, of Princeton, was killed by his step-son, while attacking his wife with a knife.

—Posey County farmers realized $27,000 from their melon crop. The largest melons were sold for 5 cents apiece.

—Fred, the 10-year-old son of Simeon Stearns, a prominent farmer near North Vernon, was killed by a saw-log rolling on him.

—G. V. Churchill, aged 60 years, a prominent and influential farmer dropped dead of heart disease, at his home near Moore's Hill.

—While working at a buzz saw in Hughes' Mill, Memphis, John Broadus was caught, and his right hand completely saw off.

—Levi Harshman, a young man about twenty years of age, living near Manson, was run over and killed by a special train returning from South Bend. The accident happened about half a mile from Colfax.

—Joshua Williams, a farmer, 76 years old, who lives north of New Castle, was struck by a Lake Erie & Western engine and badly hurt, having one arm broken, a shoulder dislocated, and receiving sundry lesser injuries. His physician says he cannot survive.

—The Executive Committee of the Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, has decided to hold a grand reunion of the regiment at Goshen Oct. 15.

—The postoffice at Edinburg was entered, the safe cracked and the money boxes carried into a common near by and broken open with a sledge-hammer and robbed of 14,000 2-cent stamps, 3,700 1-cent stamps, and $243 in cash. Night Watchman Thomas Brown came upon four men just as they had finished their work, but they all escaped with the booty.

—James Dougherty, one of the wealthiest and best-known citizens of Lafayette, is dead.

—Mrs. Ann Scott, 87 years of age, and a resident of Plainfield for forty years, is dead. She was a prominent member of the Friends Church.

—Henry Houghland, living near New Albany, jumped from a fence and fell on a moving scythe. He was terribly cut and may die from lock-jaw.

—The congregation of the Universalist Church at Terre Haute has concluded to disband, and the property will be transferred to the State society.

—Holiday E. Brusse, of Princeton, has been exonerated by the Coroner for killing his step-father. The deed was committed in defense of his mother's life.

—Frederick Dennis, of Wheatland, while riding home from Vincennes, was attacked by highwaymen, who succeeded in robbing him after a desperate fight.

—Fallen slate has added another to its list of victims. This time it was Joseph Lowe, employed in mine No. 1, at Coxville. While working in his room a large body of slate became detached and falling, struck Lowe on the head, breaking his neck. He leaves a wife and four children.

—John Britton, the 10-year-old son of J. C. Britton, of Brazil, and another boy, name unknown, climbed a tree in a grove in the east part of the city. James Hunter, a young man, came along and forbade the boys coming down until he cut down the tree. The boys fell to the ground, receiving injuries internally that will prove fatal. As yet Hunter has escaped arrest.

—From present indications Fountain and Warren counties will see better times the coming year than they have for a good many days. While the wheat crop is not up to the usual standard still it is much better than was expected, and with the enhanced price the shortage produces it will bring almost as much money as a full crop. But the main staple, corn, bids fair to be an excellent crop, and as the dry weather has, in many places through the great corn-growing section, ruined the crop and greatly curtailed it everywhere, our farmers will have the advantage of a large yield and top prices. Luck seems to come our way part of the time.—Fountain and Warren Democrat.

—The excitement over the natural-gas explosion still prevails throughout Shelby County, and thousands of people are flocking to the scene. It is now discovered that the soil for many miles around is impregnated with gas, and by piercing the soil with a stick the fluid can be ignited and a blaze produced large enough to cause considerable illumination. In Van Buren Township, twenty-four miles north, the gas has broken into the water wells, and the use of water from them has been abandoned. Some of the farmers have cased the wells and are using the gas from them for fuel.

—Wm. Virgin, who lives in Lickskillet, lost an eye and the side of his face as the result of experimenting with a dynamite cartridge. Virgin is employed at Rouse's cement-mills, near Jeffersonville, where large numbers of cartridges are used in blasting. Finding one lying on the ground, Virgin placed it in his pocket, and when he went home he tried to open it with the blade of his knife. Suddenly a loud report was heard, and Virgin was hurled through the air. When he regained consciousness he learned that his left eye and jaw-bone had been torn away.

—The Lynch family, residing on Pearl street, Jeffersonville, has been peculiarly unfortunate during the last few years. First the mother died, a year later the loss of a brother was the next affliction, and last week the death of a sister was added to their sorrow. The two remaining sisters were making preparations to start for Atlanta, Ga., to reside with their only brother when Theresia, the oldest, became violently insane. The younger sister shows evidence of melancholia, and it is feared that she, too, will become a prey to the disease.

—The annual convention of the Christian churches of the Sixteenth Indiana Evangelical District will be held in Greencastle, August 25-27. Addresses may be expected from several leading elders of that denomination, among them Messrs. Frank, Clark, and Brewer, of Danville; Messrs. Garvin and Semones, of Irvington; Mr. Badger, of Greencastle; O. F. Lane, of Brainbridge, and C. A. Manker, of Scottsburg. The district evangelist gives an encouraging report of the work during the past year.

—Extensive preparations are being made for the general reunion of Indiana soldiers to be held at Seymour, September 11, 12, and 13. A number of regiments will meet there in their annual reunions on the above-named dates. Gov. A. P. Hovey, ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, and a large number of prominent men in Grand Army circles will be present. The site selected for the camp is the City Park, a shaded inclosure within the city limits, where a large soldiers' memorial fountain will be unveiled on the 11th. Tents and rations will be furnished free to all old soldiers, and a camp-fire will be held on Friday night, the 12th. The reunion is under the management of Ellsworth Post and a committee of citizens, and promises to be one of the largest gatherings of old soldiers ever held in Southern Indiana.

—There is a split in the German Lutheran Church of Terre Haute, caused by the decree against secret societies. Some of the members have formed an independent orgaization, with Rev. Paul Korn as pastor.

—Seymour is to have a memorial fountain. It will be surmounted by a heroic figure of a veteran soldier in bronze, and the formal dedication will be made by Gov. Hovey during the grand soldiers' reunion, which begins September 12.

—Presley Brewer, of Greene County, while working in the woods, hid his pocket-book, containing $103, under the root of a tree. A cow grazing near by came along and devoured it before Brewer could rescue the treasure. Mrs. Albert Gilmore, of the same locality, was more fortunate. She placed $550 in the cooking-stove oven, trusting no one with the secret. Forgetting herself, she built a fire and prepared dinner, completely roasting the money. The charred paper was carefully preserved, however, and Uncle Sam has made good her losses.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

Mr. Edmunds, from the Judiciary Committee, reported to the Senate on the 12th an amendment to be offered to the river and harbor bill, and explained that its purpose was to make it unlawful to obstruct the navigation of any of the navigable waters. The amendment was laid on the table and ordered printed. Mr. Edmunds presented the motion for a change of the rules by limiting debate on the tariff bill which he had offered at the time of adjournment on the 11th, and it was laid on the table and ordered printed. Mr. Blair also offered a resolution for such a change of the rules as will permit the previous question to be moved after a proposition has been considered two days, and the same disposition was made of it. The tariff debate was then resumed. In the House a joint resolution extending temporarily (until Aug. 29) the appropriations for the support of the Government not already provided for in the general appropriation bills was passed.

The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was presented in the Senate and agreed to on the 13th. The tariff bill having been again taken up, Mr. Gorman addressed the Senate in opposition to the proposed increase of duty on tin plates. The tariff bill was laid aside informally and a conference was ordered on the Senate bill in regard to collisions at sea, and Messrs. Frye, Washburn, and Gorman were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate. Mr. Plumb, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution for the relief of destitution in Oklahoma. The House bill making appropriations for additional clerical force in the pension office was taken from the calendar and read for amendment. Various amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to and the bill was passed. In the House a bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands and to grant the proceeds of the sale to the town of Pelican, Oneida County, Wis. On motion of Mr. Dockery (Mo.), a bill was passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo.

Mr. Plumb, from the Committee on Appropriations, on the 14th reported to the Senate the joint resolution appropriating for the relief of destitution in Oklahoma the unexpended balance of the appropriation made last April for the relief of the district overflowed by the Mississippi River, and it was passed. The tariff bill was taken up and Mr. Plumb offered an amendment to strike out the clause imposing a duty of two and two-tenths cents a pound on tin-plate (reserving the other part of the proposition as to bounty), but finally withdrew it and offered another making the duty on tin-plate one cent a pound and providing a bounty of one cent a pound on tin-plate manufactures in the United States. Without action on the amendment the Senate adjourned. The first business in order in the House was the vote on sustaining the decision of the Chair, overruling the point of order made by Mr. Springer of Illinois, that the Nat McKay relief bill must be considered in committee of the whole. The decision was sustained—yeas, 114; nays, 31; the Speaker counting a quorum. It was soon found that no quorum was present and the House adjourned.

The river and harbor bill was taken up in the Senate on the 15th, and several amendments were agreed to. When the House met it proceeded to a consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, which was presented by Mr. Perkins (Kansas). Mr. Cannon (Illinois) criticised the report as being the most extraordinary one which had ever been submitted during his experience in the House. When the bill was first submitted to the House he had conceived it to be his duty to raise points of order against items aggregating $300,000. These items had been stricken out. The Senate had agreed to amendments aggregating $1,200,000. The conference report carried the full amount of the bill as it passed the House, with the full amount of the Senate amendments and $12,000 more. The bill created a number of new offices and increased a number of salaries. The bill was finally passed.

In the Senate, on the 16th inst., the river and harbor bill was taken up, and, after several amendments of little importance had been agreed to, was passed. Mr. Quay gave notice of a resolution providing for a vote on the tariff bill Aug. 30, and for adjournment as soon as possible thereafter. (The effect of this would be to delay action on the Federal election bill till the next session.) The House passed the anti-lottery bill without division. The bill provides that no letter, postal card or circular concerning any lottery, so-called gift concern, or other similar enterprise offering prices dependent upon lot or chance (or concerning schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretenses), and no list of the drawings at any lottery or similar scheme, and no lottery ticket or part thereof, and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order for the purchase of any ticket, tickets or parts thereof, and or of any share or chance in any such lottery or gift enterprise, shall be carried in the mail or delivered at or through any post-office or branch thereof or by any letter-carrier.

NEWSPAPER WAIFS.

After a cyclone a western paper thoughtfully printed its next edition in blew ink.

Afraid—City Sportsman—Seems to me the rabbits in these woods are very shy of me. Pothunter (with full bag)—Maybe they think you've got a club.

The Usual Reward—What did you get for your poem? Thanks. Well, that was at least something. Yes, the editor returned it with thanks.

Wife—Why, darling, you don't mean to say the train you were on left the rails? Husband—Yes, my dear. Did you expect it to take them along?

A Cautious Answer: Eastener—Where is your town located? Westerner (from the land of floods and cyclones)—In Kansas, 'bout ten miles from th' Missouri river—w'en I left.

The Manager's Trouble: First Actor—I hear old Boxoffice is not able to open his theater this season. Second Actor—Well, he deserves to have lost his money. Any man does, in fact, who keeps bad company, and the company Boxoffice kept is the worst I ever saw.

Where It Had Gone To: "Mr. Bunting," said the doctor, after an examination, "I fear your wife's mind has gone." "That doesn't surprise me," replied the poor man, "she has been giving me a piece of it every day for seven years."

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY SAYS.

That prejudice against paper-covered novels appears to have died out.

That the most exasperating people are those who cannot be snubbed.

That the standard of morality in most fashionable circles is very low.

That in town just at present it is not the least "trouble to show goods."

That many a time and oft a girl is known by her treatment of the aged.

That it is the hardest thing in the world for some rich people to be polite.

That the public is weary of the predictions of amateurs about the weather.

That it is not every man in a white flannel suit who knows when it is soiled.

That living charges at the summer resorts are high enough to be exorbitant.

That a civilian, in the eyes of an army officer, is not of much consequence.

That the number of fashionable spongers at present is remarkably large.

A Fish-Hawk's Nest.

The nests of birds always interest us. The skill with which the oriole attaches his swinging house to the branches of the elm is ever a source of admiration. In what odd places, too, are nests sometimes found! An old coat hung across a fence to serve as a scarecrow attracts the smaller birds, and that which was an occasion of terror to the crows becomes a cosy residence for a pair of wrens or sparrows.

Last summer, while cruising along the coast of Maine, writes a correspondent we saw a fish-hawk's nest in a very unexpected place. We were running through what is called on the charts, the Fox Island Thoroughfare, and were headed to the westward, making for North Haven. Just before we reached this place our attention was called to a "spindle" on the starboard.

This "spindle" is a strong rod of iron with a circular, concave iron disc at the top, and is placed there to mark a dangerous ledge. It rises out of the water to a height of perhaps twenty feet. The slightly hollowed disc that surmounted the rod contained a large nest constructed of coarse sticks and twigs, and on the edge, calmly secure in its domain, two fish-hawks were perched, waiting for their finny prey.

Here, a mile from shore, safe above the reach of angry billows, they had built their home. It is interesting to think of them when the sea was lashed to fury and the storm raged upon the deep, dwelling there between the sea and the sky.

These birds usually nest in tall trees on cliffs—in places not to be reached by man without much difficulty, but instinct had led this pair to choose a home amid the waves, a home suited to the wild and wary nature that loves solitude so well.

A French Canard.

In notes from Paris a correspondent of London Truth started a story of a new plan of reducing obesity by actually cutting out the layers of surplus fat beneath the skin. As this story of the scalpel as an aid to beauty, or vivisection as a means to embonpoint, is one of the kind that are likely to go the rounds of the press, it may seem a pity to spoil it early, but in justice to truth itself, as opposed to some so-called newspaper truth, it is best to say now that this is not so, and cannot be so. It may be a good yarn to stuff a gullible friend with, but don't give yourself away by telling it for a fact among those who may know better.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

A Fine Dinner.

Mrs. McCarthy—Wull yez hev favors an' mean you cairds at Mary Ahn's weddin' dinner, Mis' Mulligan?

Mrs. Mulligan—Whisht yer blarney. What's mean about cairds de bigness av yer doostin'-pan? An' fer favors, thims a thing Bridget Mulligan nather asks nor takes.

But do it be a coorse dinner, I dunno?

A coorse dinner, is it, ye blaggaird! Ef it don't be as foine a dinner as iver laid on top av a table may the divil fly away wid yez.—Texas Siftings.

He Told the Truth.

Irate father to fond father—Sir, your son deliberately called me a liar.

Fond father to son—Johnnie, have you so far forgotten yourself? Be truthful, sir!

Son—Father, I cannot tell a lie. I did.

Fond father to irate friend—Surely you will pardon him, my friend, for he has spoken the truth.

Irate friend (mystified)—H'm, since he is a truthful lad, certainly!—Figaro.

Short of Matter.

Great Magazine Editor—We are very short of matter. All the great generals, notorious politicians, famous lawyers, popular actresses, eminent physicians, and prominent scientists seem to be too busy to write for us just now.

Assistant (meditatively)—Perhaps we might get some articles from literary men.

Great Editor—Good idea! I'll make a tour of the poor-houses to-morrow.—Life.

Everything Goes Wrong

In the bodily mechanism when the liver gets out of order. Constipation, dyspepsia, contamination of the blood, imperfect assimilation, are certain to ensue. But it is easy to prevent these consequences, and remove their cause, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which stimulates the biliary organ and regulates its action. The direct result is a disappearance of the pains beneath the ribs and through the shoulder blade, the nausea, headaches, yellowness of the skin, furred look of the tongue, and sour odor of the breath, which characterize liver complaint. Sound digestion and a regular habit of body are blessings also secured by the use of this celebrated restorative of health, which imparts a degree of vigor to the body, which is its best guarantee of safety from malarial epidemics. Nerve weakness and over tension are relieved by it, and it improves both appetite and sleep.

At a Fashionable Wedding.

Unknown Man—Indeed it is. One of the most fashionable weddings ever held in New York.

None but the very creme de la creme here.

That's so. It is exceedingly select.

Are you a relative of the parties?

Not at all. I am a detective, watching out that none of the guests steal the wedding presents.

W. H. GRIFFIN, Jackson, Michigan, writes: "Suffered with catarrh for fifteen years. Hall's Catarrh Cure cured me." Sold by Druggists, 75c.

He Didn't Avoid It.

Smith (observing a crowd around an ambulance across Broadway)—Been an accident over there?

Brown—Yes; man hurt very badly. Run over, or something.

Anybody know who the man is?

Oh, yes. He's Dr. Smarty, author of the book, "How to Avoid Street Accidents."—Texas Siftings.

"Well-done outlives death." Even your memory will shine if you use SAPOLIO. It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes. Try it.

Who He Was.

Smith—Do you know who that skinny, cadaverous-looking individual is over there?

Jones—Yes, he's Prof. Quack, the author of "How to get Fat, or Hints to Thin People."

If afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrate the value of the qualities on which its success is based, and are abundantly gratifying to the California Fig Syrup Company.

He Was Acquainted with Them.

Visitor—I thought you said you had some big men in this town. I haven't struck one.

Inhabitant—All the big bugs are out in the country spending the heated term.

Visitor (rubbing a red spot on the back of his neck)—Guess you're right. I have just returned from the country where I struck quite a number of big bugs.—Texas Siftings.

Three Harvest Excursions.

A Courageous Animal.

"Is this horse afraid of anything?" asked Mrs. Nervous, out riding for the first time with a livery stable rig.

"Not even of me," replied Mr. Nervous, gloomily, as he vigorously but vainly plied the whip.—Somerville Journal.

Invalids, aged people, nursing mothers overworked, wearied out fathers, will find the happiest results from a judicious use of Dr. Sherman's Prickly Ash Bitters. PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. Send 2c stamp for copy of "THE HORSE TRAINER," published by us.

It was Ben Johnson, we believe, who, when asked Mallock's question, "Is life worth living?" replied "That depends on the liver." And Ben Johnson doubtless saw the double point to the pun.

The liver active—quick—life rosy, everything bright, mountains of trouble melt like mountains of snow.

The liver sluggish—life dull, everything blue, molehills of worry rise into mountains of anxiety, and as a result—sick headache, dizziness, constipation.

Two ways are open. Cure permanently, or relieve temporarily. Take a pill and suffer, or take a pill and get well. Shock the system by an overdose, or coax it by a mild, pleasant way.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the mild means. They work effectively, without pain, and leave the system strong. One, little, sugar-coated pellet is enough, although a whole vial costs but 25 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SPENCERVILLE.

Mrs. John Horn, of Ft. Wayne, is visiting in this vicinity.

Born Saturday morning, to Mr. and Mrs. John W. Beams, a son.

Christ McNabb is working for I. N. Hursh, in the butcher shop.

Miss Claudia Provines returned home from Edgerton, O., Sunday evening.

John Bishop and wife, of Plainville, Mich., are visiting friends in this vicinity.

Ed. Beams and Martie Shutt rode their bycicles to Auburn Friday, to witness the ball game.

Job C. Smith and wife, of East Portland, Oregon, are visiting the family of G. W. A. Smith.

The colored people, who have been holding a camp meeting at this place, left Friday morning for Lagrange.

Rev. Samuel Greenewalt, of Springfield, O., will occupy the pulpit in the Lutheran church, Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

Dr. Hull is packing up his household goods preparatory to moving to Lagrange. Spencerville thereby loses one of its most estimable citizens, and the church one of its best workers.

The body of an unknown man was found in the St. Joe River, Sunday morning, lodged in some brush about one mile above town, awaiting the coming of the coroner. There is nothing visible by which he can be identified.

There was a large attendance at the picnic Saturday, and notwithstanding the heat and dust it was a success in all respects. The gross receipts amounting to $140, will be applied to the building of a parsonage, after deducting expenses.

"People who live in glass houses should not throw stones." We have some recollection of a case that happened a few years ago, in which a certain editor figured as plaintiff, with rings and swollen eyes. An Allen was defendant. Verdict in favor of defendant. Costs—plaintiff's lacerated heart.

CONCORD.

R. B. Clear was in Albion, Monday.

Miss Emma Morr remains about the same.

The stone wall for the new church is completed.

Mrs. Mattie Jones and son, Walter, of Ft. Wayne, visited friends here last week.

Mrs. Robert Culbertson is at Auburn, for treatment. She is the guest of her son, W. B. Brown.

Rev. S. S. Stanton, and Delegate H. Milton are attending the M. P. Conference, at Noblesville, this state.

The Jackson band boys will give an ice cream social one-half mile east of Rehoboth, Saturday evening, August 23.

The Concord boys are becoming quite devoted to their girls since they stood by them so nobly as cashiers and clerks, at socials.

J. H. Gill's sister is paying him a visit. She resides near Philadelphia, Pa. Mrs. G., has relatives visiting her from Ashland, Ohio.

Frank Boyles is back again from Waldron, Mich. We would advise Uncle Anthony S., to let his blood hound loose, or his last girl will be missing.

Several Sunday schools met in the beautiful grove, owned by Mr. Clemers, last Saturday. But for the dust, everybody seemed to enjoy the occasion wonderfully.

Last Saturday night Will Scott and Frank Draggoo, hitched up their four-horse team, loaded the band boys and their girls, and drove over to Fairview, and woke up the neighborhood.

An unknown man was found lodged on a snag in the St. Joe River, just above the dam at Spencerville, last Sunday morning. The flesh was torn from his face in a manner that made identification impossible. Citizens took charge of the remains.

DEKALB.

Weather continues dry and warm.

Plowing for wheat is no small chore.

The dance at this place, has not been a success.

The meat market has not opened up at this place yet.

The talk among the women, is, "what shall we cook?"

A. McKinley and family attended the picnic at Spencerville, Saturday.

Butter is 14 cents a pound, and eggs 14 cents a dozen, in trade, at this place.

Corn is marching through roasting ear time, and it is said, will make about three-fourths of a crop.

From lack of rain, potatoes will be only a sample crop. We will have to wait another year for "praties."

Trustee Fair has taken his seat. Anyone wishing to do business with Butler township, will find him in his office.

The people, generally, in this vicinity are well, except Mother Hall and George Weygandt's baby, who are improving.

SUMMIT.

David Ling, of Hudson, was on our streets, Saturday.

Mont. Battershall, of Ft. Wayne, was on our streets, Saturday.

C. Oberlin and A. Conrad went to Hamilton on business, Friday.

John Cotrell, of Hudson, called on friends at this place, Thursday.

James Harris' daughter and children, from near Defiance, O., were here visiting the past week.

V. Canouse and daughter Sadie, from west of Hamilton, made our town a short call, Wednesday.

Sherman Grambling, of Comowingo, Cecil county, Md., is here visiting his parents, Peter Grambling's.

Elder Simpson, of Goshen, filled the pulpit at Barker's Chapel, last Saturday evening and Sunday morning.

Music Lessons.

Miss Katherine Woodhull, a graduate of the College of music of Cincinnati, will give lessons in music, including voice, piano, organ, and theory. She will be here Tuesday and Friday of each week, and all who desire information are requested to call on her at the residence of D. A. Garwood, or to leave word.

Only to Catch votes.

The republicans only want to catch votes. If that is not the case, why did they not find out about the state debt sooner—anytime in the last ten years? They begin this talk just before an election, and as soon as the election is over, they say no more about it. Do they think people cannot see into their little game? Last spring just as the village election was coming on, the Dispatch proclaimed to the world, that Auburn was bankrupt. Of course, this false report hurt the town's credit, and its prospects. People don't care to come and make a home in a bankrupt town. Such croakers are the town's worst enemies. And as soon as the election was over, they dropped it, making the remark, however, that they expected to publish such statements always, "just before elections." Now they are doing the same thing by the state. They will do the same by the county. They may not know that all these debts, the republicans are as much responsible for, as are the democrats. Yet such is the case. The truth is, our town, our county and our state are in good condition, and while all owe debts, yet they have contracted them for good purposes—purposes advocated, and often demanded, as much by republicans as by democrats. This whole outcry is a piece of blatant demagoguery, and will do much to injure the credit and reputation of our people. But what do they care, if it gets them votes enough, so their candidates can get at the public crib?

Don't Misrepresent.

The Dispatch's disposition to meddle in every possible affair was shown in its item of a week or so ago, about the delivery of a message to J. H. Collins, of this place. The item reads:

"W. H. Collins received a telegram from Lucas, Iowa last week, announcing the death of his brother, W. Collins' wife. The telegram had been delayed about two days, and he was thus prevented from attending the funeral."

This is all wide of the mark. It should be Lucas, Ohio, not Iowa, and Collins' name is wrong. But these are not important. The point is, the evident intention to cast a slur upon the Western Union telegraph office now located in this city, as Mr. Collins' message came over that line. We have the word of the lady who is operator in the uptown office, that the message was received the very same day it was sent. There was no such thing as "a delay of two days." The message was received, as shown by the books, at 4:33, p. m. and delivered at 4:45. There were other reasons that prevented Mr. Collins from attending the funeral, and he has made no complaint about the matter. If the Dispatch is bound to assume the oversight and direction of all our city, county, social and business affairs, it would be quite a relief to those concerned if it would so inform itself as to give the facts in each case.

Chicken Cholera.

The Cleveland Leader has this good word to say for a well established remedy for the disease known as "chicken cholera:"

Now that this cholera question has come up, the Leader will improve this opportunity to remark that the cock fighting editor of the Leader has personally witnessed the most remarkable results from the use of this Gauter's chicken cholera cure, he ever saw in any remedy of that character. Three separate times has a single bottle of it instantly and effectually checked for him an invasion into his collection of egg producers, that he had every reason to believe wouldn't have left half a dozen out of his hundred pullets in a month's time. This is a square fact, and the writer doesn't get a nickel for the advertisement either.

Busy wives who use SAPOLIO never seem to grow old. Try a cake…

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St, Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

ALAS!

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? Of course; but at the same time feel assured that in a measure he is to blame for the bad state into which he has fallen. A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. No mercury or deleterious drugs, not unpleasant to the taste, and always reliable—just such a remedy as you can pin your faith to without a shadow of disappointment. Read the testimonial, don't take our word for it:

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel, which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator which gave me relief, without any interruption to business." J. Hugg, Middleport, Ohio.

PRICE, $1.00.

THE PRESS still thinks the tariff does not add to the price, and calls attention to the fact that calico is taxed 4 cents a yard, and is sold at 6 cents. It seems like waste of time, to ask a man if adding a certain member of cents to the price, does not make the price greater. But that seems to be what we have to do with the Press. Suppose A imports one yard of calico that cost him, say, 3 cents. On reaching the seaport where A lives, our revenue officers will charge him 4 cents as import duty, or tariff. Now, the question for the Press to decide is: Does adding 4 cents to the original 3 cents make the cost any bigger than it would have been if the 4 cents had not been added. Most people will say the sum is bigger. But we are not certain the Press can master an arithmetical question as difficult as this.

But let us take another view of his question, and we will see that the original cost is increased, and therefore the price to the consumer, even if the yard of calico is made in this country. Calico of the cheap grades under consideration can be made, we suppose, both in this country and abroad, at about 3 cents a yard, for our cheaper cotton, better machinery, and more skilled laborers, will offset any advantage foreigners may have in cheaper labor. Now if to the actual cost of a yard of 3-cent calico, we add 1 cent profit, that will give the manufacturer a profit of 33⅓ per cent, big enough certainly. But he wants more, and gets a duty put on imported goods of some grade, of 4 cents a yard, so that the foreign article cannot be sold in this country lower than 7 cents, as we have already shown. This enables our home man to put his up to 7 cents. But as a matter of policy he puts it at 6. This being a little lower than the foreign product can be sold at, he keeps out the foreign goods, and is still able to get a big profit on his own. That is, on calico that costs him 3 cents a yard, he gets a profit of 3 cents, making 100 per cent on his goods three or four times a year. Then he becomes wealthy, of course, goes to Europe to spend his money, hobnobs with the nobility, buys or builds a castle, presents a $50,000 library to some town over there, gathers up a lot of cheap laborers, and comes back, and gives them his work to do, turning off his American laborers. Then he goes to congress, and asks for more "protection for the American laborer."

Miss Belle Scott and brother, of Spencerville, came up to see their grandma, Saturday.

R. B. Clear and family are spending a few days at Monroeville, the guests of Mrs. C's parents.

Mrs. Keeler returned from Auburn last Saturday. She reports her friend's condition as being but little improved.

Mrs. G. W. Draggoo has a severe attack of neuralgia, Mrs. M. E. Baker an attack of rheumatism. Both are confined to their rooms.

Master Lloyd Clear's goat ran away and seriously injured both buggy and harness. Lloyd is inclined to think that he must have kicked some.

Mrs Collin Robinson and Mrs. Sanford, of Bitter Root Valley, Montana, were the guest of Clyde Woodcox last Wednesday and Thursday.

The erection of the new church is now in the hands of Henry Baker. Everything is seemingly satisfactory. Mr. B., has had an abundance of experience in that line.

Last Wednesday evening Miss Nellie Gifford entertained quite a number of her young friends. Music and games seemed to be the leading features. All report it as having been an enjoyable affair.

One would naturally suppose that Sherm. Hollister was one of Auburn's charming widowers, to hear him excitedly inquiring for good, sweet girls. On further investigation we learn that this same dashing, good natured fellow is a treadin' the floor and handlin' the quill as landlord of a big hotel, and he wants the lasses to carry grub and wash dishes.

AUBURN JUNCTION.

Miss Emma Zimmerman has left the Junction Hotel.

The B. & O. has put on two extra tra express trains.

Every Christian Mother.

Should be careful with her children. The damp atmosphere of our climate often brings on coughs, colds, etc., which if not attended to in time lead to that dreaded disease consumption. To prevent this, it is the duty of all mothers to have a remedy near to check these coughs that your children may contract, and you cannot get a safer or more reliable remedy than Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. The Wonderful Tower.

The biggest structure in the world is Eiffel Tower, at Paris, 1,000 feet high. But the great discovery of Dr. Franklin Miles is the greatest, for it is promoting human happiness and health. This wonderful nerve medicine builds up worn out systems, cures fits, spasms, headache, nervous prostration, dizziness, sleeplessness, monthly pains, sexual troubles, etc. Mrs. John R. Miller, of Valparaiso, Ind., and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., gained 20 pounds a month while taking it. Finely illustrated treatise on "Nervous Diseases" and sample bottle of the Restorative Nervine, free at F. E. Davenport's, who guarantees it. 5

Thousands Poisoned.

In a recent work on heart disease, Dr. Franklin Miles the noted specialist gives many new and startling facts. Thousands of people are slowly poisoning themselves, weakening their hearts by the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol. These are heart whips, causing it to beat rapidly, thus gradually wearing it out, producing shortness of breath when exercising, pains in side and shoulder, hungry and faint spells. Finally heart failure and sudden death. For weakened and irritated hearts the press everywhere highly recommend the New Heart Cure discovered by Dr. Franklin Miles, which is for sale at F. E. The St. James Gazette makes the statement that there is a schism in the English church as to what one's ghost is; one side holding that it has an existence of its own and can walk abroad as it likes, the other party thinking that it is begotten by the relation between the minds of two living persons—that it is, in fact, a "co-operative hallucination."

A Sad Accident.

(St. Joe News Aug. 22).

Many of our readers are acquainted with Frank Coder, and were no doubt pained to hear of the distressing accident that befell his family last Wednesday, resulting in the instant death of his only child, a bright little girl of five years and the serious injury of his wife. Frank is agent for the Lake Shore Railroad at Norvell, Mich., and the particulars of the sad affair are as follows: Mrs. Coder and her little daughter, Ida, had driven over to her parents who live four miles from Norvell. After spending a pleasant day there they started to return about four o'clock. Midway between the home of her parents and her own runs a branch of the Lake Shore railroad which it was necessary for her to cross. Hundreds of times had she done so before and had become so accustomed to it that she never once thought of harm. For quite a distance before reaching the railroad, the heavy growth of timber and underbrush prevents one from seeing the train until perhaps a hundred feet from the track. She was driving along in a top buggy and did not hear the whistle, if any was sounded, but the horse felt the rumbling of the train, and becoming somewhat frightened started to run. Mrs. Coder endeavored to check him and just then they came in sight of the track, and at a glance she saw that the afternoon passenger was right upon them. She did not lose her presence of mind however, but took in the situation in a second almost, and thought her only chance was to whip the horse and get over, as she saw she could not hold him and the grade on either side would not permit of her turning around. She told the little girl to cling to her, struck the horse with the whip, and if she had had one second more would have been safe, but the locomotive struck the buggy square in the center, smashing it into slivers. The little girl was thrown thirty feet and struck upon a pile of ties, causing instant death. Mrs. Coder was thrown perhaps twenty feet and wedged beneath the fence near the cattle guard. The horse escaped without a scratch. The train was stopped as soon as possible, backed up, and took the dead and injured on board, carried them to the next station and from there they were taken home. The little girl had her dolly with her, and when picked up was clasping it closely in her arms as if to protect it from danger. Mrs. Coder was unconscious for several hours after the accident, and it was feared for a time that she would not recover, but she finally rallied and from last accounts was getting along as well as could be expected. Her collar bone was broken, and she was terribly bruised in many places.

A tennis shoe, a bracelet a restaurant a carpet, a toothpowder, and polish for silver have been named after Stanley's bride.

Guess this Conundrum.

What is the reason that a physician will not endorse a good thing when he knows as well as he knows anything that the article in question has been used for years and is a valuable remedy, but because it is a proprietary medicine they cry it down. There is not a prescription case in any drug store in all this broad land that does not hold this same article. There are few if any physicians who do not prescribe it. And yet when the same article is made and sold in larger packages, and the price is so much below a prescription that is where the shoe pinches. But there are physicians who are willing to indorse a good thing, as the following will show.

I have used quite extensively in my practice of late Loose's Extract Red Clover for indigestion, constipation, dyspepsia and stomach troubles, with the very best results, and have found it worthy of all and more than is claimed for it. The only disappointment to physicians is that it exceeds its recommendation.

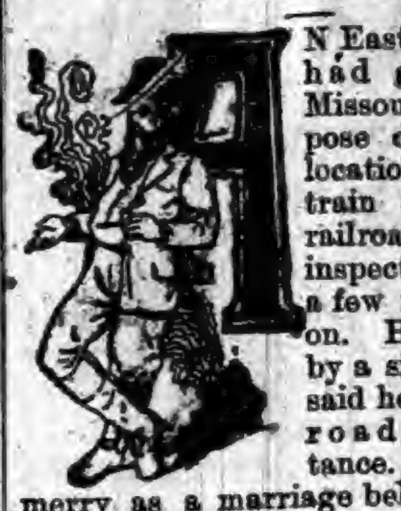
EDWARD ROSEWATER, of the Omaha Bee, recalls the fact that he once drank beer with President Lincoln. It was during the battle of Fredericksburg. Rosewater was on duty at the War Department, receiving dispatches from the battle-field, and Lincoln was there in his slippers, very pale and anxious about the result. Stanton, Seward and Captain Fox were also present. At noon Mr. Stanton sent out and got a pitcher of beer and some crackers; from this the party lunched, Mr. Lincoln drinking beer and munching crackers with the rest. It will be seen, therefore, that persons who work the growler have a distinguished precedent for it.

WE labor and labor, but there is just as much necessity for recreation as for labor. We cannot live without it—not even the laboring man. Exercise is all well enough, but it must be of the right kind. The mind as well as the body wants exercise; but it wants something else, as well as the body. It wants a change; it wants to get into a new channel, to get new life infused into it. Thus it will rest the limbs to labor; it will rest and strengthen the mind to be diverted. We should lay out our plans for recreation as well as for work.

There never was a truer saying than that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

COULDN'T STAND THE WEST.

BY FIL DOOSER.



AN Eastern man who had gone out to Missouri for the purpose of hunting a location boarded a train at an inland railroad center to inspect the country a few miles further on. He took a seat by a six-footer, who said he lived up the road a short distance. All went merry as a marriage bell till the first station was reached, about ten miles out.

"Well, here we are," said the six footer, as the train pulled up to the depot. "Goin' to git off here, ain't you?" the native inquired.

"Yes, thought I would," replied the traveler.

"Had one o' them jimmy canes here last summer," remarked the six-footer.

"Jimmy cane! Do you mean a hurricane?" eagerly asked the Easterner.

"I mean one o' them knock-down, pick-up and slash-'round wind-twirlers folks sometimes calls sly coons," answered the native, as he waved his hand around in a manner to indicate a circle, at the same time making a steam-escaping noise with his mouth.

"That so?" gasped the traveler.

"Yer betcher. Blowed down several houses an' raised cain ginerally."

"I am very much in dread of cyclones. Looks rather high and open around here," said the Easterner, as he leaned over and looked out of the car window. "I believe I will change my mind and go on to the next station."

Just before the train reached the next town the conductor came in and sat down by the traveler. The Easterner remarked something about the high and exposed prairie.

"Yes," said the conductor, "awful fine country, though; good soil, too."

"I should think this would be the farmer's paradise?" interrogated the man in search of a location.

"'Tis," said the conductor. "The country has one great drawback, though, and that is cyclones. The town we just left had a fearful shake-up last summer. The next station had a very fatal windstorm a few years back. Killed four or five persons, demolished seven or eight houses—even blew freight cars fifty feet from the track. Tell you, 'twas a genuine twister and no foolishness. You see the town is located just under a hill and the cyclone came swooping down upon the peaceful and unsuspecting inhabitants like a hawk on a hen."

Just at this moment the train arrived at the station. The traveler went out on the rear end of the car and survered the outlook, shook his head, and went back into the car. Said he guessed he wouldn't get off there. Said it made him sick and dizzy when he appoached a spot where one of those Western shake-ups had occurred.

A red-headed chap with a book under his arm came aboard the car at station No. 2. He selected a seat immediately behind the traveler and was soon engaged in conversation with him. During their confab the Easterner asked the red-headed fellow the nature of his calling.

"I am selling tombstones," he replied, with some affectation of pride. "I represent one of the largest marble works in the West. We make a specialty of getting up new and novel designs for Eastern people who pass in their checks—especially those who go at the earnest solicitation of cyclones and other atmospheric disturbances. If you stay in this country long you will likely need something in my line. I take great pleasure in handing you one of my cards, and assure you our work will prove satisfactory in every particular."

"My friend," said the traveler, "do you really mean to tell me you have special designs for cyclone victims?"

"That's about the size of it. Just sold seven at the town back there; going up to the next place where I expect to take fifteen or twenty orders before sundown."

"What! You don't mean to say they every had a cyclone up there, do you?"

"That's what. They had a little sorter of a circumlocution of the elements up there several years back that just naturally knocked the socks off of anything ever seen in this section of the country."

"My! Oh, my! but this must be a dreadful country to live in."

"Not so bad if you can live and dodge 'em long enough to get used to it."

"Look here," said the traveler, somewhat excited, "do you know of any spot on this railroad where there hasn't been a cyclone?"

"Betcher life!" replied the agent. "Never been any at the station above the next."

"Well, then, I am not going to get off at the next place. I'll go on to town No. 4. It is a great relief to find a town that hasn't been visited by one of those disturbances of nature."

Shortly before the train reached the aforesaid station the brakeman, who had dropped onto the Eastern man's failing, came into the car and seated himself near the traveler.

"I am told," said the traveler, turning around so as to face the brakeman, "that the next station has never been visited by a cyclone?"

"Naw—ah—not yet," replied the brakeman; "you see, this business goes purty much by rotation. Just like as not the very next whiff of wind that comes along will pick up this burg and shake the daylights out of it."

"Goodness!" exclaimed the Easterner.

"Besides that," continued the brakeman, "the town has been burnt down two or three times."

"I wonder! Awful, awful!"

"And robbed by the James boys!"

"Beats the deuce," said the traveler, "what these Western town have to go through. Your statement settles it; I am not going to get off here."

As the traveler met with no more information, he accordingly got off at town No. 5. In two hours he had heard of three shooting scrapes, two murders, two hangings, and a suicide. Then he waltzed straight for the depot, bought a through ticket to his old home in Massachusetts, and took the first train going east, vowing he would be mighty thankful if he got out of the country alive.

Later—He reached Louisville, Ky., just in time to see the Ohio River seven miles wide and get snatched up by the late atmospheric jubilee. His body was so deftly wrapped around a telegraph pole that they had to ship the two together.

LODGE'S FORCE BILL.

DISSECTED BY EX-SENATOR M'DONALD OF INDIANA.

An Able Letter Pointing Out the Unconstitutionality of the Measure Proposed by Lodge—If a Law, It Would Deprive American People of Their Rights.

Very recently ex-Senator Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana, received a copy of Congressman Wheeler's speech, made in the House of Representatives, against that Republican monstrosity known as the force or bayonet bill. In response Mr. McDonald wrote the following letter to the brilliant Alabama Representative:

Hon. Joseph Wheeler:

MY DEAR GENERAL—I have read with much interest your very able and exhaustive discussion of the House bill to "amend and supplement the present laws of the United States," known as the Lodge bill. Your review of the proceedings of the national convention in respect to the constitutional provision under which the Republican party claims the right to enact such laws, and of the subsequent action of the several State conventions in relation thereto, is a most valuable contribution to the constitutional history of the country, and demonstrates that if the friends of the provision had then claimed for it the construction which the Republican party has now put upon it, it never would have been engrafted upon the Federal Constitution. It was only advocated as a conservative measure, a secondary power not to be exercised unless the State Legislatures should neglect or refuse to make laws or regulations for the purpose, or from any cause be incapable of making the same, and then only until the Legislatures of the States should make provisions in the premises.

The laws to which this bill professes to be supplemental are the first in which the right of federal supervision over the election of members of Congress were ever asserted. Down to the time of their enactment the right to make or alter "regulations" for the election of members of Congress was regarded as a reserved right, only to be used by Congress to correct any negligence in any of the States in making provisions for such elections.

Believing these laws to be a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, and most dangerous in their tendency, as a member of the United States Senate, in the spring of 1879, I introduced a bill the main purpose of which was to repeal them. This, I am sorry to say, was not done; and they have remained on the statute books as the stock upon which it is proposed to engraft measures much more extreme and more directly violative of the Constitution.

The general scope and purpose of the Constitution of the United States in regard to the election of members of Congress would seem too plain to admit of any construction which would permit the control of such elections by Federal officers. The second section declares that the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. The control of suffrage is in the States. The qualifications of the voters are such as may be prescribed by the States in defining the qualifications of the "most numerous branch of the State Legislature." In brief, in the language of the Constitution of the United States, members of the House of Representatives are to be chosen "by the people of the United States."

It is incompatible with the free exercise of these rights that the officers who supervise their exercise should be chosen by some other than the people of the States within which they are exercisable, and yet the Federal laws on that subject now in force and the so-called Lodge bill in a more marked degree assume to provide and do provide for just that kind of supervision. The Lodge bill goes further and vests in the Federal Election Commissioners the power to determine the qualifications of voters by authorizing them to revise State registers, to reject votes and to certify results, so that votes which may be received and counted by the State officers for members of the "most numerous branch of the State Legislature" as legal may be rejected by the Federal officers when offered for members of Congress, although offered at the same time and place and on the same ballot. Their States are deprived of a right which the Constitution vests in them of determining who may vote for members of Congress. This is an unwarranted usurpation, and if persisted in and submitted to will lead to other and still more dangerous infractions of the Constitution.

The same language that reserves to Congress the right by law to make or alter the regulations made by a State for the election of members of the House of Representatives applies to the election of U. S. Senators, except as to the place of choosing Senators. In all other respects the power is the same. Senators, it is true, are to be chosen by the Legislature of each State, but that right is no more sacred than the right of the people of the several States "to choose members of the House of Representatives." In one sense it is less so, as the qualifications of electors of members of the House are expressly limited, and must be defined by the laws of the several States. If the people tolerate Federal interference in the election of members of the House of Representatives, as proposed in the Lodge Bill, can any one say how long it will be until the Republican party will attempt through Congress to interfere with the "manner" of holding elections for U. S. Senators and virtually take those elections out of the hands of the State authorities, and thus put the election of members to both branches of Congress under the control of Federal officers, with power to supervise the elections and certify results? It was a long time before any party arose in this country that possessed the hardihood to insist upon a departure from the undoubted spirit and true meaning of the Constitution on the subject of elections, but once having broken through the just bounds which the founders of the Constitution had indicated, there seems to be no limit to the demands.

Mr. Justice Story, in his "Commentaries on the Constitution," as quoted by you, said: "A period of forty years has since passed without any attempt by Congress to make any regulations or interfere in the slightest degree with the election of members of Congress," and after further comment adds: "The truth is that Congress would never resort to a measure of this sort for the purpose of oppression or party triumph until that body ceased to represent the will of the States and the people, and if, under such circumstances, the members would still hold office, it would be because a general and irredeemable corruption or indifference pervades the whole community. No republican constitution could afford any remedy for such a state of things."

The time has come when a majority of Congress seems willing to pervert the Constitution for the purpose of securing the triumph of its party and intrenching it in power, and it remains to be seen whether the people will submit to its usurpation. Such schemes have failed in the past, and I have faith to believe they will fail in the future. If the Constitution "affords no remedy for such a state of things," the people will have the power and, I believe, the virtue to correct the wrong. Very truly yours,

J. E. McDONALD.

A Gigantic Political Trust.

British journals usually have very hazy ideas both regarding American politics and American geography. On the matter of the tariff their utterances are especially discredited by the high protectionists of this country. The following editorial from the London Daily News is so pointed and so true, however, whatever motive may have inspired it, that it makes good reading even in this country: "Mr. Blaine, scandalized by the excesses of American protectionists, is a sight for men, if not exactly for superior beings. This can now be witnessed in all its lurid beauty at Washington. Mr. Blaine declared before the Senate committee that the McKinley bill was the most infamous measure ever concocted. The bill in question represents the attempt of the Republicans to divide spoils not of the party but of the nation. It is the most perfect machine ever devised for stopping every avenue or loophole by which untaxed products may find their way to the American consumer.

"In this sense it appears to be too much even for the leaders of the Republican party, who after all have to consider how the Government of the republic is to be carried on. The last election was won by the subscriptions of wealthy manufacturers, and these capitalists as a consideration now demand the absolute right to dictate the fiscal policy of the administration. They are plain dealers. They have bought the Government in, and they expect the Government to serve their interests at the expense of the nation. They establish a gigantic political trust, which promises to pay better than all the other trusts put together. All appointments are submitted to them. They have made a clean sweep of most of the free-trade incumbents of American offices throughout the world."

REBUKE TO PARTISANS.

LECTURE READ TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Minority Report in the Clayton-Breckinridge Election Contest Denounces the Action of the Majority as Unjust, Scandalous, and Full of Slanders.

[Washington special.]

Through Mr. Maish, of Pennsylvania, the Democratic members of the House Committee on Elections have filed a minority report in the contested election case of Clifton R. Breckinridge against John M. Clayton, from the Second District of Arkansas. The report is particularly severe on the sub-committee that investigated the murder of Colonel Clayton and on the Elections Committee. After citing the fact that the Second District had returned Democratic members in all except one election, and contending that the presumption, therefore, is in favor of Mr. Breckinridge, the report admits the stealing of the ballot-box from Plummerville Precinct, but holds that this did not change the result and that Colonel Clayton could not have been elected with the addition to his returns of Republican ballots cast at Plummerville. Relative to the instructions given by the House for a "full and thorough investigation" of the case, the report calls attention to the great number of issues involved. The sub-committee, it states, spent but twelve days in taking evidence.

"The House may judge upon this," the report goes on to say, "and it will be called upon to judge, from proceedings still more unusual and shocking, how, disgracefully and criminally this case has been handled. Party prejudice, malice and a purpose to accomplish an improper end seems to have deadened every sensibility in gentlemen from whom the House and the country had a right to expect better things. Some unworthy purpose seems to be their end and object. Some ignoble compact seems to have forestalled their action. Some base and disingenuous mind seems to have guided them, and it is far short of the truth to say that this investigation has been a miserable farce and that the majority report is unfounded in truth, not justified by the evidence, and is defaced by the repetition of partisan slanders not sustained by any testimony. Knowing the utter insufficiency of relative evidence to unseat Mr. Breckinridge, knowing, indeed, that it proves him elected, the majority report ranges in every imaginable direction for mattter to distort in the vain hope to borrow strength thereby."

The report says in conclusion that when those intrusted with official power so forget right, justice and duty as to act as the majority of the committe has done, it brings distrust and odium on a party and the House, and their actions and conclusions should be rejected and rebuked. "Never has a great question been so wretchedly, so feebly, so unjustly, and so scandalously treated and adjudicated," adds the report, "but passion under injury and wrong is not the mode of redress, and if the House puts the seal of approval on the report and recommendations of the committee, then we appeal to the people to rebuke it and right it by their votes."

TARIFF AND WAGES.

Some Interesting Facts and Figures.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

If any one should look through the last part of the State Bureau of Labor Statistics' report in the expectation of tracing some connection between the wages paid in manufacturing industries and the tariff he would be very much disappointed. It is impossible to find any such connection. Upon no other industry, for example, has tariff been lavished with so liberal a hand as upon woolens. We should naturally expect that here a high rate of wages would rule. And yet, according to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, it appears that 22 per cent. of the employes who are included in the wage returns receive less than $5, more than one-half receive less than 7, and more than three-fourths less than $10 a week. As 74 per cent. of the total number employed in this industry are represented in the wage returns, these results no doubt give the average situation.

Cotton goods, again, enjoy a very liberal protection, the tariff here ranging from 40 to 75 per cent., and the leading mills are paying dividends of from 6 to 20 per cent. If the rate of wages in any way depends upon the tariff, one would expect to find very good wages prevailing here. And yet, of the 48,178 employes represented in the wage tables, or 80 per cent. of the whole number engaged in the industry, over 19,000, or over 40 per cent., receive less than $5 a week, or less than 84 cents a day. More than three-fourths receive less than $7 a week, and more than 84 per cent. less than $8. That cannot be called large pay.

Take now the paper industry. This enjoys the least protection of any great manufacturing business of Massachusetts. Three-fourths of the total number of employes are represented in the wage tables, and it appears that less than 13.5 per cent, of these receive less than $5 a week, and less than 40 per cent. get under $8 and over, and quite one-fourth get over $10. Nearly one-half the men in this manufacture get $10 and more a week, and nearly one-fourth receive over $15. In woolen goods, on the other hand, only about 21 per cent. of the men get $10 and over, and only about 5 per cent., or one-twentieth, get over $15.

Boots and shoes are protected by a tariff of 30 per cent., which is a little above that laid upon paper, but much less than the average levied upon cotton and woolen goods. About 60 per cent. of the total number of employes in this great industry are represented in the wage tables. Of this number only 6.5 per cent. receive less than $5 per week—which compares with 22 per cent. in woolens, 25 per cent. in worsteds and 40 per cent. in cottons. Only about one-third of them receive less than $9, nearly one-half get $12 and over and one-fifth get $15 and more. Of the males more than one-half receive $12 and over a week.

If these great industries represented the whole situation we should be obliged to conclude that high wages were more apt to be found in lightly protected than in the more highly protected industries. And this is generally the case. Certain it is, in any event, that high tariffs do not make high wages. They are based upon conditions very different from the tariff enactments of Congress. Congress may heap up duties on woolens, or worsteds, or cotton goods, or linens, or what not, but the employes in these industries will go right on toiling for less than $8 a week just the same. This is made so evident from the facts presented in the statistical report referred to as to need no further demonstration.

FLASHES OF FUN.

GOT up to kiln—the brickyard.

COPPER-FACED types—Indians and Mongolians.

HE—Supposing I were to scold you because the coffee is cold? She—I would make it hot for you, dear!

ELSIE—Did you know papa well before you married him, mamma? Mother (sadly)—No, dear, I didn't.

CITY boarder (with numerous progeny)—Are there any snakes here? Jersey farmer—Only around the fruit-trees, mum.

CUSTOMER—That sugar of yours was dreadfully adulterated. Grocer—But, my dear sir, it grew that way—sandy soil, you know.

CHICAGO girl—I threw my shoe after the carriage as the wedding party drove away. New York girl—What without any help?

"WE'VE named our daughter Beretta." "Curious name that; it is the name of a hat or cap." "I know it; we call her Hattie for short."

GIRL graduate—So this is your editorial room, is it? Janitor—Yes. "And are all these gentlemen editors?" "Yes. Which one of them is We?"

BOY—I say, mister, I don't suppose you don't know of nobody what don't want to have nobody do nothing, don't you? Gentleman addressed—Yes, I don't.

STRANGER—I notice everybody calls that fine-looking gentleman "Lying Smith." Why is that? Indignant Westerner—He had charge of the census here.

DOES he pitch a curve? Mrs. Bunting—I see that Emin Pasha is to have a salary of $50,000 a year. Bunting—You don't say! What club has he signed with?

"THAT red star is Mars," she remarked as they sat on the piazza and she pointed upward. "Where's pa's?" he inquired, facetiously. "Oh, he thinks he owns the earth," answered the dear girl, scornfully.

LITERARY old maid—There is a line of poetry that runs. "There never ending spring abides." Do you know who wrote it? Billy Sharp—I do not know his name, but I think he must have been the advertising agent of the Waterbury Watch Company.

FIRST Indiana lawyer—These white caps should be made to feel the full force of the law. Second Indiana lawyer—Indeed they must. They have got the community into such a state of terror that people are afraid to do wrong, and we're likely to starve.

A CLINCHER:—Brown—I tell you I paid that bill months ago. Tailor—You're entirely mistaken. Brown—Then you won't take my word for it? Tailor—No, sir. Brown—Well, then, I have only one other proof to offer. Tailor—What's that? Brown—Your receipt.

JOHNNY (reading aloud a tale of adventure)—And he was cast on a desolate shore and he did not see the face of a man for years. Sister Kate—Why, mamma! the poor unfortunate must have been wrecked on the beach where we were last summer. We were there three months, you remember, and didn't see a man the whole time.

SUCH A FUNNY MAN.

He made two jokes, two funny jokes,
Brim full of wit unstinted,
And then he smiled and said, "How folks
Will laugh when those are printed."
In one he said a woman spent
A whole long day in shopping;
But spent naught else, not even a cent,
Yet kept the salesmen hopping.
And then the other joke began,
A martyr husband, mopping
His brow, said, "I'm a ruined man;
My wife has gone out shopping."
Now, when the jest appeared, a crowd
Of folks read and reflected;
And then they laughed out long and loud,
Just as he had expected.

What Makes One Proud of American Women.

Tradition keeps informing us how good-looking princesses are, but nobody can ever accuse the Guelph family of sinning in the way of possessing a professional beauty in its ranks. The Princess of Wales has a charmingly sweet face, but take away from her that glorification which is about royalty and you would never give her a second look. She wears the wiggiest of wigs, and horror upon horrors, is dowdy-looking. Loyal subjects refer to her as the best dressed woman in the world. This is absolute nonsense. If I were King of England I should make an effort to get in a little outside blood and have the chance of showing some good-looking women in the family. Personally not given to the waving of the star-spangled banner, I never feel so proud of the American women as when I see their English sisters. The passe beauty is to the fore—a something easily understood when the court age is considered. Without exception she uses paint in the most lavish manner, puts a daub under each eye, one on her chin and one on each ear, and then overlays this with a thick coating of powder and believes she has beautified herself. Her inclination is to a rather frowzy head, and, though we rave over London tailor-made clothes, there is no doubt about it that English tailors fit women better after they have had a short stay in New York.—"Bab," in Terre Haute Express.

Uninteresting Conversationists.

Mrs. D'Avenoo—Our country cousins are coming next week. It's such a trial to entertain rural relations. They don't do anything but talk about crops.

Mrs. De Style—Yes, isn't it dreadful? By the way, did you see Mrs. De Fashion on the avenue yesterday afternoon? She had on a dress which I know is an old one made over, and, just think—it was dyed.

Mrs. D'Avenoo—Yes, but you should have seen Mrs. Tiptop out riding. Her bonnet was a full month behind the mode.—Good News.

Decreasing Signs of Refinement Out West

Mr. Backbay—You found things very different out West from what they are here, I suppose.

Miss Beacon—Yes, indeed. As I journeyed westward I noticed constantly the decreasing signs of refinement.

Mr. Backbay—What, for instance?

Miss Beacon—Well, for example; when we reached Chicago I found that the boys no longer came through the train selling chewing gum.

A Horrid Thing.

"Do you like babies, Mr. White?" asked the young mother, tenderly, of the grim old bachelor who sat at the foot of the table.

"Don't know, marm," replied the bachelor, promptly, between two mouthfuls of potato; "never tasted any."—Somerville Journal.

INTERVIEWER—You began life as a clerk, did you not? Merchant—No, sir; I began life as a king. I was the first baby.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. ☞ No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

Poisoned Whisky Given a Young Farmer.

William Coble, son of Richard Coble, a prominent farmer in Carroll County, is lying at the point of death, the victim of a dastardly outrage. Young Coble, who is nearly twenty-one years of age, attended the old settlers' dance at Delphi, accompanied by the daughter of Joseph Been, of Rock Creek Township. During the evening young Coble was offered some whisky by Frank Bending, a tough young man of the same locality. After drinking Coble became deathly sick, and Bending took him in his buggy to the Bending homestead, and later on, becoming worse, took him home. Dr. Smith, of Delphi, and Dr. Stewart, of Rockfield, were called to attend the unfortunate young man. They quickly pronounced it a case of poisoning. It develops that Bending had put cantharides in the whisky for a joke before letting Coble drink. Bending's character is very bad, and should young Coble die he will be severely dealt with.

—A reunion of ex-soldiers of Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan will be held at Elkhart, September 22. Addresses will be delivered by Gen. Alger and Corporal Tanner.

—Henry Priddy, of Rochester, bought a vicious stallion for almost nothing, but when he attempted to hitch the animal to a buggy Priddy was almost kicked to death. The horse was shot.

—Clarence Mitchell, 11 years old, fell from a trapeze at Charleston, breaking the left arm so badly that the bones protruded through the flesh. The elbow and wrist were both dislocated.

—Witchcraft treatment is alleged to have caused the death of the child of Mr. and Mrs. William Davis, residents of Schultztown, a suburb of Logansport. The matter is under investigation.

—A brakeman on the B. E. & W. R. Railroad, while coupling cars at Portland, had his head badly crushed by the bumpers and was sent to his home in Van Wert, O. The injury appears fatal.

—George Bowers, a deaf and dumb man at Greencastle, was struck by a locomotive while crossing the track near the depot in that city. He was knocked down, but fortunately escaped serious injury.

—The little child of J. B. Henderson, near Leesville, was playing on a large log, when, by his pranks, it was overbalanced, and in rolling down a hill it threw the little fellow to the ground, killing him instantly.

—John Miller, of Heth Township, Harrison County, rested a loaded shotgun on one of his feet, the barrels down, a few days ago, and it was accidentally discharged. Miller is now minus one of his toes, and his foot is badly mangled.

—Edward Gillganon, a machinist, employed in the Louisville & Nashville shops, near Evansville, met with an accident which resulted in his death. He was working on an immense drive-wheel, when it fell over on him, crushing him in a horrible manner.

—Willie Maney, the 6-year-old son of T. C. Maney, of Clarksville, a suburb of Jeffersonville, was accidentally shot by a 12-year-old son of James Smith. The weapon was a flobert rifle, the ball entering the left temple and penetrating the brain. He died soon afterwards.

—Bate Kirkham, a 'bus driver, got off a Terre Haute and Logansport train at Ellsworth to get a glass of beer at a near-by saloon. In attempting to board the moving train he fell between the platform and the wheels cut his body in two. The remains were taken to his home at Sullivan.

—Dr. Laban Palmer, of Knightsville, a practicing physician for sixty years, died. He was born in Virginia in 1809, and came to this State in 1845. His death was the result of injuries received three years ago in a runaway accident.

—Robert Long, while fishing in Ohio, at Clarksville, found a leather valise floating in the water. On opening, the decomposed remains of a white female infant, two months old, fell at his feet. It was buried in the potters' field at Jeffersonville.

—Joseph Lamb, who escaped from the Southern prison two years ago, while serving a term for robbery, was arrested near Bloomington recently. Lamb was playing the roll of a farmer and was attending an Alliance meeting when his identity was discovered.

—Religious excitement caused the insanity of Mrs. H. Leips, who resides near Elkinsville, Brown County, and it became necessary to bind her hand and foot. Her daughter, on seeing her mother in this position, lost her mind, and is a raving maniac. Both will be sent to the Central asylum.

—William Finter, of Jeffersonville, was aroused a few nights ago by the cries of a child. Going to the door he found his 13-year-old daughter standing outside in her night attire. She is a somnambulist, and had walked out of the second-story window and fallen to the ground, twenty-five feet below, escaping with only slight injuries.

—An explosion in the McCracklin coal mine at Farmersburg was caused by gas becoming ignited from a miner's lamp. Emery McCracklin, an operator, was taken out dead, and his brother Frank was so badly burned that he cannot recover. Lafayette Saunders, another operator, is still in the mine and thought to be dead.

—The Southern Indiana Fish Protective Association will take measures to have the proper authorities compel the owners of mill-dams in the streams of Floyd and adjoining counties to have fish ladders placed over them. This device is useful from the fact that fish at spawning time ascend to the head-waters of the stream to deposit the spawn in order that the small fry may have protection from the voracious large fish that swim in the deeper water near the mouth.

—Three boys, named Mann, Richardson and Smeltzer, were hunting a few miles south of Elkhart with but one gun, when Smeltzer, who carried the gun, asked the others to go further with him than they wished, and, upon refusal, told them he would shoot them unless they did so. The other boys started to run away, whereupon Smeltzer shot Mann in the neck, making a wound, the outcome of which cannot yet be determined. Smeltzer made no effort to escape.

—Miss Sarah E. daughter of Dr. McKaig, of Noble Township, Cass County, committed suicide at Logansport by taking morphine. A touching letter was found under her pillow addressed to C. W. Buchanan, a Pan Handle brakeman, of that city, a former lover of the unfortunate girl, in which she asks that she be buried in white, with a bunch of forget-me-nots. The letter also upbraided Buchanan for jilting her. The dead girl was 18 years of age, and bright and attractive.

—Joseph Kleinrickert, a young farmer who resided six miles north of Fort Wayne, met with a horrible death. He was engaged in sharpening a plow point at an emery wheel placed inside of his barn, the power being supplied by a horse engine on the outside. The boy who drove the horse was astonished by a loud crash from within the barn, and hastening inside found that the whirling wheel had burst, and discovered Kleinrickert lying on the floor dead. A portion of the wheel had carried away the top of his head.

—An unknown disease has fastened upon several fine horses in the stables of James V. Mitchell, near Martinsville. The horses were apparently healthy in every way when their throats began swelling and have continued until breathing has become very difficult and painful. Nothing as yet has been found to alleviate the suffering. The swelling is attended with no other sickness. Farmers throughout the neighborhood are using disinfectants, burning brimstone and exercising great caution to prevent the disease spreading.

—Carrollton Township, Carroll County, is greatly wrought up over the elopement of Lettie, the 19-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and Henry J. Cline, a prominent young farmer of that neighborhood. The young couple left the bride's home after midnight, and, arousing Rev. Riley Montgomery at 3 o'clock in the morning, were made man and wife. The news of the marriage so shocked the bride's mother that she is now lying at the point of death. Brown threatens to inflict serious injury on his new son-in-law and on the minister who officiated at the marriage.

—Moses Decker and Louis Preston, two men who made their homes near Middletown, were struck by the eastbound express on the Big Four road, near Chesterfield, and instantly killed. They had been working for a few days in that neighborhood, and were paid off. They immediately went to a saloon, and both were soon in an intoxicated condition. The last seen of them they were on the railroad, walking arm-in-arm, singing and shouting. It is supposed they lay down upon the track, went to sleep, and were caught by the train. Both were horribly mangled, Preston being literally cut to pieces. Both were unmarried.

—The other night, a band of White Caps numbering six persons entered the house of Joseph Wilkey, near Epsom, in the northern part of Daviess County, took him from bed and escorted him to a wood near by, where they administered a light whipping to their victim. The men had blackened their faces, but under this disguise Wilkey recognized three of the band, who will be arrested immediately. Wilkey is a harmless fellow, owning a little farm, and has a wife and several children. His assailants charged him with being too intimate with a woman of the neighborhood, but this story is not believed. The authorities are aroused at this, the second White-cap outrage that has occurred in that county within the past six months, and will make every effort to bring the guilty wretches to justice.

—A representative of an Indianapolis gas syndicate offered the Madison Gaslight Company $70,000 for its plant. The offer was declined.

—Farmers in the Southern part of the State report that young quail were never so abundant in the stubble-fields as they are this season, and fine sport is predicted when the season opens. Young squirrels are also plentiful in the woods, and rabbits can be seen bounding along every unfrequented country road late in in the afternoon.

—While en route to St. Louis, J. S. Ferguson, a traveling salesman, fell from the cars and struck a barbed-wire fence. He now lies at North Vernon in a dangerous condition, his face being frightfully lacerated, his spine injured, and his left arm and wrist broken.

—The Big Four depot at Troutman's Station, three miles west of Crawfordsville, was entered by thieves. All the tickets were thrown on the floor, but it is not known whether any were taken. Very little money was secured, but $10 was overlooked that was in an envelope in the money-drawer.

The Soft Sunlight.

The blinds were open. The soft sunlight of May streamed into the room.

"Mother," said a girl, whose rich hair spread over the pillow, like a glossy covering, "prop me up. I want to look out. How green the grass is. Snow was on the ground when I went to bed. Mother, didn't you say that I would be well by spring?"

"Yes, darling."

"But I am not well."

The mother sighed. "Ah, child, I fear you did not stop work soon enough. You sewed your life away."

"I didn't know. I knew that I had to work. I did so long for spring to come, but now that it is here, the air is cool. Mother, see if I have a chill."

"No, darling," the mother replied, placing her hand on the girl's brow.

A carriage passed. Merry laughter came in with the sunlight. A frolicsome boy, held by a happy woman, threw a rose toward the window.

"I wish I could ride in a carriage. I have seen so little of the world, mother, and the little I have seen has not been rich with pleasure. There, mother, I make you weep. I will not complain. It was only for a moment."

She put her wasted arms around her mother's neck.

"No, I will not complain. I know that you have done the best you could. Please put the blanket on my feet. Mother, don't you remember once when they asked me to join the church?"

"Yes, precious, but don't let that worry you."

"Oh, it does not worry me," she replied, with a smile. "I am not afraid. I have never harmed a living thing. I could never bear to keep a bird in a cage. God could not have the heart to punish such a poor, frail thing as I am, could He, mother?"

"No, darling. Don't let your mind dwell upon such subjects."

"They are not unpleasant, mother. How I do love you," she said, pressing her mother's head against her poor bosom. "In all my life I don't think that I have loved you so much as I do now. You look beautiful to me. Don't cry, mother, please don't."

"Oh, my angel—my all, how can I give you up!"

"Don't, mother—don't. You must not talk that way. Last night when you thought I was asleep I heard you pray for me. There now, mother. Ease me down. Has the sun stopped shining?"

"No, darling."

"I don't see it. No, it's gone. Kiss me—kiss me again."

The soft May sunlight streamed into the room and fell upon a coffin. A carriage passed. A happy woman held a frolicsome boy.—Arkansaw Traveler.

One Thing at a Time.

Early in life I learned from a very simple incident a wholesome lesson and one which has since been of incalculable benefit to me, says a correspondence.

When I was between twelve and fourteen years old my father broke up a new field on his farm, and planted it with potatoes, and when the plants were two or three inches high, he sent me to hoe it. The ground of that place was hard to till; it was matted with grass roots and sprinkled with stones. I hoed the first row, and then stopped to take a general look at the task before me. Grass as high as the potatoes was everywhere, and looking at the whole from any point it seemed to be a solid mass. I had the work to do all alone, and as I stood staring at the broad reach of weedy soil, I felt a good mind not to try to do anything further then with it.

Just that minute I happened to look down at the hill nearest my feet. The grass didn't seem just quite as thick there and I said to myself, I can hoe this one well enough.

When it was done another thought came to help me; I shan't have to hoe but one hill at a time, any rate.

And so I went to the next and next. But here I stopped again and looked over the field. That gave me another thought, too. I could hoe every hill as I came to it; it was only looking away off to all the hills that made the whole seem impossible.

"I won't look at it!" I said; and I pulled my hat over my eyes so I could see nothing but the spot where my hoe had to dig.

In the course of time I had gone over the whole field, looking only at the hill in hand, and my work was done.

I learned a lesson, tugging away at those grass roots, which I never forgot. It was to look right down at the one thing to be done now, and not hinder and discourage myself by looking off at the things I haven't come to. I've been working ever since that summer at the hill nearest my feet, and I have always found it the easiest way to get a hard task accomplished, as it is the true way to prepare a field for the harvest.

A Story of Chinese Gordon.

There is a story told of Chinese Gordon, one of the most striking which centers in his romantic personality. While he was in China there was some mutiny in the army over bad rations or stopped pay. It was Gordon's duty to stop that mutiny, and this is how he did it. He had the men drawn up and went and stood a few paces in front of them. At his elbow were half a dozen trusty fellows with loaded rifles. "Now," he said, "you must have some leaders; let them stand out and I'll speak to them" There was a moment's pause. "Come, fall out!" said Gordon again, in a cool everyday voice, as if he was ordering dinner. The men looked at one another, and stirred in their places as his keen eye ran along the ranks. Then two men stepped forward. Gordon quietly gave a signal to his half dozen men with loaded rifles, and the next moment the two ringleaders were shot dead. So ended the mutiny. "But I always think," Gordon used to say, meditatively after telling the story, "I always think I murdered those men." —Boston Transcript.

The Humorist.

Statesmen may be made, but genuine humorists are the production of nature alone. A great man or two will not be missed, but the man who makes healthful innocent fun, who sets the heart to "crowing like a chanticleer," who makes two smiles where there was but one or no smile before, is a benefactor of the race, a messenger of good straight from the hands of the goddess of laughter and pleasant thoughts. We bless him while he lives, we miss him when he leaves us, and philosophy itself, with Hamlet, mourns more over the Yoricks that it has lost than the more sovereign things that have perished from the earth.—Baltimore Sun.

MEN are always trying to turn their money into something else, but when people get religion, they know they have the best thing on earth, and don't want to part with it.

He Wasn't Extravagant.

Cautious people are sometimes too cautious. The story of a man who considered seriously for a week whether it would be wise for him to pay $500 for a lot, and after deciding in the affirmative learned from the real estate man in a more careful conversation that it was $500 per foot, is a case in point.

A few days ago a stranger while passing a haberdasher's store was attracted by a display of shirts, which were further distinguished by a placard on which was printed the legend: "These are seventy-five cents." It happened that in the same case were a few silk umbrellas, which command about $6 each on a pleasant day, with a slight tendency to rise if clouds gather.

The pedestrian gazed long and earnestly into the window; then he wandered away, only to return soon and gaze again. This was repeated several times. Finally he entered the store and asked to look at the umbrellas. One was brought out, and he opened and examined it with the utmost care. It seemed to suit him exactly, and he turned to the proprietor and remarked: "I'll give you an even sixty cents for it." The proprietor evidently didn't think he understood aright, for he leaned forward and said: "What?" The stranger again informed him, "I'll give an even sixty cents for the umbrella." The proprietor was dazed. Then he began to recover.

"How much do you think it costs?" he inquired.

"Seventy-five cents."

"And have you been debating all this time whether you would give that amount for a silk umbrella?"

The stranger said he had.

The proprietor led him gently but firmly to the door. "My friend," he said tenderly, "you are too far from home, and you'd better scoot before some hungry car horse gets a chance to nibble at you and makes a funeral of you before the mistake is discovered.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

His Occupation.

At one of the depots in St. Louis there used to be a one-legged man, about 40 years old, who asked people for alms by saying:

"Please help a poor man who has lost his right leg and can no longer follow his occupation."

I encountered him three times a week for a year or more, and generally had something to give him, but one day it occurred to me to question him, and I asked:

"Lose your leg by accident?"

"Yes, sir."

"What sort?"

"Fellow shot me in the knee."

"So? And you lost your occupation?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you use to follow?"

"I used to kick dead-beat niggers for an eating house on the levee!"—New York Sun.

Startling Discovery.

The discovery by the inhabitants of a locality hitherto unvisited by the pestilent scourge of fever and ague, that it exists in their very midst, is decidedly startling. Such discoveries are made at every season, in every part of the Union. Subsequently, when it is ascertained, as it invariably is at such times, through the valuable experience of some one who has been benefited and cured, that Hostetter's Stomach Bittters is a thoroughly efficacious eradicator of the malarial poison, and a means of fortifying the system against it, a feeling of more security and tranquility reigns throughout the whole neighborhood. Besides the febrile forms of malarial disease, dumb ague and ague cake are removed by the potent action of the Bitters, to which science also gives its sanction as a remedy for rheumatism, dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, debility, kidney troubles, and all diseases impairing the organs of digestion and assimilation.

The Weight of a Dollar Bill.

Do you know how many one dollar bills it takes to weigh as much as a $20 gold piece? Driving out to the White Bear recently one of those walking compendiums of useful information sprung the above query, and the opinions that it elicited show a remarkable range. One member of the party, whose business it is to handle money in large sums, after profound thought, suggested that the number would be from 1,000 to 1,200. Others guessed down the line to 500, but no one less than that number. After all had placed themselves on record, the compendium stated that the number of bills was 30 or 31, according to their condition as to dirtiness and age.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. IT PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY........AUGUST 28, 1890.

TARIFF bill will come to a vote in the senate, Sept. 8.

THE federal election bill, known as the "Force Bill" is likely to be put off till the next session.

SILVER has been found at Waveland, south of Crawfordsville, Ind., and efforts will be made to develop a mine.

THE big strike in New York still causes trouble, though most of the trains are running. But the engineers and firemen refuse to assist the K. of L.

THE blue grass palace at Creston, Iowa, is now in operation. It is a display of which the people are very proud and visitors come from all over the state.

THE well known McVicker's Opera House in Chicago, burned Tuesday about four in the afternoon. Loss about a quarter of a million. Will be rebuilt at once.

BIG railroad wreck on the Old Colony road, near Boston last Tuesday. Fifteen were killed and many injured. Almost the same spot, where the terrible wreck of a few years ago occurred.

CARNEGIE has laid up fifty-five millions in twenty-nine years, by the aid of the robber tariff. He could have laid up several millions without a tariff. Why then, should he have protection when he don't need it?

THE last democratic legislature passed a law fixing the pay for the deputy of the attorney-general of Indiana at $600., Michener, the republican incumbent defies the law and takes $2,400. No wonder the state is in debt.

FRANCE has sent as a gift to America a massive statue of Lafayette, in bronze and marble. It is fifty feet high and will cost $200,000. It arrived at New York last week. It will be put up in Lafayette Square, Washington.

LAST Tuesday afternoon a destructive cyclone swept the mining regions of Pennsylvania, and besides injuring several small towns, almost totally destroyed the city of Wilkesbarre. A number were killed and many injured.

THE democrats should be given the state offices, so they can open the books and see what has become of the money. They should also have the legislature for as shown by its work, the last one saved the people hundreds of thousands of dollars in low appropriations, cheap school books and a general reduction of expenses.

THREE states, Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, held state election early in this month. All gave increased democratic majorities. Kentucky gave Cleveland in 1888, about 28,000 majority. This year it gives over 50,000. Tennessee and Alabama do nearly as well. The territory of Oklahoma gave a small republican majority.

CARNEGIE, the Pennsylvania iron founder, is still giving away great sums of money to various towns in Scotland, his native country. His money was wrung from the common people of the United States, by excessive profits brought by a protective tariff. When will Americans get tired of paying out their hard earnings, for wealthy men to send abroad.

AGAIN we call on republican editors to show their hand. Their outcry about the debt they themselves helped to make is only to pave the way for raising the tax levy from 12 cents on a hundred dollars, as fixed and kept so by democrats, up to 18 or 20 cents. This is their scheme. The more taxes, the more money lying idle in Indianapolis offices to speculate with.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel of last Thursday, has a good word to say of Wallace Robbins, well known here. In a letter from Peru, the writer says:

> Of course, W. W. Robbins, who so well represented the county in the last legislature, was renominated. He was active in the support of the school book bill and all measures favorable to the railway employes notably the anti-Pinkerton bill, and he will run ahead of his ticket.

THE Pinkerton detectives employed by the New York Central road, to prevent the strikers from delaying work, have caused trouble, as usual. At Albany, the strikers threw stones at them, and they fired on the crowd. This was done several times and one or two lives lost. These detectives cannot be employed in armed bodies in Indiana. A democratic legislature made a law to prevent it.

BEATEN at every point in the tariff discussion, republican editors eagerly catch up the tune their bosses have ordered them to sing, and are devoting their attention to the debt which they have saddled on the state. If they would get their state officers to stay at home and attend to their work, and stop overdrawing the appropriations made by a democratic legislature, it would be more sensible.

SILVER has risen in price since the passage of the silver bill. That shows how easy it would be to make it still higher by providing for free coinage. The bullion value of the silver dollar, has of course come up higher, and that much nearer the value of a gold dollar. Free coinage is what the people have been asking for years, and had they the power to settle it, it would have been settled long ago.

IF WAGES are made high by a protective tariff how comes it that the miners of Clay county in this state, have to work for an average of $5 a week? In the same labor in England, the average is $5.60.

A PROTECTIVE tariff is demanded by the capitalists and by no one else. Their profits would be great enough without, but "protection" enables them to get still greater. But their laborers are not besieging congress for a higher tariff. This proves that it is not the workmen, but the wealthy owners who are benefitted. No labor organization, as far as we have heard, favors the McKinley bill. Laboring men in general are opposed to it.

REPUBLICAN editors who claim that American labor receives better pay than in other countries, and that it is the blessed tariff tax that does it, should study what Blaine said, at the time he was Garfield's secretary of state. In his report, 1881, on "The Cotton Goods Trade" he used this language. "Undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter, and their longer hours of labor."

THE BUTLER RECORD wants to know, you know, if the COURIER thinks Harrison's administration caused wheat to be $1. Certainly not. The effect of the policy of Harrison's administration would be to lower the price. The effect of Cleveland's policy would be to raise it. But we had been making a good deal of fun of republican papers that called on the farmers to stand by Harrison in 1888, because if Cleveland was elected prices would go down, and if Harrison was elected, prices would go up. As a matter of fact Harrison was elected, and prices went down, and even then, republican editors could not, or would not understand that they and their dupes had exposed themselves to ridicule.

The County Campaign.

The county campaign so far, is not very exciting. But perhaps this is all the better. At all events there is not much outside show. The new law in relation to bribery, keeps all parties pretty straight. They dare not even treat the voters, and very little of it is done, and that on the sly. The candidates are compelled to go among the people for assistance, and that is the proper way. We see the republican candidates here every few days, and they seem to be in excellent spirits. But they won't feel that way about the first week in November. Our own men do not seem to be in a hurry. But if they commence active work early in September and keep at it, there is still time enough. We talked lately, with one of the leading ones, and this is his idea, a short, rattling campaign. Mr. Williams was in town Tuesday mixing around with our people and making himself agreeable everywhere. Sawvel, was here a week or two ago, and we hear good reports from him wherever he goes. Mr. Coffinberry has not been here for about two weeks, though we have no fears but he will take care of himself. Mr. Moody and Mr. Plum live here, and we see them often. They take an active interest in talking to all they meet, which is right thing to do, for this is a campaign in which the people are to be consulted. From the fact that these two gentlemen, are frequently absent, we have no doubt they are making hay while the sun shines. Mr. Hook, our efficient Surveyor, and Sheriff Plum, both being in office, and having proved to the people that they are honest and capable, of course they are making friends. Their record speaks for them. Their official duties take them away a great deal, so that they are not always visible here. But we feel that they are doing good work. Mr. Kelley, we presume is hard at work on his farm. As a farmer, he is no more make believe, but a practical hardworking one, and one of the best. It is such a one, the people delight to honor. Mr. Henderson is also at work on his farm. But the people have confidence in him, and he will no doubt come up with a big vote. Mr. Patterson is here and there over the county, as his duty as commissioner may call him. He is an efficient officer and the people know it, and will no doubt put him there again. Mr. Miser, candidate for coroner, is not making a canvass. He could not afford to, for there is nothing in the office. But he will get there with all the rest. Give them all a pleasant word, as they come among you.

H. D. Snowberger and wife were the guest of Lem. Colten and wife last Sunday.

To the People of Auburn and Vicinity.

Having been attracted by the beauties of Auburn, her natural advantages, manufacturing interests, railroad facilities and the many other indications which are unmistakably characteristic of a thrifty, prosperous and energetic people, I have felt that it would be a desirable place to live, and upon inquiry I find there is no homeopathic physician residing here. On calling upon some of the leading citizens I am informed that there are many people there who believe in this system of medicine and who would welcome such a physician to the place; to these people and to the public generally I desire to say that after carefully considering the subject in all its bearings I have decided to identify myself with your interests by becoming a permanent citizen and making Auburn my future home. With this in view it is but simple justice to you that I make the following statement: "My medical studies were pursued under the direction of Drs. Ellis and Newton, of Ligonier, Ind., who are physicians of acknowledgd ability and high standing; attending lectures at the New York Homeopathic Medical College, of New York City, and at the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago, graduating in good standing from the latter institution, which is the oldest and most thorough homeopathic college in the west. It is my intention to conduct a general practice upon the latest and most scientific principles, giving special attention to the treatment of catarrhal diseases of the Throat, Nose and Lungs, those diseases peculiar to women and children and to obscure and chronic cases. In reference to my qualifications I would respectfully refer you to W. E. Newton, M. D. Ligonier, Ind., C. F. Ellis, M. D. Eureka Springs, Ark., W. A. Whippy, M. D. Goshen, Ind., A. L. Fisher, M. D. Elkhart, Ind., Drs. C. E. Laning, Richard Ludlam and Geo. A. Hall, of Chicago, Drs. Wm. Todd Helmuth, J. W. Dowling, and L. L. Danforth, of New York City. Asking only that share of your patronage which my skill, attention to business and moral character may merit.

I am yours Respectfully,
I. O. BUCHTEL, M. D.

She will be here Tuesday and Friday of each week, and all who desire information are requested to call on her at the residence of D. A. Garwood, or to leave word.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to return our sincere and heartfelt thanks to the friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us, during our recent sad affliction in the sickness, death and burial of our little son Earl.

THOMAS AND IDA STAFFOLD

Cory Slungers, our popular lunch man, has built a neat residence in Gas Addition, into which he and his estimable wife moved this week.

TO THE CITIZENS OF AUBURN AND THE GENERAL PUBLIC.

We have opened a new Livery, Sale and Feed barn, first door west of Swineford House, corner of 9th and Jackson streets, where we have put in an entire new stock, at a very great expense. And we hope by keeping up with the times to be able to merit and secure a fair share of your patronage. Our terms shall always be reasonable, and our rigs all good and safe.

Yours Respectfully,
J. C. HENRY AND GEO. SWINEFORD,
Proprietors.

Balloon at the Fair.

There will be a special attraction at the fair on Wednesday and Friday, Sept. 10 and 12. A grand balloon ascension, with a thrilling leap with a parachute, in mid air. Nothing like it before. All get ready and come.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein H. S. Maring, administrator of the estate of Daniel Adams, deceased is plaintiff, and Ensign B. Rose, Catherine J. Rose, Lewis Moore and Edward W. Fosdick are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of Three thousand, six hundred forty-three dollars and twenty-seven cents, with interest on said decree and costs. I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, September 20, 1890.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the court house in Auburn DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to wit:

The north half of the northwest quarter of section thirty (30) in township thirty-five (35) north of range fifteen (15) east containing eighty acres more or less situated in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

PHIL PLUM,
Sheriff of DeKalb County.

Mrs. Winslow of Waterloo, was the guest of Mrs. Hodge last Friday. Mrs. Hodge had invited to meet her several ladies of Auburn, Mrs. Dr. Johnston, Mrs. A. J. Ralston and Mrs. J. A. Barns. The ladies also had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Kline of Warsaw, an old friend of Mrs. Hodge who has been visiting her for a few weeks. The company was a pleasant one and thoroughly enjoyed the day.

The Dispatch has apparently got to the end of its own little string and gone to quoting the wild talk of the Indianapolis Journal on the state debt. Of course it fathers the Journal's statements. So we ask: If as you say, "every dollar of the increase is due to democratic legislation," how will you make this agree with the fact that the "democratic legislature" appropriated only $600 for assistant for your attorney general, and the latter has been all the time taking out $2,400 for this purpose? It looks as if here is $1,800 debt not "made by the democratic legislature."

Sam. Hanna, tired of being asked whether the new bridge would be done in time for the fair, last Saturday wrote on the bulletin board at the postoffice, that the iron work was all done, and would be in place in time, and added "Don't ask any more questions." Mr. Hanna's firm, the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works, is doing the iron work for the bridge, and this statement settles it. The bridge will be in place.

Sunday ball must be stopped. Parties residing near the outskirts of the town are complaining of this immoral practice. It annoys them, and turns the Sabbath day into a season of noisy revelry. The greatest complaints come from the south end, near Stamets' Addition. Stop it, boys, stop it, for the complaining parties will have you indicted if you don't. But you ought to stop it for your own sakes and the good name of our town.

MARRIED: At the residence of Mr. Samuel Rainier, on Saturday Aug. 16th. by Rev. H. M. Lamport, Mr. Chas. F. Rainier to Mrs. Magdalena Krocker.

Kuhlman, the lumber dealer reports big sales at Garrett this year. He has furnished about $25,000 worth of lumber for new buildings there, since the building season opened.

Gene Trout has word from Ed. Long, now in San Diego, Cal., and he is now in the furniture business, which appears to be quite a thing there. Ed. is a lively chap, and makes things fly, but likes a variety.

Sept. 8, begins the first fair Auburn has had since the war. Our people have gone into it now on a liberal scale. It is worth the admission to see our buildings alone. Come any day in the week that begins Sept. 8.

I am compelled to collect my book accounts, and to all those who call at the office and settle with me I will deduct the expense of a collector. I must have this matter attended to inside of 30 days. Dr. W. H. Nusbaum.

Our people in the county should come in next Thursday evening to hear the inimitable Frank Beard. We are confident they will pass a pleasant evening and enjoy something out of the common run of lectures and entertainments.

LaPorte Argus: Again, if goods can be made so cheap in this country that they can be sold as cheap or cheaper than they are in Europe, what becomes of the claim that American labor cannot successfully compete with foreign cheap labor?

Trentman, at the Handle factory, the old Hub and Spoke factory at the south end of town has commenced buying timber again for the fall work. He wants all kinds such as he uses. See his advertisement. Call on him if you have any to sell. tf

Scudder Hull now the youngest subscriber on the COURIER list, directs his paper to be changed to Lagrange. It speaks well for the future of a young man to begin life by taking his county paper, and paying for it promptly, as young Mr. Hull does.

The new livery stables of Henry & Swineford west of the Swineford House opened up for business to-day. The proprietors are J. C. Henry and George Swineford, two gentlemen whose names are guarantees that the business will be continued in the most satisfactory way for the public.

Lagrange Democrat: What farmer is fool enough to vote against a Congressman like McClellan, whose every official act is in the personal interests of the farming classes, and put into his place an office-seeker demagogue who will vote (1) for more tariff, (2) against free silver, and (3) every time in the interests of monopolists, capitalists and money-loaners?

J. R. Duncan, of Waterloo, was here Monday. As usual, he is full of work and therefore full of business. He has among other things a contract with Kiblinger for buggy bodies, and has been shipping these at an average rate of 100 bodies a week, all summer. There are to be done on his contract in the next seventeen weeks, 1,900 bodies. But they will be done, and be good work besides.

E. E. Zent, brother of I. M. Zent was here this week. He is getting ready to make a second trip to South America, where he goes as agent for American agricultural machines. His territory is the Argentine Republic. He sells in lots to local dealers, and they put them out among the farmers. Mr. Zent must have proved a valuable man for his House, as they sent him to the same country last year.

Mrs. Sthair is ready to supply and suit the public with any thing in the corset line which she guarantees to be the most perfect fit and best setting corset ever made; expanding front and back; always sells on sight; made of best satteen and satin; white, drab and black; long or short hip, one or two lacings in the back. Fancy colors, pink, pale blue, red, old gold, cardinal, tan, garnet and cream. Nursing corsets all style and in fancy colors. Nursing or adominal. Children's waists, white or drab. She is also prepared with the best fitting vandyke and comfort ever make, hose supporting and braces. The sole agent for DeKalb county for the Hygeia or Great Western Combination Corset and Waist. Call and see Mrs. A. E. Sthair. tf

Don't fail to attend the lectures at the Opera House next week.

Misses Eliza and Dora Finch spent a few days at Albion last week.

Mrs. Cline, of Warsaw, has been visiting Mrs. Hodge for several weeks.

Pills often leave a person constipated. Simmons Liver Regulator never does.

Several of our local democrats are in Indianapolis attending the state convention.

Dyspepsia in all its forms is not only relieved but cured by Simmons Liver Regulator.

Rev. Henry Johnson and family returned to South Bend Tuesday, their vacation for the summer being ended.

Ryan, who was stabbed is still slowly improving. Kous is still in jail, and will be tried, and we suppose punished.

James Hoffman will start this week to take his position in Purdue University. His wife will go in a week or two.

Mr. Kain preached a powerful discourse at the Lutheran church Sunday. We have heard compliments from several.

Mrs. Leas will return from the east this week with a full line of millinery for fall. Ladies are invited to call and see the goods.

The Farmers' Record, Muncie, Ind., organ of the F. M. B. A., Alliance, Grange, &c., want men to act as agents at the Auburn Fair. Write for terms.

The citizens of this town should show their appreciation of the teachers institute next week by a good attendance and especially to the evening entertainments.

Mrs. M. H. Hoisington is at home again, having arrived here last Friday. She will remain with her people here a few weeks. All Auburn people are glad to get back now and then.

The Camp Fire Companion and the COURIER have a clubbing arrangement. The Companion is a monthly at 75 cents a year, and at club rates both papers for $1.80. Samples of each can be seen here.

When you attend the big fair at Auburn be sure and put up your teams at the Palace Barn west of Swineford House corner of Ninth and Jackson streets. J. C. Henry & Geo. Swineford, Proprietors. 35-36

Hugh Culbertson and wife expect soon to go into their new residence on Main street. We don't like to spare them from our part of town, but will do all we can to keep them straight in their new location.

Miss Maud Sheets reports good business in her new dressmaking establishment in the new Sheets block south of the jail. She has the reputation of being a skillful and painstaking lady in all work in her line.

NOTICE TO SETTLE: All parties knowing themselves indebted to J. A. Potter, are requested to call and settle the same before Sept. 25, at which time all unsettled accounts will be left for collection Let none fail to attend to this.

HORSES FOR SALE: I have two good work horses for sale. Inquire at my residence at No. 34 North Main street, Auburn, or leave word at Robbins & McCord's drugstore.

James Adams
Veterinary Surgeon

Picker & Bumpus have the contract for laying the brick on the new church. Glad to hear it. They are good workmen. And when they and their men get started, you can hear the cry of "mort" from every quarter of the big foundation. They will also do the brick work on the new M. P. church at Concord. Good, again.

The Wabash railway will give half fare to the Detroit exposition. We believe the tickets also include admission to the grounds. At all events this is the line to take, and those who were at the Detroit Expo. last fall, know it was the best one ever held this side of Philadelphia or St. Louis. Ask your ticket agent for particulars.

Frank Davenport and a young friend, Mr. Rutter, of Warsaw, treated the editor's family to some fine music last Friday evening. The former had a guitar and the latter a mandolin, which he played with rare ability. Mr. Rutter is a member of the famous Mandolin club of Warsaw, though now traveling for some wholesale house. Both young men have our thanks.

Mrs. Flora Shunk were married Sunday, as seen by a notice elsewhere. The goom is a thrifty young farmer, and the bride one of the worthiest of Auburn ladies. As one of our most popular dressmakers, she has for some years supported herself by her skill and industry. Of course she will be a valuable helpmate in a home and the best wishes of many friends, including the COURIER folks, follow them.

Jacob Hoover had another fall last week. Being still feeble from his late sickness, he does not stand on as solid foundation as he did years ago. He was going diagonally across Jackson street from Eldridge's corner to Tefft's when his foot struck one of the low stakes set to mark the grade of the sidewalks. He fell, striking his forehead on the edge of the board sidewalk and cutting quite a gash. He says he will not try to save time by cutting across again. He'd sooner go a mile around.

As will be seen by a notice published today, G. W. Reed, a well known and well to do farmer, east of town is the victim of another wheat robbery. Only a year or two ago, the same part of the county was raided and a lot of wheat stolen, and brought to town and sold. The guilty parties were soon found, and there was some talk of bringing them to justice. But for some cause or other they finally were allowed to go. We believe they settled at a dear rate, with the owner of the wheat. But we believe it would be a good thing if some of these chaps could be sent up the road.

Wendling Friday evening Sept. 5th.

Frank Beard Thursday evening Sept. 4th.

Everybody invited to the institute next week.

The reunion at Butler brought out quite a crowd.

Mrs. John Hebel has a lady friend here from Michigan visiting her.

Write to secretary Cal. Husselman, if you wish any information about the fair.

A rainy spell follows a dry spell. At least that seems to be the present state of things.

Don't forget the date of the DeKalb Co. Fair Sept. 8 to 12. Get something ready and go. Good races. Everything new.

Mike Hebel has moved into his new residence north of John Leasure's on Jackson street. He has a fine house, one of the best in town.

Cook Ford has purchased and will soon occupy, the residence that H. R. Culbertson has occupied so long. We shall be glad to welcome them back to Auburn.

Grass is beginning to spring up afresh under the fine rains we are having. It will bring relief to the cattle on poor pasture, and perhaps make butter more abundant.

I say Geo. where did you get that fine turnout last Sunday? Oh at the Palace Barn west of Swineford House, was't it a slick one. J. C. Henry & Geo. Swineford are the proprietors. 35 6

W. B. Campbell, editor of the Dispatch went up to Clear Lake Saturday evening to spend a day or two in recreation. Good idea. Even a newspaper man needs rest now and then.

The great yearly meeting of the Christian church at Cedar Lake in Smithfield township was largely attended last Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The crowd numbered many hundreds.

Mrs. Harley Baker, wishes to announce to her former patrons, that she will resume the dressmaking business, at her home on West Ninth street, and asks them to call and see her, when they need work in that line. 33-35.

Jacob Walborn and L. Bowers have been for two or three weeks at work on the new heater in the Lutheran church, and now have it completed. We trust our brethren of that church appreciate fully the help of such earnest workers.

Dr. Hull, of Spencerville, has removed to Lagrange, Ind., where we believe he will continue the practice of his profession. We assure the good people of that county, they have secured a good citizen and we have reason to believe he is an excellent physician. The COURIER wishes him abundant success in his new field.

The Ft. Wayne fair has just secured the greatest fair attraction ever seen anywhere this season; the Van Norman-Hauser Roman Racing Combination, composed of L. A. VanNorman and Mrs. Alice Jackson, the champion lady Roman rider of the world. Mr. Van Norman, in his daring Roman chair feat, standing on chairs placed on the back of his running team, making a mile at full speed, in a race with Mrs. Jackson, will be seen on the track each day.

Ninth street bridge will be ready for the fair, and we believe an arrangement will be made to have all the people going to the fair take that street and go out through Gas Addition, as far east as the new street and sidewalk running north in the Baxter & McClellan Addition. This will bring them out onto the main road near the road that runs north to the grounds. Those leaving the grounds can return to town along the street that comes back to town over Seventh street bridge. In this way there will be no clash or jam, and everything will go on smoothly. We suppose men will be stationed at the proper points to direct all teams which way to take Nothing like a little care and foresight.

A Change of Program.

Instead of Dr. F. J. Bassett's lecture on Monday evening, Dr. Charles De Garmo will give his lecture and on Tuesday evening Rev. C. C. Albertson, the young, but most eloquent pulpit orator of northern Indiana will preach an institute sermon by way of inaugurating an annual institute sermon to the teachers. Come and hear this eloquent divine. Remember the date Tuesday evening September 2nd. C. M. MERICA, Manager of the Institute.

Union Services.

Arrangements have been made by several of the churches of the town to have union services on next Sabbath evening, Rev. F. J. Bassett Ph. D., of DePauw University, who will be here to give instruction at the institute will preach. All persons are requested to bring with them their Gospel Hymns. Services to be held at Presbyterian church.

Special Premium at the Fair.

The Board has made a special premium for display of flowers and flowering and foliage plants; $10 for first and $5 for second premium. Also, they have added in graded draft horses and roadsters the word "gelding." So it will read: "Best mare or gelding," 4, 3, 2 and 1 year-olds.

Fifty Dollars Reward.

I will pay fifty dollars reward for the apprehension of the thief or thieves, who stole a lot of wheat from my barn last week on Monday night, August 18.

G. W. REED.

Auburn, Ind. August 26, 1890.

NEW MILLINERY FOR FALL WILL BE OPENED THIS WEEK AT COWAN SISTERS.

Montpelier fair begins Sept. 16.

"Capital C. social Friday evening. All go and get something good to eat.

Mrs. Ernest Sheets had two sisters and a brother visiing her last Saturday.

A state official of Maine is wearing a straw hat which he bought in 1859.

Mrs. M. Jones went to Elkhart yesterday to be gone several days visiting her sister.

Miss Hattie Baker will clerk in Mrs. Jones & Son's store while Mrs. J. is away visiting.

Mr. Will Marvin, of Findlay, Ohio, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Dr. Adams. He is on his way west for a year's stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Carruth and daughter Elsie, went to Detroit on Wednesday to take in the exposition for a few days.

The new physician, Dr. Buchtel, is hard at work. His rooms are being fitted up, and already he has calls to attend the sick.

Harrison and Coe report a very interesting session of the normal school that closed last week. Though small, it was a class of workers.

Rev. Dr. Helwig, of Springfield, Ohio, is visiting friends in town, and made the COURIER office a brief call Wednesday, in the absence of the editor.

The ladies of the south division of the Presbyterian church will give a "Capital C." social in the basement of the church on Friday evening Aug. 29. Chicken pie and variour other C's. will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock. Everybody come and enjoy a good supper.

We are glad to see the officers of the fair, and the town authorities, looking carefully to the convenience of the people who will come to the fair week after next. There are many things to be thought of. The road to the Eckhart carriage factory should be cleaned and all obstructions at the side removed. Ample provisions must be made to feed the multitude on the grounds. There will be need, perhaps, that even private families in town, should take a few guests, as the hotels will be overcrowded. One great element of success with a fair is to make the people who attend, as comfortable as possible.

ANNIE REDMOND.

Mrs. Gurley Tells Why the Child Was Stolen from Her Mother.

Chicago special: Annie Redmond, the beautiful little daughter of a blacksmith, was stolen more than two years ago. She was found a short time ago and Mrs. Josephine Gurley, who abducted her, sent to the Penitentiary for five years. Mrs. Gurley now gives the public a confession, wherein she says she stole the child at the bidding of her husband, who, in turn, wished to further a vindictive plan of one Mrs. Annie Allen, a woman of questionable character. Gurley is a bigamist, and is now serving a term in the Wisconsin Penitentiary. Mrs. Gurley says John Redmund, the blacksmith, the father of the child, was on intimate terms with several women, including Mrs. Allen. A bill for wines, contracted at Mrs. Allen's house, remained unpaid, and Mrs. Allen becoming spiteful, planned, with the aid of Gurley, the little girl's abduction. Redmond denies the truth of Mrs. Gurley's remarks concerning his family relations. Outside of the anarchists and Cronin cases the Redmond abduction attracted more attention than anything that ever occurred in Chicago.

Frightful Accident.

The Gerke saw-mill, five miles from Fort Wayne, Ind., was the scene of a terrible accident. In the center of the mill is a huge buzz saw whirled at lightning speed as if to court destruction. The saw was operated by Henry Stellhorn, a young man 25 years of age. A great log had just passed the saw to the reversing point when Mr. Stellhorn stumbled on some projection and fell with full force against the cruel teeth. Striking him at the left shoulder it tore through his chest and dragging him up ripped his stomach wide open, exposing the vital organs to the paralyzed mill hands who stood dazed while the saw did its deadly work. Having finished its task, the saw seemed to toss young Stellhorn away from it, and he lay on the floor as his fellow workmen rushed to him. He was a frightful spectacle with signs of life manifesting themselves at intervals. His body was almost sawed into halves, and from the gaping wound blood spurted from the severed arteries, for the heart escaped the saw and was still giving vitality to the mutilated trunk.

Revolution Threatened in the Sandwich Island.

Washington special: The State Department is in apparent ignorance of the threatened revolution in Hawaii. Assistant Secretary Whorton said that the department had received absolutely no information foreshadowing political trouble on the island. The Navy Department is in the same condition, nothing official having been heard. Assistant Secretary Soley said that the department had sent its orders to Admiral Brown to come east with the Charleston July 15, in the belief that she would not be needed there any longer. It took the orders two weeks to reach the Admiral, who started in obedience almost at once, and reached this coast before a letter from him to the department could get here. He will probable be ordered to return as soon as he can re-coal.

Boiled to Death.

New York special: A horrible accident occurred at Union Hill. John Oehne, the 4-year-old child of Robert Oehne, fell into a kettle of scalding water in which the mother had been boiling a ham and which was left standing on the floor while she went to a neighbor's. When she returned she found the child in the boiler dead and the flesh peeling off his body. The mother became hysterical and began screaming. Neighbors came in and took the little one out of the boiler and a doctor was instantly summoned, but it was of no avail, as the child was dead.

A Cloud Burst.

A special from El Paso, Tex., says: Between thirty-five and forty houses were washed away in Juarez and sixty families rendered homeless by a cloud burst. The street traversed by one of the bursts was almost obliterated. The dwellings on both sides were submerged and destroyed. Both the railroad and street-car tracts formed dams for the flood and many narrow escapes were made. Two persons were drowned.

Cattle Dying in Kansas.

At Newton, Kan., 6,000 head of cattle suffering from disease are held in quarantine in pasture. They are dying off rapidly, and a controversy has arisen as to the nature of their malady. It is feared that the late rains, filling the streams which run through the pasture occupied by the quarantined cattle, will convey germs of the disease to herds grazing in fields down the stream.

A Boy Kills His Father.

A man named Fielder, living near Nero, Ill., was killed by his 14-year-old son. The boy wanted to plant a certain piece of ground in wheat and the old man objected, whereupon the boy went to the house, got a gun and shot the old man dead.

Town Destroyed.

Pesth special: Fire has destroyed the whole town of Tokay with the exception of thirteen houses. Tokay is the entre port for the celebrated Tokay wines.

Major McKinley Nominated.

Major McKinley was nominated by acclamation in the Sixteenth Congressional Convention which met at Massillon, Ohio.

Theater in Ruins.

McVicker's Theater, one of the finest in Chicago, was entirely destroyed by fire.

STRUCK A SNAG.

Federation of Railway Employes Refuse to Join the Present Strike.

A special from Terre Haute, Ind., dated the 27th inst., says: The Supreme Council of Federation of Railway Employes here just adjourned its session. Grand Master Sargent and Grand Secretary Debs have made the announcement that the decision arrived at by the conference is that no strike will be ordered by the Federation on the New York Central system. A manifesto has been issued to the public which sets out the views of the council fully. The council regrets that under the rules of the Federation no strike can be declared. The case in question as a grievance must be brought against the road by one of the orders comprising the Federation, which does not exist in this case, the K. of L. not being members of the Federation. On the subject of financial assistance to the striking Knights no final action has been taken. Another meeting will be held on this question. The manifesto warmly indorses the proposition of Powderly and the Knights of Labor in the present contest, and strongly denounces Vice President Webb for the course he has pursued towards organized labor. The friends of organized labor everywhere are called upon to give every assistance in their power to the strikers moral, financial and otherwise. The decision of the council was not unexpected. It notified Powderly of its resolve before it gave its decision to the public. The conclusion arrived at was based on the constitution and by-laws of the federation, which requires that before an order to strike can be given, the federation itself must have grievances. The Knights of Labor are now left to fight out the battle. The leaders say they will continue the battle and win or lose.

FEAST OF FLESH.

A Babe Devoured by Two Idiot Urchins.

Montreal special: Cannibalism in the nineteenth century, and that, too, in the heart of Canadian civilization, is hard to believe, and yet the particulars of a most horrible deed is made public here which makes one creep with horror even to think of, so ghastly is the story and so inhuman the crime. Two fiends devoring the living flesh of an innocent babe is the story. Paul Cote, a French-Canadian miner and Elisha Newton, a farmer, are neighbors living in a small settlement on the Du Livere River, about two days' journey up from Buckingham. On the day in question both men were away from home. The Cote family consisted of the man, his wife and their baby boy, about a year old. Newton is the father of two boys who are deaf mutes and of unsound mind. Occasionally the idiots had exhibited signs of a vicious disposition. But as their parents were averse to sending the unfortunates to an asylum, they were kept at home and, being regarded as comparatively harmless, they were allowed the freedom of their neighbor's house, which they visited frequently. After breakfast Mrs. Tate decided to go out berry-picking and, intending to return in a couple of hours, most imprudently left her baby in charge of the deaf mutes. It must have been very soon after her departure that the maniacs commenced their brutish attack upon the child left in their care. No eyes but theirs witnessed the revolting spectacle that followed, yet the blood-bespattered floor, the confusion in which the room was found, and, above all, the lacerated form of the dying child attested to the savage revelry which they held over their victim ere their brutal appetites were sated with flesh and blood. The mother was the first to break in upon the scene. What, her feelings were as she gazed upon the mangled body of her child and the grinning idiots, gory-mouthed and still grinning over their living prey can never be described. The babe was fearfully torn. It's cheeks had been literally eaten to the bone, and the flesh partly devoured from one side of its neck. It was dying when the mother drove the human wolves away and lifted the little bleeding body from the floor, and in a short time it expired. Carrying her dead baby in her arms, for she dare not trust the mangled corpse to the fury of the cannibals, Mrs. Cote ran to the Newtons' home and told the miserable parents of the horrible ocurrence. Hardly could they credit her story, but on returning to fetch the wretched lads away the evidences of the awful facts were but too vividly apparent. The maniacs will probably be sent to the asylum.

FIVE KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Ten Others More or Less Mangled.

Reading (Pa.) special: A terrible fatality occurred on the Mount Run gravity road. A through train going at a forty mile an hour run suddenly left the track and plunged down an embankment. The coaches, five in number, were well filled with passengers, many of them sound asleep in their berths and chairs. The cries of the frightened people who were awake and realized what had happened brought the sleepers to their feet only to be thrown against the sides of the cars amid crashing glass and upturned chairs. A second later the crash in the abyss came. Cars were splintered and huge trucks pinioned the unfortunates in their terrible positions. When the wreck was cleared away and the occupants of the coaches dragged to a place of safety, it was found that five persons had been killed outright and ten probably fatally injured. A score or more suffered painful wounds from the fall of flying glass and timber. The cause of the accident is said to have been a broken rail. Rumors flew about thick and fast that discontented railroad men—strikers or their sympathizers—had caused the accident, but this was satisfactorily denied. The following were killed: Edgar M. Levan, Miss Rose Heiffer, Miss Harriet Hinckle.

Wounded: Mrs. William A. H. Siehmehl, death expected; William Siehmehl, fatal; Mrs. Schitler, terribly mangled; Miss Kate Homan, fatally; Misses Bessie and Katie Kelly, badly; Cornelious Hanlon, Miss Sallie Bly, Miss Mary Guthrie, slightly; Mrs. Arnold Lewis, Miss Weller, badly; Mrs. Smith, of Allentown, fatally. Superintendent C. M. DeHart gives as the cause of the accident the refusal of the brake to work properly. It was a new brake as an experiment.

PULLMAN'S PROPOSAL.

The Millionaire Offers a Site for the World's Fair.

Geo. M. Pullman has made a proposition to the directors of the World's Fair in regard to the site. He offers to give the necessary amount of ground for all exposition purposes "in Pullman or thereabouts," and in addition will take up the $5,000,000 in bonds to be sold by the city. After the fair is over Mr. Pullman says he will dedicate the grounds to the public to be used for park purposes. This proposition was considered and discussed at length by the Committee on Public Grounds and Buildings yesterday. After the adjournment it was said that the committee would probably report favorably on the offer to the meeting of Directors.

Caught and Caged.

Kansas City, Mo., special: A man giving the name of James L. McConkey, and who has been identified as the leader of the robbers of the Missouri Pacific train at Otterville, is under arrest at Pacific, Mo. He is heavily ironed and closely guarded. Marshal Davis made the capture. The prisoner says he is a cattle-man of Vinita, I. T. When searched a pistol pocket, filled with forty-four caliber revolver shells was found on McConkey, but the weapon was missing. In one of his pockets were three soiled handkerchiefs; one a dark silk pattern, one a cheaper affair and the other a red bandana. They were all knotted and folded to form face masks and showed recent usage. Jewelry supposed to have been stolen from the express car, a $50 bill and $20 gold piece were found on him and fully identified. The bandages were placed over the man's head and he was made to climb upon the tender while Engineer Frank Dreyer and Fireman Purcell of the robbed train took the same positions as those they held on the night of the hold up. "That's the man, the same clothes, the same build, the same eyes," said Dreyer. The fellow grinned, "and the same teeth!" concluded the engineer as the crooked wolfish incisors were shown.

A Sudden Summons.

Congressman L. F. Watson, of the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of Pennsylvania, died very suddenly in the Shoreham Hotel, Washington. Mr. Watson, accompanied by his private Secretary, were about to enter a carriage to be driven to the Capitol. On the way out of the lobby of the hotel Mr. Watson complained of a dizziness in his head and sickness of the stomach. He fell unconscious and was taken to the parlor, where stimulants were administered and he soon revived. A physician was sent for, but before his arrival Mr. Watson again became unconscious from which he never recovered and died in a few moments.

Priest Disrobed.

The Rev. Dr. Richard Laloor Burstell, the late pastor of the Church of the Epiphany, at New York, who was removed from his charge on account of his expressed sympathy with Dr. McGlynn, has been temporarily suspended from the exercise of his functions as a Roman Catholic priest in the diocese of New York. The decision of the propoganda in his case (which has not heretofore been made public), was in effect that the doctor should be removed from his pastorate and make an apology or retraction for his action to the archbishop.

Northern Indiana Fair.

The Northern Indiana Fair will be held at Fort Wayne, Ind., beginning Tuesday, Sept. 16 and concluding Friday, Sept. 19. As competition is open to the world, the display ot art, machinery, agricultural products, etc., will be the finest ever on exhibition. The purses in the speed department are large, and the entries comprise some of the best horses in the country. Among the many features are the Roman races, which are very exciting and give the spectators any amount of amusement.

Broke the Bicycle Record.

Edward Checkley, of Brooklyn, rode into Chicago on a "safety wheel" having broke the bicycle record from New York to that city by sixteen hours. The previous record for the distance, which was established some years ago by Neilson, was fourteen days, twenty-three hours and thirty minutes. Mr. Checkley rolled his machine over the road in fourteen days, six hours and twenty-five minutes.

Burned to Death.

The Queen's Hotel, at Sundridge, Ont., with its contents, was burned to the ground. The guests, of whom there was a large number, had great difficulty in escaping. Two, Thomas Powers and Herbert Layton, the latter from Ottawa, were burned to death. Arthur Bowyer sustained slight injuries. J. McGuire, news agent, was badly burned about the hands and face. Loss not estimated.

A Gas Explosion.

There was a terrific gas explosion at the Crescent Paper Company's works at Hartford City, Ind., that shook the building to its foundation. William Beexton was terribly burned about the head and arms. He was taken to his boarding-house, and may recover. The damage to the property was slight. The cause of the explosion was a surplus of gas in the furnace.

Starving in Iowa.

Sibley (Iowa) special: Investigation throughout the hail district has developed the fact that a large number of families have been rendered utterly destitute, and steps are being taken to alleviate the suffering. The State of Iowa has been appealed to, as a large sum of money will be necessary to furnish the farmers with the barest necessaries of life.

Peace at Last.

A cablegram has just been received a the Guatemala Legation at Paris to the effect that peace has been signed between Salvador and Guatemala. Vice President Ayali, of Salvador, has assumed the supreme executive functions and will arrange the details for an election for President.

A Bad Wreck.

A freight train on the Terre Haute and Peoria road went through a bridge on Sugar Creek, three miles from Atlanta, Ga. Five cars and the caboose fell into the creek. A brakeman named Reeves was fatally hurt. One or two passengers in the caboose escaped with slight injuries.

Quarryman Instantly Killed.

Christopher Wolfe, the foreman of the Big Creek quarry, at Stinesville, Ind., one of the best-known stone men of the country, was instantly killed by the breaking of a derrick. His head was cut almost off his body. He was a married man.

Double Tragedy.

James Matthews, of Calvine, a small village near Cassopolis, Mich., shot and killed Mrs. John Matthews and then shot himself fatally. He had asked Mrs. Matthews to marry him. She refused, and he became so enraged that he killed her.

A Kentucky Desperado Captured.

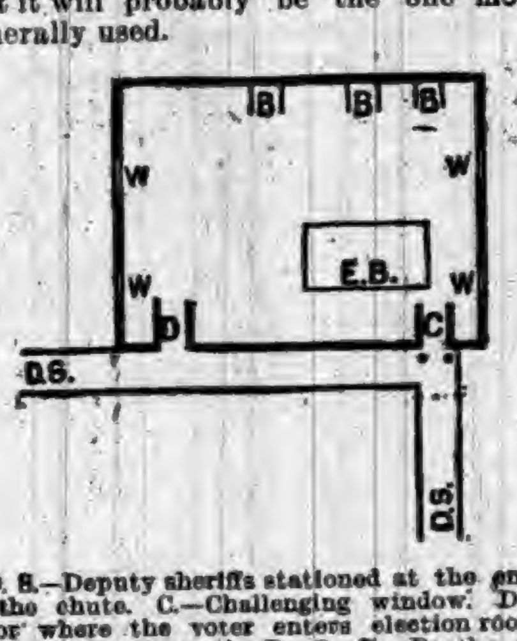
INDIANA ELECTION LAW

NEW METHOD OF CASTING THE BALLOT.

A Complete Synopsis of the Requirements of a Voter at the Polls—How Polling Places Must Be Arranged—Duties of Sheriff and Deputies—Electioneering Prohibited—How a Challenge Must Be Made and the Vote Counted.

On March 6, 1889, the General Assembly of the State of Indiana passed an election law which is now in force. The first election which will occur under the provisions of this law takes place on the 4th of November next. The law is very cumbersome and liable to mislead those not familiar with its provisions. The law does not require the repeated registration of citizens who reside continuously in the same county, but it does require the registration of every person who moves into the county within six months preceding an election, whether he previously resided within the State or not, and also of every person who, having once been a citizen of Indiana, shall have voted in another State or gone there with the intention of voting, or who shall have been absent from the State for six months. The important features of the new law are the registration of voters and the secrecy of depositing the ballot.

The reader may get an idea of the arrangement of the polling place from the diagram given below, and as the plan shown is the simplest and most convenient it will probably be the one most generally used.



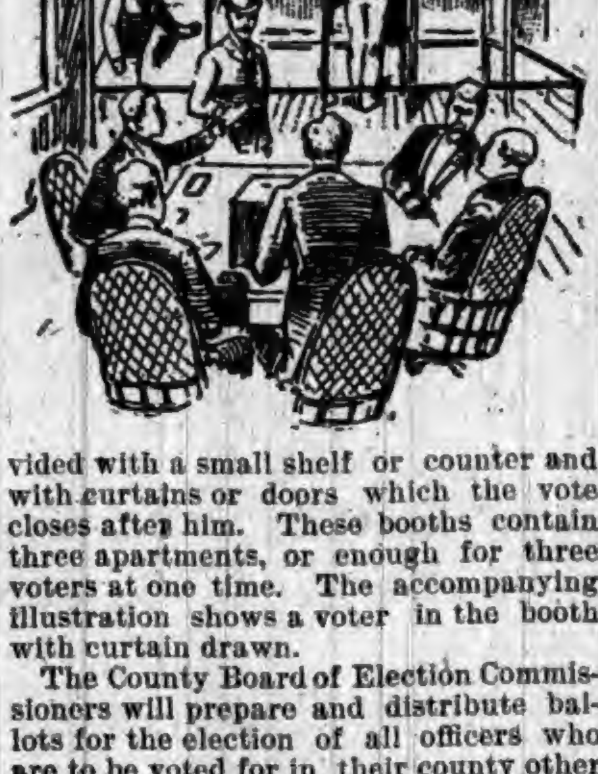
D. S.—Deputy sheriffs stationed at the ends of the chute. C.—Challenging window. D.—Door where the voter enters election room. E. B.—Election board. B. B. B.—Booths for elector to prepare his ballot in. W.—Windows.

The chute is a passageway, with a railing, rope or wire on each side, and it must extend fifty feet away from the challenge window. All persons except election officers and challengers are prohibited from coming within fifty feet of the polls, except as they come through this chute to enter the election room.

The election sheriffs are special deputies appointed by the County Sheriff to act as officers at the polls. The sheriffs must be at the polls when they open and remain until the count is concluded. They must make arrests on the demand of any member of the Board, and also on affidavit made before the inspector by any qualified voter that any person who has voted is not a legal voter.

The new law puts a stop to needless and indiscriminate challenging, and but one challenger and one poll book holder, designated by each party organization, are entitled to stand at the side of the chute next the challenge window. When a person is challenged he must stand aside or make affidavit that he is a legal voter. If he makes affidavit that he is entitled to vote, unless the challenger or some other person makes affidavit that he is not a legal voter, the voter must then bring a qualified voter of the precinct as a witness, who must swear that of his own knowledge the claimant is a legal voter.

According to law the voter must be screened from view while marking and folding his ballot, and for this purpose election booths are to be used. These are nothing more than little stalls provided with a small shelf or counter and with curtains or doors which the vote closes after him. These booths contain three apartments, or enough for three voters at one time. The accompanying illustration shows a voter in the booth with curtain drawn.



The County Board of Election Commissioners will prepare and distribute ballots for the election of all officers who are to be voted for in their county other than those to be voted for by all the electors of the State, and the names of all candidates of their respective jurisdictions will be printed on one ballot, all nominations of any party being placed under the title and device adopted by such party. The ballot shall be of uniform size and of the same quality and color of paper, and sufficiently thick that the printing cannot be distinguished from the back. The ballots prepared by the State Board of Election Commissioners will be printed on red tinted paper and put up in blocks of 100 each, while those prepared by the County Board of Election Commissioners are to be printed on white paper. The arrangement of the ballot is to be after the manner shown below:

For Lieut. Governor, Robert Gale.

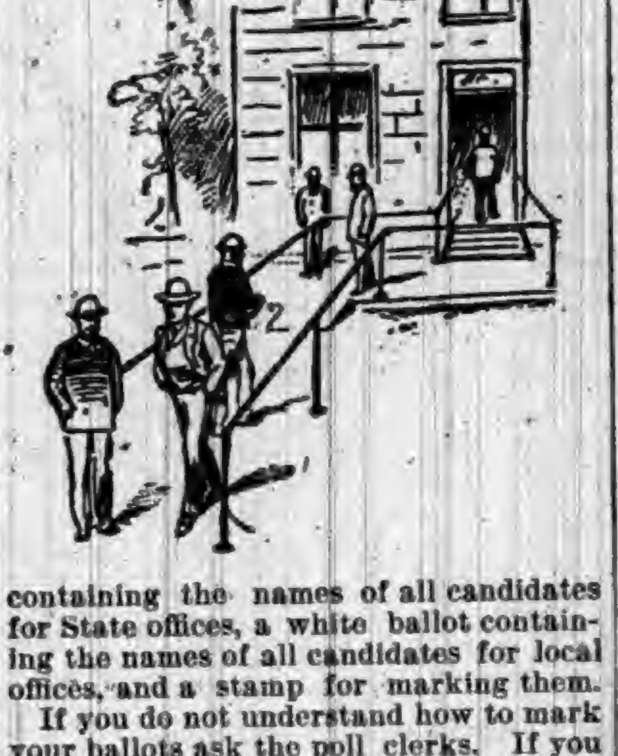
The device adopted and list of candidates of the Democratic party must occupy the first column on the left hand side of the ballot, that of the Republican party in the second column and that of the Prohibition party in the third column. The list of candidates of any other party shall follow in such order as the Board of Election Commissioners may decide. Samples of the ballots plainly marked "Sample ballot," and printed on different colored paper from that on which the genuine ballot is printed, will be posted in the vicinity of the polling place for the instruction and information of voters, but no voter is supposed to see the genuine ballot until it is given him by the polling clerks after he enters the election room. If the printer of the ballots shall give, or knowingly permit any one other than the Board of Election Commissioners to take, any of the ballots, he then, according to the law, has committed a felony, and is liable to imprisonment for a term not less than three nor more than ten years.

If you are subject to registration, as before stated, you must register at the County Clerk's office at least three months before the election. On going to the polls on election day pass through the chute to the challenge window, and if challenged, swear in your vote or stand aside. The necessary forms for affidavits will be supplied at the challenging window. If not challenged, or after swearing in your votes pass on through the chute to the door, where you will be admitted in turn.

When you enter the election room announce your name to the poll-clerks, who will furnish you with a red ballot containing the names of all candidates for State offices, a white ballot containing the names of all candidates for local offices, and a stamp for marking them.



If you do not understand how to mark your ballots ask the poll clerks. If you cannot read English, or are physically unable to mark your ballots, the poll clerks will mark it for you, and on request will read over the names marked.

Go alone into one of the unoccupied booths and mark your ballot with the stamp. If you wish to vote a "straight ticket" mark the square in front of the title of your party at the head of the ticket. If you wish to vote a mixed or "scratched" ticket mark the square in front of the name of each candidate for whom you wish to vote.

If by accident you tear, mutilate, deface or spoil your ballot, go at once to the poll clerks, explain how the accident occurred, and ask for another ballot.

Before leaving the booth fold each of your ballots so that the initials of the poll clerks on the back will show, but so that no part of the face of the ballot can be seen.

When your ballots are marked and folded come out of the booth. Give the stamp to the poll clerk from whom you received it and hand the folded ballots to the inspector, who will put them in the ballot box in your presence. Then leave the room.

When you have voted, and before you are ready to vote, remain fifty feet away from the polls.

As the voter doubtless now understands pretty well what to do it is right that he should alike understand what he must do.

Do not attempt to vote if you are not a legal voter. You are not a legal voter if you have not lived in the State six months, the township sixty days and the precinct thirty days. You are not a legal voter if you have lived in the county less than six months and have not registered. If registered you must have your certificate with you.

Do not accept a ballot from any person outside of the election room. Any ballot obtained outside is fraudulent, and it is a penitentiary offense to have such a ballot in your possession whether you attempt to vote it or not.

Do not attempt to hold any conversation in the election room except with the members of the election board and the poll clerks. It is a penitentiary offense to declare that you cannot read English or cannot mark your ballot if in fact you can.

Do not mark the ballot with the stamp at any place except the squares in front of the title of the party, or the names of the candidates for whom you wish to vote. Do not put any mark of any kind on your ballot except with the stamp.

Do not tear, mutilate, deface, or mark your ballot in any way so that it could be identified; and if you should do so accidentally do not attempt to vote it.

Do not show the face of your ballot to any person; you will lose your vote and be subject to fine and imprisonment if you do. Do not attempt to see the ballot of any other person.

Do not attempt to vote any ballot except the one given you by the poll clerks. Do not injure or interfere with any of the railings, posters, booths, or any of the furniture used in conducting the election.

Do not advise, counsel, or abet any vote buying, bribery or other violation of the election law.

Severe penalties are provided for doing or attempting to do any of these acts. Any voter who attempts to leave the election room with a ballot or stamp in his possession shall be immediately arrested, and any person having in his possession outside the election room any ballot or stamp, whether genuine or counterfeit, during the election shall be guilty of felony, and shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than five years, and shall be disfranchised for any determinate period not less than ten years.

Immediately on closing the polls the Board shall count all the ballots remaining unvoted, record the number of the same on the tally sheets and destroy all of such ballots by totally consuming by fire.

The Board shall then proceed to canvass the votes, beginning first with the State ballots, and completing them before proceeding with the local ballots, by laying each ballot on the table in the order in which it is taken from the ballot box, and the inspector and judge of the election, differing in politics from the inspector, shall view the ballots as the names of the persons voted for are read therefrom. In the canvass of the votes any ballot which is not indorsed with the initials of the poll clerks, and any ballot which shall bear any distinguishing mark or mutilation, shall be void and shall not be counted, and any ballot or part of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice of candidates shall not be counted as to the candidate or candidates affected thereby; provided, however, that on protest of any member of the Board such ballot, and all disputed ballots, shall be preserved by the inspector, and at the close of the count placed with the seals of the ballot packages in paper bags, securely sealed, and so delivered to the Clerk of the county, with notification to him of the number of ballots so placed in such bags, and of the condition of the seals of the ballot packages. The poll clerk shall also record on the tally sheets memoranda of such ballots and the condition of the seal of the ballot packages, and in any contest of election such ballots and seals may be submitted in evidence. On completing the count and recording the same on the tally sheets all the remaining ballots, except those marked, mutilated or otherwise defective, shall be destroyed by the election board by totally consuming by fire before adjournment, and thereupon the election board shall immediately make a memorandum of the total vote cast for each candidate, and deliver a copy thereof to each member of such board.

By this it will be observed that the practice of petitioning courts for a recount of the votes, as was frequently the case under the old law, is abolished under the mandatory clause to burn the ballots. The only ground left for contest is the disputed tickets uncounted, which will require almost a tie vote to be available.

The new law contains stringent provisions against the use of money or anything of value to influence voters directly or undirectly, either in nominating conventions or in elections. As they are equally stringent as to hiring persons to do electioneering, or to use their influence in any way, the occupation of the professional "worker" is gone. Any violation, direct or indirect, subjects the candidate to fine, imprisonment and challenge as a voter. It also prevents him from holding the office to which he is nominated or elected, disfranchises him and makes him liable to the person hired or bought in the sum of $300. It is not safe for a candidate to enter a campaign without carefully examining the new laws, and it will be found advantageous to know the provisions, as the penalties prescribed will be sufficient answer to the parasites who will demand money of him.

Woman's Power Over Man.

Eccentric bachelors, if you want to be cured of your oddities and become polished Christians, marry! You, sir, with the slouching gait, the pocketed hands, the ill tailored frame, just pair off with a neat, smart little damsel, who has an eye for the picturesques, and before the honeymoon is over she will so transfigure you that you will scarcely know yourself in the looking glass, according to a writer in the New York Ledger.

"Beauty and the Beast" is no fable. Many a monster" has been transformed into a gentleman by the necromantic influence of a pretty woman. You, Sir Nimrod, whose talk is of double barrels and setters, of deer shooting on the Adirondacks, or moose hunting in the Canada wilds, do you wish to be civilized and socialized? Doubtless you do. Then marry a true gentlewoman, and she will soon make you as gentle and gallant a cavalier as ever shawled a lady at ball or opera. Even the miser may be won from his golden pagoda by a generous wife, though it must be confessed that of all eccentricities the greed of riches is the most difficult to eradicate.

The fact is that every eccentric bachelor is like a helmless ship that has yawed more or less out of her proper course. A good wife's advice is the tiller that he needs to bring his head round and steer him safely and happily over the sea of life.

Jail Religion.

A man who was under the sentence of death sat in his cell singing, "I would not live alway." A negro in another cell, being disturbed by the plaintive song, called:

"Say, kain't yer let up on dat singin' erwhile? We boys in heah is got er little game on han', but de way yesse'f is carryin' on a pusson doan know whether ter fling his jedgment on de ten spot or de ace."

"I would not live alway," the doomed man sang, paying no attention to the negro.

"Nor, sah, it do 'peer dat way. I heard 'em say dat yer wan't gwine ter be wid us much longer."

"I ask not to stay," continued the condemned man, singing in pitiful strain.

"Nor, sah, an' it show yer good sense, bercase da wouldn't let yer do it. Takin' all things un'er 'sideration, cap'n, reckon yer'll hafter leabe us."

The sheriff came in. The murderer stopped singing. The gamblers put the cards aside. A door grated. Numerous feet "skuffed" upon the paved floor. A trap fell. He would not live alway.

Some Mistake.

Sharpwit—I have a neighbor whom I want to drive out, so I can get his property cheap. I have tried keeping chickens, dogs, and parrots, but without success. A neighbor of yours, however, tells me you have a pet which he will warrant to clear a neighborhood of inhabitants in less than no time, but I forgot to ask what it was. Have you any particularly noisy parrots or anything of that kind?

Suburban Woman—Indeed, I haven't anything at all except a little kitten. There must be some mistake. Jane! Jane! The baby has waked up. Go to him quick."—Good News.

Why the Fire Went Out.

An Irishman, in addition to his duties ar gardener, had the care of the furnace which heated the house. To the irritation of the household there came a morning bitterly cold when the furnace gave forth no heat, for the very good reason that an investigation showed there remained not a spark or ember in the grate. "Mike," cried the angry paterfamilias, "the furnace fire went out last night." "So did I, sorr," returned the culprit serenely.

John Was So Literal.

Her Girl Chum (sweetly)—What did John get you for a birthday present?

Mrs. Youngwife (mornfully)—Not a thing.

H. G. C. (emphatically)—Why, how did that happen?

Mrs. Y. (weeping)—Well, you see, he asked me (sobs) what he should get for me, and—and—I (more sobs) told him I'd love him just as—just as well (sobs) if he didn't g-get me anything, and—he—he—didn't.—West Shore.

Bliffers' Escape.

Whiffers—Narrow escape Bliffers had yesterday, wasn't it?

Miffers—I didn't hear of it.

Whiffers—Why, that bore, De Gabble, button-holed him on the street and began telling him all about that first baby of his; but fortunately just as he got started, a runaway horse dashed into them and Bliffers was killed.—Good News.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

The resolution offered by Mr. Plumb, instructing the Committee on Rules to issue orders that will prevent the sale or drinking of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in the Senate wing of the Capitol was taken up in the Senate on the 19th inst. Mr. Butler moved to adopt a resolution authorizing and directing the Sergeant-at-arms to make daily inspection and examination of the committee rooms and other apartments in the Senate wing of the Capitol and to report to the Committee on Rules whether he has found spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors therein. Mr. Gorman moved the reference of the resolution and amendment to the Committee on Rules. The agricultural college bill was passed by the House. Representative Stockbridge of Maryland, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably to the House the Senate bill to provide for the inspection of live cattle and beef products intended for export to foreign countries. The accompanying report says the object sought to be attained by the proposed legislation is the increase of the exports of American cattle and at the same time to increase their value to the American farmer and stock-raiser in the prices which they will command. The report refers to the discrimination made by European countries against American meat products upon the plea that by reason of the complete absence of inspection of such products before shipment diseased meats were liable to be brought in and to an implication by those countries that when effective inspection was provided by the United States the restrictions would be removed. The establishment of such inspection is provided by this bill.

Mr. Quay's resolution, fixing the time for voting on the tariff bill and designating the other legislative business to be taken up at this session, was laid before the Senate on the 20th. Mr. Hoar demanded the yeas and nays on agreeing to the resolution, and then offered as a substitute for Mr. Quay's resolution his own proposition making it in order "when any bill or resolution shall have been under consideration for a reasonable time" for any Senator to demand that debate thereon be closed. He also moved to amend Mr. Quay's resolution by adding to it a provision to include in the business to be taken up the Federal election bill, and to have the vote on it taken Sept. 4. No vote on it was reached. The House amendments to the Agricultural College bill and to the meat inspection bill were laid before the Senate and concurred in. These bills now go to the President for his signature. In the House the meat inspection bill was taken up. Mr. Funston (Kan.), Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, said that it was proposed by this measure to open foreign ports to American meats. By opening those ports millions and millions of foreign gold would be brought into this country and would relieve the embarrassed condition of all classes of industry. The bill was then passed. The House then proceeded under the special order to the consideration of the bill defining lard, but without disposing of the measure the House adjourned.

The resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Plumb to prevent the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in the Senate wing of the Capitol was laid before the Senate on the 21st, the pending questions being on Mr. Blair's amendment to add the words, "And drinking," and on Mr. Butler's amendment directing a daily search for liquors in committee rooms and other apartments. Mr. Gibson suggested jokingly the extension of the amendment so as to direct the search of Senator's desks. Mr. Plumb objected to both amendments as calculated to belittle the resolution, which he had offered seriously and in deference to public opinion. After debate the matter went over until the 22d. In the House the compound lard bill was taken up. Mr. Allen (Mich.) supported the bill. The agitation of this question had been provoked by the careful, thoughtful action of the farmers in their various assemblies and organizations. Whether they were right or wrong they called for it. It was not true that this bill in any way, shape or form affected the men who produced cotton-seed oil. The evidence of Fairbank & Co. and of experts all over the country was to the effect that cotton-seed oil was superior to hog's lard. If that were so it was absurd that a tax of two mills a pound would prevent the people who desired to use compound lard from purchasing that article. If it was true, as stated by Mr. Fairbank, that compound lard could be made of 20 per cent. of lard and 80 per cent. of cotton-seed oil why not brand it as "cotton-seed oil compound?" Why attach the word "lard" to it? It was done for the purpose of selling the commodity as "lard" and by so doing defrauding the farmers of the market which they would otherwise possess. No vote was taken on the bill.

The paragraph, 178, of the tariff bill relating to wood screws having been reached in the Senate on the 22d, Mr. Carlisle said that that was an article which American manufacturers were selling abroad very much lower than they were selling them at home. He produced price lists in support of his statement; also a letter from the American Screw Company of Providence, R. I. That was another illustration, he said, of the policy adopted by the other side—in allowing drawbacks on exported articles. Mr. Stewart said that the assumption that there was anything wrong in the sale of American manufactured goods in foreign countries cheaper than at home arose from a want of information. There was nothing wrong in it, and nothing injurious to American consumers. That was the policy which England had pursued for the last century and which English statesmen had advised on all occasions. In the House Mr. Henderson (Ill.) submitted the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on Senate amendments to the river and harbor bill, recommending non-concurrence in these amendments and agreeing to the conference asked by the Senate. Mr. Kerr (Iowa) raised the point of order that the amendments must first be considered in committee of the whole. This point was sustained by the Speaker.

The Senate devoted the 23d to eulogies on the late Senator Beck, of Kentucky. Senator Blackburn speaking of the religion of the deceased, said: "His had been the religion of humanity. He had believed that a man who helped his fellowmen was doing God's service. His life had been molded in that faith. If there were one soul at whose approach the pearly gates of the celestial city would open widest and offer freest entrance to its eternal glories, it would certainly be to one which in its life on the earth strove hardest to aid the weak, to shelter the defenseless, to lighten the burdens of the heavy-laden, and which brought the most smiles and the fewest tears to the children of the world." The compound lard bill was taken up in the House. Mr. Hitt (Ill.) said that for the last ten years our whole diplomatic service had been trying to vindicate the American hog and prove that American pork was pure and wholesome. While our diplomats had been doing this our citizens had been sending through the world an adulterated pork product. It was time for Congress to enforce honest dealing. When it came to a vote it was found that there was no quorum and the House adjourned.

NOTES OF MEMORY.

BY EMILIE CLARE.

The years speed on—the end is near—
"And we may never meet again."
Hope long deferred, with doubt and fear,
Droops like a wounded bird in pain.
We never thought that two score years
Might strengthen ties so early wove.
Alas for youthful hopes and fears!
Alas for hopeless love!

I wander now 'neath alien skies,
And greet the good and wise and kind;
I see Ambition proudly rise,
While honest Toil plods on behind.
This world is one vast theater,
Where each one plays a different part,
And laughter-loving youth prefer
To court young Cupid with his dart.

I could not chide the pastime now,
For though it leaves a pleasant pain,
It chases clouds from off the brow
To wear the light of youth again.
And memory wanders o'er the past,
Where merry feet were wont to roam,
Beneath the trees whose branches cast
Their lengthened shadows nearer home.

Nearer my home you sit to-day,
Beneath the sugar maple bough
That sheltered me in life's young May,
And fanned my fair unwrinkled brow;
And I have mused and wondered long,
And wondering mused if you, like me,
Recall each old familiar song
And roam the aisles of memory.

And when I cross Death's narrow sea,
And you are waiting on the shore,
Oh, will you shed one tear for me
Who went unwillingly before?
Or should the sudden summons come,
As once it well-nigh called you, dear,
My every thought shall seek the home
We loved and lingered in while here.

Forever one unspoken prayer
Wings out its feeble way on high,
That guardian angel hands may bear
You to a mansion in the sky.
My last farewell! for seldom words
Give language to the thoughts of thee.
The harp is mute whose silvery chords
Awake the notes to memory.

A DARK MARRIAGE MORN.

A Romance of Love, Intrigue and Crime.

BY MRS. ALICE P. CARRISTON.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE LIGHTNING'S FLASH IN THE CLEAR SKY.

Flora had closed her eyes to conceal her tears. She opened them at the instant Slyme seized her hand and called her "poor angel."

Seeing the man on his knees, she could not comprehend it, and only exclaimed, simply:

"Are you mad, Mr. Slyme?"

"Yes, I am mad!" Slyme threw his hair back with a romantic gesture common to him and, he believed, to the poets. "Yes, I am mad with love and with pity, for I see your sufferings, pure and noble victim!"

Flora only stared in blank astonishment.

"Repose yourself with confidence," he continued, "on a heart that will be devoted to you until death—a heart into which your tears now roll to its most sacred depths."

Flora did not wish her tears to roll to such a distance, so she dried them.

A man on his knees before the woman he adores must appear to her either sublime or ridiculous. Unfortunately the attitude of Slyme, at once theatrical and awkward, did not seem sublime to Flora. To her lively imagination it was irresistibly ludicrous.

A bright gleam of amusement illumined her charming countenance; she bit her lips to conceal it, but it shone out of her eyes nevertheless.

One should never kneel unless sure of rising conqueror. Otherwise, like Slyme, he exposes himself to be laughed at.

"Rise, Mr. Slyme," said Flora, gravely. "This book has evidently bewildered you. Go and take some rest and we will forget this; only you must never forget yourself again in this manner."

Slyme rose. He was livid.

"Mrs. Cleveland," he said, bitterly, "the love of a great heart can never be an offense. Mine at least would have been sincere; mine would have been faithful; mine would not have been an infamous snare!"

The emphasis of these words displayed so evident an intention, the countenance of Flora changed immediately. She moved uneasily on the lounge.

"What do you mean, Mr. Slyme?"

"Nothing, ma'am, which you do not know, I think," he replied meaningly.

She rose.

"You shall explain your meaning immediately to me, sir!" she exclaimed; "or later, to my husband."

"But your sadness, your tears," cried the secretary, in a tone of admirable sincerity; "these made me sure you were not ignorant of it!"

"Of what? How he hesitates! Speak, man!"

"I am not a wretch! I love you and pity you!—that is all;" and Slyme sighed deeply.

"And why do you pity me?"

She spoke haughtily; and though Slyme had never suspected this imperiousness of manner or of language, he reflected hurriedly on the point at which he had arrived. More sure than ever of success, after a moment he took from his pocket a folded letter.

It was the one with which he had provided himself to confirm Flora's suspicions, now awakened for the first time.

In profound silence he unfolded it and handed it to her.

She hesitated a moment, then seized it.

A single glance recognized the writing, for she had often exchanged notes with Cora.

Words of the most burning passion terminated thus:

"Always a little jealous of Flo; half vexed at having given her to you. For she is pretty, and—but I! I am beautiful, am I not, my beloved? and above all, I adore you!"

At the first word Flora became fearfully pale. Finishing, she uttered a fearful groan, re-read the letter, and returned it to Slyme, as if unconscious of what she was doing."

For a few seconds she remained motionless—petrified—her eyes fixed on vacancy. A world seemed rolling down and crushing her heart.

Suddenly she turned, passed with rapid steps into her boudoir; and Slyme heard the sound of opening and shutting drawers.

A moment after she reappeared with hat and cloak, and crossed the boudoir with the same strong and rapid step.

Slyme, terrified to death, rushed to stop her.

"Mrs. Cleveland!" he cried, throwing himself before her.

She waved him aside with an imperious gesture of her hand. He trembled and obeyed, and she left the boudoir.

A moment later she was on the avenue, going toward Broadway.

It was now near midnight; cold, damp weather, with the rain falling in great drops. The few pedestrians still on the broad pavement turned to follow with their eyes this majestic lady, whose gait seemed hastened by some errand of life or death.

But in New York nothing is surprising, for people witness all manner of things there. Therefore, the strange appearance of Flora did not excite any extraordinary attention.

A few men smiled and nodded; others threw a few words of raillery at her. Both were unheeded alike.

Reaching Madison Square, she stopped near the fountain. The sound of the falling water caught her ear. She leaned against a tree, and gazed into the agitated pool; then bowing her head, she sighed a groaning sigh, and turned back.

Hurrying up Fifth avenue, she passed her own door, and soon reached the Elliston mansion.

Arrived there, the unfortunate child knew not what to do, nor even why she had come. She had some vague design, as though to assure herself palpably of her misfortune; to touch it with her finger, or perhaps to find some reason, some pretext to doubt it.

She dropped down on the stone steps and hid her face in both her hands, vainly striving to think.

It was past midnight. The streets were deserted; a shower of rain was falling, and she was chilled to numbness.

A policeman passed by. He turned and stared at the young woman, then took her roughly by the arm.

"What are you doing here?" he asked, brutally.

She looked up at him with wondering eyes.

"I do not know myself," she answered.

The man looked more closely at her, discovered through all her confusion a nameless refinement and the subtle perfume of purity. He took pity on her.

"But, madam, you cannot stay here," he rejoined, in a softer voice.

"No?"

"You must have some great sorrow?"

"Very great."

"What is your name?"

"Flora Cleveland," she said, simply.

The man looked bewildered.

"Will you tell me where you live?" he asked.

She gave the number with perfect simplicity and perfect indifference. She seemed to be thinking nothing of what she was saying.

"Ah! just below here," said the officer.

"Yes," she rejoined.

"Will you take my arm?"

She did so quietly, and they started slowly down the street.

Eugene had just reached the house, and heard with stupefied surprise, from the lips of the lady's maid, the details of his wife's mysterious disappearance, when the bell rang violently.

He rushed out and met his wife on the stairs. She had somewhat recovered her calmness, and as he interrogated her with a searching glance, made a ghastly effort to smile.

"I was slightly ill and went out a little," she said. "I walked too far and am somewhat tired."

Notwithstanding the improbability of the explanation, he did not hesitate. He murmured a few soft words of reproach and placed her in the hands of her maid, who removed her wet garments.

During that time he called the officer, who remained in the vestibule, and closely interrogated him.

On learning where he had found Flora, Eugene knew at once and fully the whole truth.

He went directly to his wife. She had retired and was trembling in every limb.

One of her hands was resting outside the coverlet.

He rushed to take it, but she withdrew it gently, but with sad and resolute dignity.

The simple gesture told him they were separated forever.

By a tacit arrangement proposed by her, and as tacitly accepted by him, Flora became virtually a widow.

He remained for some seconds immovable, his expression lost in the shadow of a curtain; then slowly left the chamber. The idea of lying to defend himself never occurred to him.

His line of conduct was already arranged—calmly, methodically. But two blue circles had already sunk around his eyes, and his face wore a waxen pallor.

His hands, joined behind his back, were clenched together; and the ring he wore sparkled with their tremulous movement.

After half an hour he stood in the door of her chamber.

"Flo!" he said.

She turned her eyes gleaming with fever upon him.

"Flo, I am ignorant of what you know, and I shall not ask you," he continued, as he stepped into the room and approached her bed. "I have been very criminal toward you, but perhaps less so than you think.

"Terrible circumstances bound me with iron bands. Fate ruled me! But I seek no palliation. Judge of me as severely as you wish; but I beg of you calm yourself—preserve yourself!

"You spoke to me this morning of your presentiments—of your maternal hopes. Attach yourself to those thoughts, and you will always be mistress of your life. As for myself, I shall be whatever you will me—a stranger or a friend. But now I feel that my presence makes you ill. I will leave you for a time, but not alone. Would you wish Mrs. Morgan to come to you?"

"Yes," she murmured, faintly.

"I shall go for her; but it is not necessary to tell you there are confidences one must reserve from one's dearest friends."

"Except a mother?" She murmured the question with a supplicating agony, very painful to see.

He grew still paler. After an instant:

"Except a mother!" he said. "Be it so!"

She turned her face and buried it in the pillow.

"Your mother returns to-morrow, does she not?"

She made an affirmative motion of her head.

"You can make your arrangements with her. I shall accept everything."

"Thank you," she replied, feebly.

He left the room and went to find Mrs. Morgan, whom he awakened, and briefly told her his wife had been seized with a severe nervous attack, the effect of a chill. The amiable lady ran hastily to Flora and spent the night with her.

But she was not the dupe of the explanation Eugene had given her. Women quickly understand each other in their grief.

Nevertheless she asked no confidences and received none; but her tenderness to the stricken one redoubled.

During the silence of that dreadful night the only service she could render her was to make her weep.

Nor did those laggard hours pass less bitterly for Eugene Cleveland.

He tried to take no rest, but walked up and down his apartments until daylight in a sort of frenzy. The distress of this poor child wounded him to the heart.

The memories of the past rose before him, and passed onward in sad procession. Then the morrow would show him the crushed daughter with her mother—her loving mother. Mortally stricken in all her best illusions, in all her dearest hopes, in all connection with the happiness of life!

He found he had yet in his heart lively feelings of pity; yet some remorse in his conscience.

Strange to say, this weakness irritated him, and he denounced it to himself.

Who had betrayed him?

This question agitated him to an equal degree, but from the first instant he had not been deceived in this matter.

The sudden grief and half-crazed conviction of his wife, her despairing attitude, and her silence, could only be explained by strong assurance and certain revelation.

After having turned the matter over and over in his mind, he arrived at the conclusion that nothing could have thrown such clear light into his life save Clara's letters.

He never wrote to Mrs. Elliston, but could not prevent her writing to him, for to her, as to all women, love without letters was incomplete.

But the fault of Eugene, inexcusable in a man of his tact, was to have preserved these letters. No one, however, is perfect, and he was an artist.

He delighted in these chef d'œuvres of passionate eloquence, was proud of inspiring them, and he could not make up his mind to burn or destroy them.

He examined at once the secret drawer where he had concealed them, and by certain signs discovered the lock had been tampered with. Nevertheless, there was no letter missing; the arrangement of them alone had been disturbed.

His suspicions at once reverted to Slyme, whose scruples he suspected were but slight, and in the morning they were confirmed beyond doubt by a letter from the secretary to his employer.

In fact, Slyme, after passing on his part a most wretched night, did not feel his nerves equal in the morning to meeting the reception possibly in waiting for him at the Lelands'. His letter was skillfully penned, to put asleep suspicion if it had not been fully aroused, and if Flora had not betrayed him.

It announced his acceptance of a lucrative situation, suddenly offered him in a commercial house in Boston. He was obliged to decide at once, and to start that same morning, for fear of losing an opportunity which could not recur again. It concluded with the liveliest gratitude and regret.

Eugene could not very well reach his brother-in-law's secretary to strangle him; so he resolved to do the next best thing. He not only sent him a friendly letter thanking him for all his kindness to his wife, but a handsome present in addition as a testimonial of his sympathy and good wishes!

This, however, was a simple precaution, for he apprehended nothing more from the venomous reptile, so far beneath him, after he had once shaken him off.

Seeing him deprived of the only weapon he could possibly use against him, he felt safe. Besides, so far as he knew, Slyme had lost the only interest he could desire to subserve, for he knew this man had done him the compliment of courting his wife.

And he really esteemed him a little less low, after discovering this gentlemanly taste!

Ah! but the end was not yet.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE DAUGHTER AND HER MOTH.

It required on the part of Eugene Cleveland, this same morning, an exertion of all his courage to perform his duty as a gentleman in receiving Mr. and Mrs. Leland upon their return home. But courage had been for some time past his sole remaining virtue; and this, at least, he sought never to lose.

He received them most gracefully—his father and mother-in-law as they descended from their carriage and entered the broad hall.

Mr. Leland was much broken in health. The trip, which it had been hoped would benefit, had only wearied him; and now, on again entering his own door, he begged to be at once assisted to his sleeping room.

Mrs. Leland lingered in surprise at not seeing her daughter there to meet them, and cast an inquiring look upon Eugene.

He informed her that she had been a little indisposed since the preceding evening. Notwithstanding the precautions he took in his language and by his smile, he could not prevent Mrs. Leland from feeling a lively alarm.

He did not pretend, however, entirely to reassure her. Under his reserved and measured replies, she felt the presentment of some disaster. After having pressed him with many questions, she suddenly turned and hurried up stairs.

Flora, to spare her mother the first shock, had quitted her bed and dressed herself; and the poor child had even put a little rouge on her pale cheeks. Eugene, who had hastened after his mother-in-law, himself opened for her the door of her daughter's chamber, and then withdrew.

All that passed between them at first was a silent interchange of mutual caresses. Then the mother seated herself near her daughter, drew her head on her bosom, and looked into the depths of her eyes.

"What is the matter?" she asked sadly.

"Oh, nothing—nothing hopeless! only you must love your little Flo more than ever. Will you not?"

"Yes; but why?"

"I must not worry you; and I must not wrong myself, either. You know why!"

"Yes; but I implore you, my darling, to tell me."

"Very well; I will tell you everything But, mother, you must be as brave as I am."

She buried her head lower still on her mother's breast, and commenced to recount to her, in a low voice, without looking up once, the terrible revelation which had been made to her, and which her husband's avowal had confirmed.

Mrs. Leland did not once interrupt her during this cruel recital. She only imprinted a kiss on her hair from time to time.

Flora, who did not dare to raise her eyes to her, as though she were ashamed of another's crime, might have imagined that she had exaggerated the gravity of her misfortune, since her mother had received the confidence with so much calmness. But the calmness of Mrs. Leland at this terrible moment was that of the martyrs; for all that could have been suffered by the Christians under the claws of the tiger, or on the rack of the torturer, this mother was suffering at the hands of her best-beloved daughter.

Her beautiful pale face—her large eyes upturned to heaven, like those they give to the pure victims kneeling in the Roman circus—appeared as though demanding of God if He really had any consolation for such torture.

When she had heard all, she summoned strength to smile at her daughter, who at last looked up to her with an expression of timid uncertainity, embracing her more tightly still.

"Well, my darling," said she, at last, "it is a great affliction, it is true. You are right, notwithstanding; there is nothing to despair of."

"Do you really believe so?"

"Certainly. There is some inconceivable mystery under all this; but be assured that the evil is not so terrible as it appears."

"My poor mother! but he has acknowledged it?"

"I am better pleased he has acknowledged it. That proves he has yet some pride, and some good yet left in his soul. Then, too, he feels very much afflicted; he suffers as much as we do. Think of that. Let us think of the future, my darling."

They clasped each other's hands, and smiled at one another to restrain the tears which filled the eyes of both.

After a few minutes:

"I must go to your poor father now, my child," said Mrs. Leland, "and then I would like to repose for half an hour."

"I will accompany you to papa's room. Oh, I can walk! I feel a great deal better."

"I think you had better wait a little, my dear. Your father is reposing after the fatigues of the journey. I will come for you by and by."

"Very well, mamma."

Mrs. Leland rose to leave the room. At the door she turned:

"Be sensible," she said, with another smile.

"And you also," rejoined Flora, whose voice failed her.

Mrs. Leland hastened to her own private room, closed and locked the door, raised her clasped hands toward Heaven; then, falling on her knees before the bed, she buried her head in it, and commenced to weep despairingly.

Flora, left alone in her room, dropped upon her knees, clasped her hands, and supplicated the Great Throne for strength to bear the terrible trial through which she was passing.

The apartment occupied by Eugene was continuous to this chamber. He had been walking with long strides up and down the room, expecting every moment to see Mrs. Leland enter.

As the time passed on he sat himself down and tried to read, but his thoughts wondered. His ear eagerly received, against his will, the slightest sounds in the house. If a foot seemed approaching him, he rose suddenly and tried to compose his countenance. When the door of the neighboring chamber was opened his agony was redoubled.

He caught the sound of a weary sigh, then, an instant after, the dull fall of Mrs. Leland upon the carpet, then her despairing sobs.

Eugene threw from him violently the book which he was forcing himself to read, placing his elbows on the bureau which was before him, held, for a long time, his pale forehead tightened in his contracted hands. When the sound of the sobs abated and ceased, little by little, he breathed freer.

A little after midday he received this note:

"My husband's health is hopelessly broken. He has sent in his resignation to the directors of the bank. He longs for the country. Warren has placed his house at Roxbury at our disposal, and we depart almost immediately. If you will permit me to take my daughter with me for a few days, I shall be grateful to you. AGNES LELAND."

He returned this simple reply:

"You can do nothing of which I do not approve to-day and always.
"EUGENE CLEVELAND."

Mrs. Leland, in fact, having consulted the inclination and the strength of her daughter, had determined to remove her without delay, if possible, from the impressions of the spot where she had suffered so severely from the presence of her husband, and from the unfortunate embarrassment of their mutual situation.

She desired also to meditate in solitude, in order to decide what course to take under unexpected circumstances.

Finally, she had not the courage to see Eugene again—if she could ever see him again—until some time had elapsed. It was not without anxiety that she awaited his reply to the request she had addressed him.

In the midst of the troubled confusion of her ideas, she believed him capable of almost anything; and she feared everything from him.

Eugene's note reassured her.

She hastened to read it to her daughter and both of them, like two lost creatures who cling to the smallest twig, remarked with pleasure the kind of respectful abandonment with which he had reposed their destines in their own hand.

He spent the remainder of the day in his counting-room, and when he returned they had departed.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE REPTILE TURNS TO STING.

When Flora Cleveland returned to New York and her home she there experienced the painful impressions of the past, and the somber preoccupation of the future; but she brought there with her, although in a fragile form, a most powerful consolation—her first-born child.

Assailed by grief, and even menaced by new emotions, she was obliged to renounce the nursing of her little one; but nevertheless she never left him, for she was jealous even of his nurse. She at least wished to be loved by him.

She loved him with an infinite passion. She loved him because he was her own son and of her blood.

He was the price of her misfortune—of her pain.

She loved him because he was her only hope of human happiness hereafter.

She loved him because he was as beautiful as the day. And it was true he was so; for he resembled his father—and she loved him also on that account.

She tried to concentrate her heart and all her thoughts on this dear creature, and at first she thought she had succeeded.

She was surprised at herself, at her own tranquillity, when she saw Cora Elliston; for her lively imagination had exhausted, in advance, all the sadness which her new existence could contain.

But when she had lost the kind of torpor into which excessive suffering had plunged her—when her maternal sensations were a little quieted by custom—her woman's heart recovered itself in the mother's

She could not prevent herself from renewing her passionate interest in her graceful though terrible husband.

Mrs. Leland did not return to the city with her daughter, but remained in Roxbury, with her husband.

Flora wrote her quite often, however, and told her everything that was taking place. For this wise young woman, matured by misfortune, observed everything, saw everything, and exaggerated nothing.

She touched in her letters, on the most delicate points in the household, and even on her husband's secret thoughts, with accurate justice.

Eugene, as yet, was not at all converted, nor near being so; but it would be belying human nature to attribute to his heart, or that of any other human being, a supernatural impassibility.

If the dark and implacable theories which Eugene Cleveland had lately made the law of his existence could triumph absolutely, this would be true.

The trials he had passed through did not reform him, they only staggered him.

He pitied one of his victims, and, as one wrong always entails another, after pitying his wife, he came near loving his child.

These two weaknesses had glided into his petrified soul, as into a marble fount, and there took root—two imperceptible roots, however.

The child scarcely occupied him more than a few moments every day.

He thought of him, however, and would return home a little earlier than usual each day than was his habit, secreetly attracted by the smile of that fresh face.

The mother was for him something more. Her sufferings, her youthful heroism, had touched him. She became in his eyes somebody.

He discovered many merits in her. He perceived she was remakably well informed for a woman. She understood half a word, knew a great deal, and guessed at the remainder.

She had, in fine, that blending grace and solidity which gives to the conversation of a woman of cultured mind an incomparable charm.

She was a lovable creature, and it can be understood that she might have many attractions, even for her husband.

Yet, though he had not for one instant the idea of sacrificing to her the passion that ruled his life, it is certain, however, that his wife pleased him as a charming friend, which she truly was.

Deacon Slick—"Hold on! Hold on! Ever since he took the blind staggers that hoss ain't been worth——"

Assessor—"But, the city man's offer?"

Deacon—"Before I could close the bargain with him, the keepers came along and an' snaked him back to the insane asylum. Put the hoss down on yer list as dear at $5."—Munsey's Weekly.

SAVING is a practice best begun early—and for this reason: It is a habit, and like all habits, easily planted in a child, but taking root with difficulty in an adult. It is no kindness to teach children to spend, unless you can insure them money to spend to their lives' end.

SIR FREDERICK LEIGHTON, England's great artist, is said to have discovered a language derived from the English, but no intimation of what that language is is given. Perhaps it's Rostonese.

The Orphans' Home.

The Orphans' Home at Mishawaka, makes a good shewing at its recent annual meeting. It is sustained in part by voluntary gifts and partly by assessments made on such counties as have orphans there. The number admitted the first year was 42; second year, 46; third year, 73; fourth year, 62; fifth year, 40; sixth, 61; seventh year, 91; eight year, 88. About two thirds of these have been provided with good homes, and all are well cared for. It was to this institution that Superintendent Glazier took the five children from our County Home last week. It is fortunate that we have access to an institution of this kind, as it is much better for the children to be cared for at the Orphans' Home, than to be reared among the paupers at the poor farm.

Captain Simonson's Daughter.

(Indianapolis Journal.)

Pension Agent Ensley has appointed to a clerkship in his office Miss Mary Simonson. The lady is the only daughter and the last of the family of Captain Peter Simonson, who commanded the Fifth Indiana battery of light artillery, and her appointment has given great satisfaction to her friends and the old soldiers of the northern part of the state. Captain Simonson's artillerists, a splendid body of men came mostly from Whitley, Noble, LaPorte and Allen counties, where the captain was looked upon as one of the brilliant and most successful artillery officers of the day. On June 16, 1864, while on the skirmish lines directing the fire of his guns, he was shot in the forehead by a rebel sharpshooter and instantly killed. It was a skillfully directed shot from one of his guns that killed the rebel general Bishop Polk, a short time before Simonson's death. Both death were noted events in the war.

From Montana.

Lee Gœtschius, well known all about here, writes August 17, a strong letter from his home at Anaconda, Montana. It will be noticed that he is in the immediate vicinity where the trouble occurred about the election, the republicans throwing out a whole precinct because that would give the legislature to them, with two United States senators. After enclosing a postal note for the the COURIER, he writes:

"The COURIER is received here every Tuesday and read with interest. The fact that it is a sound democratic paper, is what makes it more welcome. I hope that you will continue to advocate free coinage of silver, denounce the high tariff and force bills and brand Thos. B. Reed (speaker) with the brand of condemnation, and keep your eyes peeled for the two Senatorial Frauds from Montana. Sanders is of vigilante fame, and Powers of post trader fame, both notorious. The fraud committd at precinct 34 Silver Bow county last fall will be avenged this coming election. We expect to show you eastern people that Montana is democratic beyond a doubt. We are having fine weather up here, temperature ranges from 80 to 95, crops are reasonably good, mining interests booming. We are all well, etc. Give my repects to all."

Railroads of the United States.

We have received from James A. Case, assistant statistician of the Inter-State Commerce Commission an advance copy of the statistics of railways of the United States. It contains much valuable information and many curious facts. There is a table showing the number of miles of the different gauges of road, that will surprise those who have not studied these things. Here, we find the gauge varying from two feet to eight feet four inches. Of the former, there are four companies with 59.16 miles of track. The three foot, or narrow guage has almost gone out of use, only 6 per cent of the mileage of the country now being of that width. Of the standard gauge, 4 feet, 8½ inches we find 72.40 per cent. So it will be seen, the tendency is to bring all roads to the standard gauge. As to increase in mileage of various states, as nearly as can be found, our own state increased last year, 822 miles. California showed the highest, 536, Georgia next, 598. The lowest increase was Rhode Island, 45 hundredths of a mile and Utah with 2.14. Massachusetts decreased her mileage 9.32 and Delaware decreased 7.25. District of Columbia remains the same, and Alaska has no railroads.

We were told not long ago, by a gentleman familiar with things in Indianapolis, that State Auditor Carr, State Superintendent LaFollette, and Book Agent E. J. Robinson, have the most luxurious rooms in the city. They are all single men, though Carr is a divorced man. They room together, and everything is magnificent. They have a French cook, the choicest of wines etc., in the cellar, and every morning they have delivered there the earliest, finest and costliest things in the market. No wonder the finances of the state are in bad shape. What time and attention they give to high living, to horse races, politics, pleasure resorts, to assisting the old school book monopolies, and to spreading abroad the reports against the state's financial interests, might better be spent in doing a little common everyday hard work that they are paid for doing. Turn 'em out.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

The French Spoliation Claims.

(Warsaw Indianian.)

The French spoliation claims are once more before Congress for action. They certainly are regarded by Congressmen as a "chestnut" and a very old "chestnut" at that, but, like many other acts of Congress, the fact of their age is by no means indicative of want of merit. These claims are on account of depredations on American shipping committed by the French between the years 1793 and 1800. In view of the fact that there have been forty-nine reports of committees of the two houses since the years 1803 (all but three of which have been favorable, and all without exception having been so since 1822) the singular apathy of Congress in paying just claims is very unaccountable. The Court of Claims, under act of Congress, 1885, passed upon the questions of law involved and upon individual cases, of which, out of $11,726,000, $1,604,681 have been allowed. The whole indebtedness of the government involved is less than $7,000,000. The claimants for this $1,604,000 are scattered all over the United States. Hardly a Congressman but some constituent who owns one of these claims. In this city there are a number of claimants, and it seems clear that Congress ought to dispose of the matter, and, as the righteousness of the claims has been passed on, make an appropriation and pay the debt without further exasperating and unreasonable delays. The appropriation is incorporated in the general deficiency bill.

Next Sunday Morning

at ten o'clock or any day this week, you can buy at Davenpot's a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup for your cough as it is guaranteed to cure and relieve all chronic and acute coughs for less money than any other, as the price is only 25 cents, it enables all to give this great medicine a trial. History of English Weights and Measures.

The jewelers of the middle ages used in their delicate scales the hard brown seeds of the Moorish Carob-tree, and the weight of diamonds is still reckoned by carats, each carat being equal to 3 1-6 grains troy. The earliest attempt to regulate British weights and measures appears to have been suggested by this example. In 1266 it was declared by statute that "an English penny, called a sterling, round and without any clipping, shall weigh 32 wheat corns in the midst of the ear; and 20 pence do make an ounce, and 112 ounces one pound; and 8 pounds do make a gallon of wine, and 8 gallons of wine do make a London bushel, which is an eighth part of a quarter." We have here the basis of the British system of reckoning as it survives to day—the grain, pennyweight, ounce, pound, gallon, bushel and ton, and 240 silver pence equal to a pound sterling. The British gallon is still used for both dry and liquid measure; and the traditional relation between the pound and the gallon is set forth in the old rhyme, which declares that

"A pint's a pound
The world around."

In 1324 the measures of length were defined by a similar statute providing that "three barleycorns, round and dry, laid end to end," shall make 1 inch, 12 inches a foot, and 3 feet a yard. The 32 wheat corns, adopted as the basis of the British system, appear to have weighed 22½ grains troy, so that the pound of 1266 was equal to 5400 grains troy. This is the old Saxon pound. The pound troy (pound du roy) is the Roman pound, and was doubtless in use simultaneously with the Saxon pound for hundreds of years, but is first mentioned in the statutes in 1414, and was ordained as the standard weight for gold and silver in 1627. As 24 grains make a pennyweight troy, the new pound contained 5760 grains, exceeding the old weight by 360 grains, or three quarters of an ounce.

The strict pound of 12 ounces was used only in weighing the precious metals, and, with different subdivisions, for the costly drugs and medicines dealt out by apothecaries. For heavy goods (avoirs du poids) a more liberal measure was given, like the baker's dozen, and 15 ounces were called a pound. In the same way 28 pounds were called a quarter, and 112 pounds a hundred-weight, allowance being made for waste or wrappings. The increase of the pennyweight to 24 grains in 1527 raised the value of the ounce to 480 grains; and accordingly the pound of commerce, containing 15 ounces, was raised to 7200 grains. As 250 grains of wine were reckoned equal to a cubic inch, the gallon, containing 8 of these pounds, or 57,600 grains, had a capacity of 230 4, or in even numbers 231 cubic inches. This is the wine gallon now in use in the United States. The ale or beer gallon, of 282 cubic inches, was originally a measure containing 8 pounds of wheat at 204 grains to the cubic inch.

The name avoirdupois was transferred at a very early date from the heavy goods, which it indicated, to the system by which they were weighed. It occurs first in the statutes of 1335 and 1353. The early pound of 15 ounces of 450 grains each—6750 grains—was raised by law, as has been shown, to 7200 grains, making 16 of the old ounces. In practice, however, the pound seems to have fallen below this standard to about 7000 grains, and this weight was finally declared to be a pound avoirdupois, the avoirdupois ounce, or sixteenth of the pound, being thus reduced to 437½ grains.—From "The Metric System," by H. W. Richardson, in Harper's Magazine for September.

Fine Logic.

The Dispatch got scared at its own inability to answer the question the COURIER made from the Chicago Herald, as to the disastrous effect the McKinley bill would have on the sale of band instruments. Of course the McKinley steal would injure many other lines of business in the same way, but we happened to think of that one. So, as we said, not being able to say a word himself, the editor of the Dispatch rushed off and sent a red hot letter to C. G. Conn, maker of band instruments at Elkhart. Of course Conn don't like the Herald article for it appears to favor Conn's rivals in business. So he writes a short letter to "Walter B. Campbell" the burden of which is that Conn's band instruments are better than any other. This the Dispatch man is weak enough to claim as an answer to the Herald article. Let any one with a grain of sense look at the article and Conn's letter, and they will see the argument stand like this: (1) "The Herald says the McKinley bill will make us pay more for band instruments made abroad and also pay for the boxes etc., in which they are brought over." (2) "I assert that my make of brass horns, is cheaper and better than those made abroad." (3) "Therefore the Chicago Herald lied, and the McKinley bill does not add to the expense of band horns, nor will it compel us to pay for the boxes etc., in which they are shipped over." A man who believes such a thing is an argument, is hardly fitted to boss the doing of everything in DeKalb county.

* * *

The Dispatch insists that "the mercantile world is against the McKinley bill, because they are interested in selling goods of foreign manufacture. But any one who can "figger" knows that a tariff or any other plan that raises prices adds to the profit of the dealer. Like this, A is a dealer and buys an article without a tariff, that costs $10. If his regular profits are ten per cent., he makes $1 when he sells it. But suppose now, that this article is put on the the tariff list and must pay fifty per cent. duty. Now it costs him $10 with $5 duty added making total cost $15. Now when he sells it at his regular profit of ten per cent., he makes $1.50 instead of $1 he would have made without the duty. So it will be seen that the tariff suits him.

Every Christian Mother.

Should be careful with her children. The damp atmosphere of our climate often brings on coughs, colds, etc., which if not attended to in time lead to that dreaded disease consumption. To prevent this, it is the duty of all mothers to have a remedy near to check these coughs that your children may contract, and you cannot get a safer or more reliable remedy than Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. You can buy this for 25 cents of F. E. Davenport.

Another youngest soldier has been found and his name is Wallace Riley, of Buchanan. He enlisted in a New York regiment when only twelve years old.

The First Step.

Perhaps you are run down, can't eat, can't sleep, can't think, can't do anything to your satisfaction, and you wonder what ails you. You should heed the warning, you are taking the first step into Nervous Prostration. You need a Nerve Tonic and in Electric Bitters you will find the exact remedy for restoring your nervous system to its normal, healthy condition. Surprising results follow the use of this great Nerve Tonic and Alterative. Your appetite returns, good digestion is restored, and the Liver and Kidneys resume healthy action. Try a bottle. Price 50c. at Robbins & McCord's Drugstore. 6

J. Van, of Macon, offers a big prize of $2,000 to the homliest woman in Georgia to ride on his float during the trades display parade at the state fair.

Home Evidence.

Dr. J. A. Nelms, of Atlanta, Ga., says: "I used Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure in several cases of the worst type, and I am glad to say it had the desired effect in every case. I take pleasure in recommending the medicine to all who are suffering with rheumatism and its complications." See "adv't." For sale by druggists at $1 per bottle. Hunnicutt Medicine Co., Atlanta, Ga., proprietors, also mnfrs., of Hunnicutt's Throat and Lung cure, for coughs, colds, asthma and consumption.

Veterinary Surgeon.

Dr. James Adams, Veterinary Surgeon will treat all diseases of domestic animals. He has had thirty years successful practice. Call on him at his residence No. 34 on North Main street, or at the drug store of Robbins & McCord. tf

The patrons of the popular excursions in England are termed "cheap trippers." A very large number of them went over to see the Paris bull fights.

Great Discoverers.

What Bell and Edison are to the telephone and electricity, says the Pittsburg News, Dr Franklin Miles, the well known specialist in nervous diseases, is to the nervous system and nerve fluid. Among his numerous discoveries the Restorative Nervine is undoubtedly one of the greatest. It is unsurpassed in nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, epilepsy, neuralgia, backache, melancholy, sleeplessness, change of life, etc. Free trial bottles of it may be had of F. E. Davenport, the druggist. All should read his "New and Startling Facts for the Afflicted," a very able, interesting, and finely illustrated book. Free to all. 6

At a French festival, imitating old-fashoned customs, the musicians will be placed in garland-wreathed hogsheads, as in the good old times.

A Valuable Discovery.

Dr. Brown Sequard's elixir of youth may be an important discovery, but every one knows that Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure certainly is. It has given thousands afflicted with serious heart disease a new lease of life. Druggists who can observe its effects on many customers everywhere speak highly of it. Mr. John Weaver, of Knightstown, Ind., says: "I have sold much of Dr. Miles' New Cure and have received many good reports." O. Monroe, of Dunkirk, N. Y., reports large sales. "And the best part of it is every bottle has tion." Sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport. 6

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recomdation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of severe cough, after using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors,

Yours,
AMOS CLARK.

CONVENTION AT LAGRANGE.

Judge McClellan Unanimously Renominated, amidst unbounded Enthusiasm.

The meeting at LaGrange was like an old-fashioned love feast. All was harmony, unanimity and good feeling. There was a better attendance than was expected, for all knew there would be no opposition to Judge McClellan. But everybody wanted to go. There were thirty-eight from Auburn, the Judge's home, though the meeting was rather difficult to reach. However, we were assisted by Mr. Coffinberry and the B. & O. folks, who gave us a special from the Junction to Avilla. At Garrett, several more joined us, while those farther north met us at Kendallville. Butler, Waterloo, Angola and Kendallville were out in force, as were also Columbia City and Ft. Wayne. The latter city was out in force. The convention met in Eulok's opera house, a very fine building. H. Freygang, district chairman called the meeting to order at 10:30, and on motion of Mr. Dills, Hon. M. V. B. Spencer, of Allen, was made chairman, and made a brief but brilliant speech. Dr. A. S. Parker was made secretary, with the other democratic editors to assist. A committee on resolutions was moved by Col. I. B. Mcdonald of Whitley, and each county selected a member. Adjourned to 1:30, p. m. At the afternoon session, as Mr. Spencer called the great crowd to order, and while waiting for the committee on resolution, he made a most excellent, though extemporaneous speech. He was roundly cheered at every point. But when he casually mentioned Grover Cleveland the great room rang again and again with shouts of the delegates, the galleries taking up the cry and aided by the ladies present, made the strong roof fairly tremble. Hendricks' name called out cheers, for his memory will always be dear to democrats. Voorhees and Turpie got a liberal share, and when the speaker, toward the close, alluded to Judge McClellan, the building shook again. We have never seen such enthusiasm at a nominating convention. Then Col McDonald read the resolutions. (These were prepared by W. H. Dills, but were left at LaGrange, and we were not able to get them in time for this week.) Nominations were then in order. Senator Barrett, of Ft. Wayne, then arose, and in a speech admirable for its classic eloquence, nominated Judge McClellan to be his own successor. Then came more cheers. The other counties followed, seconding the nomination. O. L. Ballou spoke for LaGrange. It was an earnest, masterly speech. H. Freygang spoke for Steuben and Dr. Parker for Noble. Col. McDonald spoke briefly for Whitley and was followed by W. H. McNagny in one of the finest and most eloquent addresses before the meeting. He is a speaker of great power. Hon. Freeman Kelley spoke for DeKalb county. He spoke as one knowing the man whom we had met to honor. He had known Judge McClellan from boyhood, and knew him to be true to the interests of the common people. He spoke to his farmer friends, men who, like himself, had an intimate acquaintance with hard labor in the fields—he spoke to them, for Judge McClellan's record was a record of work well done in their interests. All his votes, every bill he had supported, every act, everything he had refrained from doing, the speaker had watched, and he stood here to-day to say that all had been done in the interests of the masses. That as Senator Barrett had said, "The judge had stood as a stone wall between the people and those who would oppress them." Deafening cheers marked the close of the speech. Then Mr. Barrett moved that the nomination of Judge McClellan be made unanimous, and the whole house rose as one man to ratify it. Then followed rattling speeches by S. M. Foster and H. C. Berghoff, of Ft. Wayne, and Andrew Ellison, of LaGrange. The latter, among many other good things, gave the figures to show that LaGrange county had steadily lost her great republican majority, and now, with a fully united democracy, he believed it could be made still less. With cheers for the ticket and the city and citizens of LaGrange, the meeting adjourned. The DeKalb county band furnished the music, and by their skill in this and their gentlemanly bearing, captured the hearts of La Grange people.

Judge McClellan.

Congressman McClellan did not come home to attend the nominating convention, though many had hoped to meet him there. But he did just right in staying at his post, for he is needed there, and was not needed here. His duty is to his party and to the country, and he has best served both by remaining at his post doing the work he was chosen to do. We feel sure our people will appreciate his faithful and untiring devotion to duty. This Congress has been an exceedingly slack one. At times half of the members have been absent, a few of them have been sick, but the great bulk of the absentees have been at the seaside, or other pleasure resorts; at home with their families or attending to their private business, and some have gone home to work up their district for a renomination. None of these things has Judge McClellan done. He has not been absent from his post, as far as we can learn, not a day, and perhaps not even a roll call. Now, important bills are coming up just at the close of the session and there is an urgent demand that all democrats be present. Besides this, the speaker has ordered all leaves of absence canceled and all members called in to work. This is what he should have done long ago. But we make this explanation, in order that anyone who thinks he should have come home to the convention, will see that he had good reasons to stay at his post of duty.

Obituary.

James Earl, son of Thomas and Ida Stafford was born Jan. 26th, 1890, died August 23rd, 1890, aged 6 months and 27 days. Another home made sad and lonely by that dreaded disease cholera infantum. The funeral services were held at the Rehoboth church, August 25, at 10 a. m., Rev. Fred, of Spencerville, officiating. After which, the remains were interred in the Auburn cemetery.

When our natural life is ended,
And our earthly mission done,
We shall cross the River,
At the setting of life's sun,
And in God's celestial mansions,
Clothed in garments strangely fair,
We shall meet our little Earl,
We will know our baby.

Yes, we'll meet him in the City,
That is just across the strand,
And our hearts shall leap with joy,
When we meet our darling baby boy,
Oh, how sweet will be the meeting,
Earthly words can not declare.
We shall know the bliss of heaven,
When we meet our baby there.

Do not tell us that our loved ones,
Lose their earthly mem'ries quite,
When they sing among the angels
In the heavenly mansions bright,
Oh, I know we shall recognize him,
Though an angel robe he wears,
When the Savior bids us come home,
We shall meet our dear little Earl,

THROWN FROM THE TRACK.

Two Persons Killed and a Number Injured by a Railroad Accident.

Hot Springs (Wash.) special: A terrible accident occurred on the Northern Pacific, four miles from Eagle Gorge. Two persons were killed and eleven others injured. The east-bound passenger, No. 2, was thrown from the track by a broken rail, and the mail, express and baggage cars, smoker, emigrant car, and the coaches were thrown from the track. The names of the killed are: Ben Young, umpire of the Northwest League; J. D. Keepler, of Red Bluff, Cal. The names of those injured are: E. W. Heally and wife, Tracey, Minn.; Mrs. Dr. A. H. Fowler, Holyoke, Mass.; V. G. Frost, Ellensburg; E. T, Furnish, Tacoma; Tudd Randall, Glenville, Minn.; George Brahsky, Spokane Falls; R. S. Campbell, Oregon; G. H. Woodson, a tourist; Geo. E. Purple, Edgemoore, Mich. Physicians have been sent from Ellensburg and a special train will bring the wounded to this city.

Dynamited a Saloon.

Citizens living in the business portion of the quiet little town of Greentown, Ind., were startled by a loud report and a dense volume of smoke which arose from the saloon building of Jesse Autt on Main street. Investigation revealed the fact that the deadly dynamite had got in its work, and that the entire front of the building was demolished, as was also the bar and shelving, fine screen, cigar stand and almost all the other furniture, including an expensive ice-chest and cooler. The damage to building and contents is estimated at $700 to $800. The temperance element predominates in that section of Howard County, and much ill-feeling has been manifested against this saloon.

Dispersed with Shotguns.

Several weeks ago the land adjoining Lake Coutrary, near St. Joseph, Mo., was ceded to the city for a public park by the Government. It was decided to reopen a canal between the upper and lower lakes, and workmen began their labors the other day. Some farmers, who squatted near the lake, disputed the right of the city and drove the workmen away. Next morning when the contractor and his men began operations three farmers armed with shotguns came upon the grounds and warned the workmen to proceed at the peril of their lives. A squad of officers will be sent to the place, and serious trouble is anticipated.

Northern Indiana Fair.

The Northern Indiana Fair will be held at Fort Wayne, Ind., beginning Tuesday, Sept. 16 and concluding Friday, Sept. 19. As competition is open to the world, the display ot art, machinery, agricultural products, etc., will be the finest ever on exhibition. The purses in the speed department are large, and the entries comprise some of the best horses in the country. Among the many features are the Roman races, which are very exciting and give the spectators any amount of amusement.

Wild Engine.

New Castle (Ind.) special: A wild engine and car swept through the city on the L. E. & W. Railroad. The engineer reversed the lever and jumped from his engine near here to avoid a collision with the morning passenger train on the Pan Handle at the junction north of this city. What might have been a terrible accident was averted by the car jumping the track and bringing the engine to a standstill only five minutes before the north-bound Lake Erie and Western passenger train came along.

Held Up a Train.

Robbers held up a passenger train on the Escambia River bridge, a few miles north of Montgomery, Ala. They climbed on the engine and compelled the engineer to stop on the bridge and then went to the express car, which they went through, getting a very large sum of money. It is reported that the express messenger, Archid Arkel, killed one of the robbers, but this is not confirmed.

Carpenters' Strike at Chicago.

A Chicago special, dated the 3d inst., says: The second great strike of the carpenters in this year has gone into effect. Of the 8,000 members of the craft in the city less than 2,000 are at work to-day. By night it is expected that most of these will have joined the strikers, and within a week, should a settlement not be effected, the entire building business will be in a state of coma.

Both Found Guilty.

Baltimore special: In the investigation in the collision between the steamers Louise and Virginia near Fort Carroll on July 28, last, in which fifteen lives were lost, John Oast, Supervising Inspector for the Third District, finds both vessels in fault. He revokes the licenses of Thomas Rhuark, pilot of the Louise, and of W. J. Bohannan, pilot of the Virginia.

Death by Drowning.

London special: A dispatch received here states that the Steamship Portuenz, from New York and Baltimore, for Para, founded near Anegada, one of the West India Islands. Nineteen of the crew were saved. The Captain, first and third officers, chief engineer, two stewards, boatswain, carpenter, and firemen are missing.

Many Crushed to Death.

The Schwarz building, an immense four-story brick building located at the corner of Canal and Dauphin streets, New Orleans, fell recently. It is reported that ten men were killed by the falling debris. This is one of the most crowded thoroughfares in the city.

A GANG OF MURDERERS.

Two of Whom Pay the Penalty with Their Lives.

Columbus (Ohio) special: Of the four men to be executed at the penitentiary annex Saturday between 12 and 6 a. m. Elmer Sharkey, of Preble County, a matricide, has been reprieved to September 28. Isaac Smith, of Pike County, murderer, to October 24, and Otto Leuth, the boy murderer, of Cleveland, and John, alias Brocky Smith, of Cincinnati, paid the penalty of their crimes. There has been a great demand for admission to the annex, and hundreds of people have visited the prison, though only a few have been permitted to see the condemned men. Their last day was a quiet one, spent in the reception room, separated from the other five condemned men in the annex. Leuth's crime was the murder of Maggie Thompson, an 8-year-old daughter of Jacob Thompson, of Cleveland, May 9, 1889. He enticed her into his room, attempted to rape her, but was resisted and he crushed her skull with a hatchet. He hid her body beneath the floor, where it was discovered. He was arrested and convicted December 28. Leuth is about 17, and was born in Berlin. On the night of December 9, 1889, Brockey Smith killed Mrs. Bridget Byron, of Cincinnati, an aged widow. He stabbed her in the face and neck.

ALEXANDER SULLIVAN

Transfers His Real Estate to Lawyer Trude—Another Chapter in the Cronin Case.

Chicago special: Considerable comment was indulged in over the discovery that Mr. Alexander Sullivan, one of the so-called "trianglers," had transferred his real estate to Attorney A. S. Trude. Inquiry at the Recorder's office elicited the fact that the deed for this transfer was recorded in his office about four weeks ago, but the publication of the fact was suppressed by some agency—presumably by those directly concerned, Messrs. Trude and Sullivan. It has been an open secret for several months that Trude and Sullivan had maintained relations, which made the attorney the virtual possessor of all of Sullivan's property. Whether these relations grew out of the "triangler's" alleged complicity with the Cronin murder—requiring the secret counsel of the noted criminal lawyer—was the theme of debate among those to whom this transfer became known. Sullivan's friends stoutly maintain, of course, that the transfer was only made in the exercise of common prudence, and that his property is as much his own now as before the execution of the suppressed deed. But the skeptical—including the friends of the murdered doctor—say, why select A. S. Trude under such circumstances? There is evidently another unwritten chapter of the Cronin murder.

DASTARDLY DEED!

An Attempt to Wreck a Midnight Passenger Train in New York State Frustrated.

A dastardly attempt to wreck a passenger train was made near Karners, about seven miles west of Albany, N. Y. By almost a miracle the Chicago express, heavily laden with passengers and being run at lightning speed, was brought to a stand still within twenty feet of a pile of heavy ties and railroad iron placed across the track. The attempt was made in a most systematic was, for both the switchman and a Pinkerton guard were locked up in their houses. At about five minutes of the time the train is due the switchman started to leave the shanty, but found himself a prisoner. While trying to get out he heard the thunder of the approaching train and burst the door down. As he got out the train came down at a terrific speed and then for the first time the switchman saw the pile of ties on the track. He had no time to get his lantern, but with the Pinkerton men who had gathered, got on the track and yelled. The engineer saw them and, putting on his air-brakes, reversed his lever and brought the train to a stand-still. The strikers claim that these acts are done by outside parties.

The Strike at Chicago Ended.

A special from Chicago, dated the 30th, says: To-day the collapse of every railroad strike in this city occurred, and work in the stock yards was begun in earnest at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The Chicago and Alton switchmen have recognized their mistake and have gone back to work this afternoon as a result of a conference between General Manager Chappell, Grand Master Sweeney, Vice Grand Master Downey, and a committee of the strikers The men agreed to become members of the Switchmen's Union; to be hereafter governed by its rules and by the advice of its chief; to refrain from trying to dictate to the company in the matter of hiring or promoting of its men, but with the right to appeal to the officers of the company for redress of grievances, the latter agreeing to hear such complaints in a spirit of fairness. The switchmen at the stock yards held a meeting this morning and declared the strike off, to go into effect at 1 o'clock to-day. The Lake Shore strike is virtually settled, forty-seven of the men having signed the agreement to do as ordered. This leaves about twenty whose places are being filled rapidly. Those men will not be taken back, according to Superintendent Amsden. The road is moving its freight without any inconvenience.

A Cyclone at Coldwater, Mich.

Coldwater, Mich., was visited by the most destructive cyclone ever known in that city. Two funnel-shaped clouds were seen approaching, one from the northwest and the other from the southwest, accompanied by much lightning, rain and hail. A wooden building, three stories high, belonging to the Coldwater Road Cart Company, and used for finishing road carts, buggies and wagons, was completely demolished. The watchman had just left the building before it was struck. The estimated loss on the building and materials is $10,000. A large windmill belonging to the Lake Shore Railroad west of the depot was carried over the pumphouse and thrown across the telegraph wires, leveling them. The tin roof of the two-story brick wheelbarrow factory was rolled into a mass and carried ten rods, while the roof boards and rafters were scattered eighty or one hundred rods from the building. In an orchard east of the city, trees were taken out by the roots. Hailstones as large as hen's eggs were picked up after the storm abated. Hundreds of sparrows were killed by the hail. The track of the storm was one hundred and twenty rods wide, levelling all the fences and trees in its path. It seemed to follow the storm of several weeks ago.

A Bold Bad Bandit.

Cincinnati special: A bandit masked and armed with two pistols and a Winchester rifle was at Addystown, and as H. J. Koch, cashier of the pipe company there alighted from the train with $10,300 in a satchel, accompained by private officer Joe Leacock, this hidden robber stepped out and opened fire on them, saying, "Drop that bag." They fought off the robber and escaped, the officer being badly wounded. The bandit was hunted by 600 citizens but has so far eluded capture. The contents of the valise, $10,300, was in currency and bank notes, and was intended as pay for employes of the works. When the fusillade was heard the workmen ran out pell-mell. On learning that an attempt had been made to steal their wages and murder an officer of the company they became furious, and started after the villain, fully intent on lynching him if caught. When the party reached the hill-top the highwayman was nowhere to be seen.

A Victim of Electricity.

Thomas Dew, a lineman, in the employ of the Brush Electric Company, of Cincinnati, climbed a ladder in the rear of the Caxton Printing Works, at No. 35 East Third street, for the purpose of making a service connection with the premises. With the right hand grasping his knife, the lineman reached over to cut the wire. To move was fatal. Whether the handle of the knife was imperfectly insulated or whether his fingers touched the blade is not known, but certain it is that a "circuit" was formed in which his body was a factor. The wire, the knife, his fingers and the metal fire escape afforded a perfect conductor that immediately received the entire force of the arc light wire, which was at its highest potentiality. Death was instantaneous. His lifeless body hung suspended in the air, while the horrified spectators gazed aloft. Two policemen were injured while removing the body.

Riddled with Bullets.

A San Jose S. De., Guatemala, dispatch says: Everything was prepared to capture the Revolutionist Gen. Martin Barrundia who was on board a passing American steamer. The port Captain, boarded the steamer and demanded the surrender of Barrundia from Capt. Pitts, who answered that he would deliver up the revolutionist and invited them to Barrundia's cabin. The Assistant Chief of Police, Capt. Calderon, and three officers were among those who went with the Captain to the cabin. When there Maj. Toriello made known to Barrundia that the Captain of the vessel had decided to deliver him up. Barrundia thereupon opened fire with his revolver upon the party who answered his fire. Barrundia fell riddled with bullets. His body was taken to the port Captain's office.

Murder Will Out.

Some startling discoveries have been made in the Horton case at St. Paul, Minn. County Prosecutor Egan has in his possession a letter written to Horton by a young woman in Duluth, formerly a school teacher in St. Paul. The letter implies that the woman and Horton have had improper relations and is full of very endearing terms, and contains a refusal to go with him unless he gets rid of his present family. It was within a short time before the drowning of Horton's family and shortly after the alleged drowning that the woman left Duluth hurriedly and has not been there since. Horton was arrested a week ago charged with the murder of his wife and child, who were mysteriously drowned while out in a boat with him.

No Love for Police.

Indianapolis special: J. W. Wise, a commercial traveler, was held up by footpads and robbed of $56. Officers went in search of the footpads and found that they had boarded a train and were coming into the city. The train was stopped and four men jumped off and ran. The police fired at the fleeing men and Ed. Quinlan, one of the number, was shot. He died an hour later after confessing that he was engaged in the robbery of Wise, but did not name his associates. Next morning Quinlan's father went to the morgue, and, kneeling by the body of his son, invoked the curses of Heaven on the police.

Burned to Death.

Post Huron (Mich.) special: Fire destroyed the Tunnel House, a large frame hotel at the Sarnis entrance to the St. Clair river tunnel and one of the female employees unable to make her escape from one of the rooms was burned to death. Two men who were in the house at the time cannot be found and it is feared that they also met their death in the flames. The house was a big wooden one and was occupied by the diggers and shovelers in the tunnel. It was surrounded by little houses, also filled with laborers and it is a wonder that fire didn't destroy these too.

Window Glass Combine.

It is announced at Pittsburgh that a combination of window glass manufacturers has been effected. This combination will control the output of all the window glass factories in the western and northern districts immediately, and all the factories in the United States ultimately. The object of the organization is to handle and sell all glass made by each of the factories and to regulate selling prices, thus preventing the cutting of rates. It is also proposed to have the importers of New York, Philadelphia and Boston act as the new company's agents.

Acids Poison the Water.

James W. Saulsberry, who owns valuable residence property in the western part of Anderson, Ind., has brought suit to recover $5,000 from the American wire and rod mills that recently moved there from Covington. The cause of the action lies in the fact that the offal or refuse from the wire mills, which consists of poisonous acids and lime, is turned into Green's Branch, rendering it poisonous and unfit for any purpose. This stream flows through Mr. Saulsberry's suburban estate, and detracts largely from its beauty and value.

An Ohio Flood's Dreadful Devastation.

Noble County, Ohio, was visited with the heaviest rains ever known. At East Union, on the east fork of Duck Creek, several houses were washed away. One bridge struck a dwelling house, and Rev. Stephen W. Archer, Dias Kirkbride, his wife and child, Mrs. Belle Dach and David Moorse's child were drowned. The bodies have not been recovered. Many creeks are two and a half feet higher than ever before. Many bridges are gone and the roads and bottom corn ruined. Trains were stopped on the C. & M. and B., Z. & C. railroads.

Two Young Men Drowned.

Two well-known young men were drowned in the east lake of Garfield Park, at Chicago, in full view of hundreds of persons. They were out together in one of the park row boats and in changing seats capsized the boat, precipitating them into the water. One of them went down and never came up, the other struggled to the surface, where he remained for a moment, clutching wildly at the boat, but sank before assistance could reach him. Both bodies were recovered.

Fifteen Ponies Killed.

A Lake Shore train struck a herd of Texas ponies belonging to the Hostetter brothers, near Millersburg, Ind., and, though killing fifteen outright and wounding nine others, never left the track. The carnage was frightful, the engine being covered with blood clear to the cab windows. The Texas pony can do about as it pleases with anything except a railroad train. The loss to Messrs. Hostetter Bros., from killed and wounded animals, will be about $2,000.

Tore His Tongue Out.

"Your money or your life" was the demand which met Samuel Francis while walking in the eastern portion of Altoona, Pa. It came from footpads, and when Francis made a desperate resistance he was brutally assaulted and left to die. His tongue was wrenched from its root in the attempt to keep him quiet, and his condition, when he crawled to a neighboring house, unable to speak, was pitiable. He may recover. A large sum of money was taken from him.

A Fireman Killed.

Charles Cook, a Baltimore and Ohio fireman, met a horrible death at Avilla, Ind. As the train was nearing town he started to walk over the cars, and while upon a particularly high foreign car he struck an overhead-bridge, the rear part of his skull was crushed to a jelly and death was instantaneous. He was 35 years of age, and lived at Defiance, O.

Engineer and Fireman Killed.

A serious accident occurred a few miles from Shawnee, O., on the C. S. and H., Railroad by which engineer Edward Hill and fireman John Scanlon were instantly killed. The accident was caused by the engine jumping the track at a curve. Hill's body was taken to his home, at New Concord on a special train.

Seven Workmen Crushed in a Cellar.

The cellar of a brewery in Stoetteriz, Saxony, in which a number of men were at work, collapsed burying sixteen of the workmen. Of these seven were killed and the remainder were severely injured.

Revolting Scene at an Execution.

A revolting scene was witnessed in the jail at Birmingham, Ala., when Frederick Davis, who was sentenced to death for the murder of his wife, was executed. His head was half torn from his shoulders by the drop, and the windpipe and cartoid artery were severed, and blood spurted all over the scaffold. The hangman explained that the unusual occurrence was the result of the fact that Davis was a man with a long neck, in consequence of which he said the man was given a six-foot drop.

The Erie Gets It.

Six deeds from W. P. Fishback to Charles Carter and others, transferring the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad, have been filed in the Recorder's office at Huntington, Ind. A mortgage for $12,000,000 to secure the payment of 4 per cent. gold bonds, payable in 1892 and a mortgage to secure income mortgage temporary bonds to the amount of $10,000,000 have also been filed. This completes the transfer of the road to the Erie.

Seven Boys Blown to Atoms.

A number of boys were playing on the field near Hemmerstein, Prussia, formerly used for military maneuvers, when they found some cartridges and thrust them into a bonfire to heard them explode. The cartridges proved more powerful than the boys expected. A frightful series of explosions occurred and seven of the boys were so badly injured by the flying fragments that they died soon after.

Lightning Rod Agent Arrested.

Logansport (Ind.) special: Eugene Fisher, accompanied by officers, arrived here from LaGrange County in search of Frank Gillian, a lightning rod agent. Gillian was found at the colored picnic held here eating ice cream, and was arrested. Fisher gave his note to Gillian for $30, and also $25 in money for putting lightning rods on his house. Gillian is charged with raising it to $300. He sold it and then left the county.

Three Men Killed.

Lake Shore passenger train No. 14 struck a beer wagon at the Hoyt avenue crossing, Cleveland. The wagon contained Rhinehart Snyder, Fred Dooley, and Michael Daley. The wagon was carried over three hundred feet and the men were all killed instantly. Freight cars obstructed the view of the track, their position being a direct violation of the city ordinance. The engine was badly damaged.

Fate of the Peacemaker.

Joseph Specht, of Grape Creek, Ill., who bears the reputation of being a hard drinker and a wife-beater, was administering the usual discipline upon his wife when a neighbor, David Wilson, appeared on the scene and knocked Specht down. Specht ran into his house, grabbed a shotgun, and filled Wilson's side full of shot. The physician pronounced the wound severe but not fatal.

Killed by a Saloonkeeper.

John M. Chenowith, a saloonkeeper, shot and killed Richard T. Carroll, of Carroll & Carroll, wholesale liquor dealers, of San Francisco and, then blew his own brains out. Chenowith had disputed a bill, and while Carroll was going over his ledger Chenowith walked behind him and shot him in the head. Carroll was prominent in business and politics. He leaves a large family.

Murdered for Money.

William Quigley, a wealthy old farmer living near Grand Rapids, Mich., was attacked by two tramps, who sandbagged him so severely that he died. The murderers secured $70 and escaped. He recovered consciousness long enough to state the circumstances, but the men have not been captured.

Fatal Gasoline Explosion.

At Hamilton, Ohio, Miss Ida Giroerer, a beautiful young lady of 19 years, was filling a gasoline reservoir when the oil ignited and exploded. The young lady was frightfully burned about the face and body, every thread of clothing on her person being consumed. After suffering untold agony she died.

Fatally Caught.

Phineas Devill, a switchman in the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern yards, at Elkhart, Ind., caught a foot in a frog, and before he could free himself was struck by an engine and killed. He came from Tecumseh recently, was a printer by trade and leaves a wife and two children.

Loss of Life.

Six more villages in Southern Hungary have been burned. This fearful destruction by fire is due to the dryness of the buildings, caused by a long season of torrid weather. Twelve persons lost their lives recently during the burning of Mezoo-Keresztes.

Killed His Daughter.

Ace Madison, living near Brownsville, Edmonston County, Ky., shot and killed his 16-year old daughter. No cause for the deed is known. Madison fled, but is pursued, and will probably be lynched when captured.

The Sons of Veterans.

The ninth national encampment of the Sons of Veterans closed one of its most successful meetings at St. Joseph, Mo. Minneapolis was chosen as the place of holding the next national encampment.

Labor Day.

Labor day was generally celebrated throughout the country.

A LENGTHY PLATFORM.

ADOPTED BY THE STATE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Full Text of the Resolutions—Joseph A. S. Mitchell Nominated for Supreme Judge—Other Nominees of the Convention for the Less Important Offices.

Ex-Gov. Gray presided over the State Democratic Convention which met at Indianapolis on Thursday, the 28th ult. Thirteen hundred delegates answered to their names.

On the second ballot Claude Matthews, a farmer of Vermillion County, was nominated for Secretary of State.

There was no opposition to Judge Joseph A. S. Mitchell as a candidate for Supreme Judge, and he was nominated by acclamation.

There were three candidates for Auditor of State—J. O. Henderson of Kokomo, James S. Laselle of Washington, and George S. Green of Mount Vernon. Henderson was nominated on the first ballot.

The hardest fight of the day occurred when the balloting for a candidate for Treasurer of State began. The candidates were P. H. McCormach of Columbus, Albert Gall of Indianapolis, Thomas B. Byrnes of Evansville, James R. Slack of Huntington, and Henry C. Berghoff of Fort Wayne, who seemed to have about equal strength. Gall was nominated on the fourth ballot, the vote being as follows: Gall, 688; Byrnes, 476; Berghoff, 134; Slack, 5.

There were two candidates for Attorney General—Green Smith and James McCabe. Smith was nominated, receiving 787½ votes, against 515½ for McCabe.

For Clerk of the Supreme Court Alexander Sweney of Huntingburg was nominated on the second ballot. H. A. Voorhees of Johnson County was chosen as the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction. William A. Peelle, Jr., for State Statistician, and S. S. Garby for State Geologist, were nominated by acclamation. The committee on resolutions, of which S. E. Morse, editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel, was Chairman, reported the following platform, which was adopted with unanimity:

We, the Democracy of Indiana, in convention assembled for the first time since the memorable contest in 1888, when we went down in defeat, but not in dishonor, overcome by the shameless methods of Dudleyism and the "blocks of five," do solemnly declare that the electoral vote of Indiana was obtained for Harrison and Morton by the most flagrant crimes against the ballot-box ever perpetrated in an American commonwealth; that these crimes were committed under the direct auspices of William Wade Dudley, then and now Treasurer of the National Republican Committee, and by the procurement and connivance of Republican leaders in this State and in the nation; that the administration of Benjamin Harrison has made itself an accessory after the fact to these crimes by shielding the criminals from punishment and even by rewarding them for their knavery; and that the brazen prostitution of the machinery of the Federal Court of the District of Indiana by its judge and attorney to the protection of these conspirators against the suffrage constitutes the most infamous chapter in the judicial annals of the Republic. The Federal Court of Indiana has decided that advising and organizing bribery is not a crime. We appeal from this decision to the people of Indiana, and we demand a verdict against William A. Woods and the miscreants whom he saved from legal punishment.

We denounce the administration of Benjamin Harrison for its deliberate abandonment of civil-service reform; for its use of Cabinet positions and other high stations in payment of financial campaign debts; for creating the public patronage as a family appendage, instead of a public trust, and quartering a host of relatives, by blood and by marriage, upon the National Treasury; for dismissing honest and competent public servants in violation of solemn pledges, because of their political opinions, and filling their places with men devoid of character or capacity, and whose only title to preferment rested upon disreputable partisan work; for its dalliance with questionable gift enterprises; for its complete subservience to Wall street and the money power, and its undisguised hostility or indifference to the rights and interests of the producing and laboring classes.

We denounce the tariff monopolists for their efforts to perpetuate themselves in power by measures inconsistent with free institutions and good morals. We find in the force election bills, the bills creating rotten borough States, and the McKinley tariff bill the open manifestations of a gigantic conspiracy of the minority to oppress a groaning people with additional burdens of taxation for private benefits, and to fasten it on the country in such a way that the people cannot free themselves from the galling load.

We condemn the Republican party for the deliberate theft of two seats in the Senate of the United States from the people of Montana; for degrading the House of Representatives from a deliberative body into a one-man despotism under the false and hypocritical pretense of expediting the public business; for unseating legally elected representatives of the people in order to strengthen a partisan majority which was originally a product of fraud; for trampling upon the rights of the minority in this regard, as well of justice and decency as of parliamentary usage and the plain requirements of the Constitution, and for reckless prodigality in appropriations, which has converted the surplus accumulated under the wise, frugal, and statesman-like administration of Grover Cleveland into a deficit of alarming dimensions, involving in the near future a further heavy increase of the people's burdens.

We denounce the force election bill, which has passed the House and has the active support of the administration, as revolutionary and unconstitutional. It strikes down home rule and local self-government, suggests and encourages fraudulent elections, and provides the machinery to accomplish dishonest returns and false certificates of election; fosters sectionalism and bayonet rule where every interest of the people invites to peace, fraternity, and unity; outrages the traditions and customs of a century by giving life tenure to partisan returning boards; makes the legislative and executive branches depenent upon the judiciary, and converts the judiciary into an instrument of oppression and corruption; involves the unnecessary expenditure of millions of the people's money, and in Indiana nullifies the Andrews election law pass passed by the last Legislature over the determined opposition of the Republicans. We declare that interference of any kind by the Federal Government with State elections is a dangerous menace to the form of government bequeathed us by the framers of the Constitution, and that the intelligence and patriotism of the American people may safely be trusted to remedy any evils that may exist in our elections.

We denounce the McKinley tariff bill as the most outrageous measure of taxation ever proposed in the American Congress. It will increase taxes upon the necessaries of life and reduce taxes upon the luxuries. It will make life harder for every farmer and wage-earner in the land in order that the profits of monopolies and trusts may be swelled. It affords no relief whatever to the agricultural interests of the country, already staggered under the heavy burdens of protection; in the words of James G. Blaine, "it will not open a market for a single bushel of wheat or a single barrel of pork." We are opposed to legislation which compels Indiana farmers to pay bounties to the sugar-planters and silk-growers of other States. We are opposed to class legislation of every kind, to subsidized bounties of every description and in every disguise. We are in favor of that measure of commercial freedom proposed by Grover Cleveland, which would benefit the farmers and laborers of the entire country, instead of that limited measure of so-called reciprocity offered by Mr. Blaine, which would benefit only a few Eastern manufacturers. So long as the Goverment depends for support in any degree upon a tariff we demand that it be levied for revenue only, and as far as possible upon the luxuries of the rich instead of the necessaries of the masses.

We denounce the silver bill, so-called, recently enacted, as an ignominious surrender to the money power. It perpetuates the demonetization of silver and the single gold standard, whereas the interests of the people require the complete remonetization of silver and its restoration to perfect equality with gold in our coinage. We demand the free and unrestricted coinage of silver upon the basis existing prior to 1873.

We are in favor, as we always have been, of a just and liberal pension system. We denounce the Republican party for making pledges to the veterans in 1888 which have not been redeemed and were not intended to be redeemed, and we warn them against further attempts at deception from the same quarter.

We are rejoiced at the evidences of an awakening of the farmers of the country to the necessity of organized efforts to better their own condition and protect themselves against unjust legislation and oppressive administration. We invite attention to the fact that the farmers are demanding in substance the same measure of relief which the Democratic party has been advocating for years, but has not had the power to enact, and that the surest and speediest way of obtaining this relief is to restore the Democracy to power in every department of the Government.

We demand legislation prohibiting aliens from acquiring lands in America, and for the forfeiture of titles to the 20,742,000 acres of our public lands now held by them. We favor the election of United States Senators by the people. We indorse most heartily the legislation of the General Assembly of 1889. We applaud the election reform laws, and pledge ourselves to their support and full enforcement. We applaud the school text-book laws by which the people are given school books at one-half the former price. We favor such additional legislation as will give full effect to the objects of this act and will extend its scope as far as practicable. We pledge ourselves to resist every attempt of the school-book trust to regain its old control over our township trustees and county superintendents. We applaud the bill for county farmers' institutes, and pledge ourselves to countenance and extend that valuable means of universal instruction in agricultural science.

We applaud the state board of charities law, and commend the excellent work done by that board in improving the condition and methods of our benevolent reformatory institutions. The creation of our splendid system of public charities, and their honest and efficient management, constitutes one of the strongest titles of the Indiana Democracy to popular confidence and support. We applaud the law for funding the school debt, by which the State is saved annually $120,000 in interest, and nearly $4,000,000 has been distributed to the counties to be loaned to the people at 6 per cent interest. We denounce the conspiracy of certain Republican State officials and newspapers to destroy the State's credit for partisan purposes, by disseminating false statements as to her financial condition and resources. Indiana is not bankrupt. Her taxes are low and her debt is not oppressive, and for every dollar of it she has more than value received in the great public institutions—a fact which speaks volumes for Democratic integrity, economy, and efficiency.

The State debt obligations should not be hawked over the country, but should be made a popular domestic security, issued direct to the people of the State in bonds of small denominations, drawing a low rate of interest and non-taxable, that the interest paid may remain at home and the securities may be safe investment for trust funds and the people's savings.

We demand the adoption of a system of equalizing the appraisement of real and personal property in this State, to the end that an equal and proper uniformity in such assessments shall be secured, for the reason that under existing regulations many counties are compelled to pay an unjust proportion of the State's expenses, while others as unjustly escape. We applaud the eight-hour law, the law to prevent "black-listing," the law prohibiting "pluck-me" stores, the laws for the protection of miners, the law preventing the importation of Pinkerton detectives, and the repeal of the Republican intimidation law of 1881 as manifestations of the steadfast friendship of the Democratic party to the workingmen. We point to these laws as evidence that our friendship to American labor is not confined to words alone. We denounce the employment of the Pinkertons by a railroad corporation in New York in the pending contest with its employes, and hold it to be the duty of State and local officers everywhere to prevent such usurpation by capital of the police powers of the State.

We are in favor of arbitration as the only just and fair method of settling labor controversies, and we demand of the next Legislature the passage of a law creating a permanent tribunal of arbitration for that purpose. We insist that labor has as good a right to organize in self-protection as capital, and that labor organizations should be placed on a perfect equality before the law with organizations of capital known as corporations.

We favor the just and equitable apportionment of the school revenues of the State. We favor the total abandonment of the system of fees and perquisites in the payment of State and county officers, and we demand the enactment of a law by the next Legislature fixing fair salaries for all public officials, the same to go into effect as soon as practicable. Judges Coffey, Berkshire and Olds, Republican members of the Supreme Bench, deserve the contempt of the people of Indiana for their action in overturning the settled construction of the Constitution, reversing all legal precedents and contradicting their own rulings for the sake of a few petty offices and at the dictation of unscrupulous political tricksters.

While we heartily indorse, and shall always uphold, maintain, and foster at any cost, our system of public schools for the free instruction of all who choose to make use of them, we are unalterably opposed to all attempts to regulate by law the course of study in any private or parochial school, and we deprecate and denounce any interference on the part of the State in the management of schools maintained by citizens at their own expense as an arbitrary, despotic, and intolerable encroachment upon private rights. We favor legislation for establishing and preserving the township libraries of the State of Indiana as invaluable adjuncts of our common school system.

We heartily indorse the course of Daniel W. Voorhees and David Turpie in the United States Senate, and we commend them for their able and brilliant advocacy of Democratic principles and their vigilant defense of the public interests against the assaults of plutocracy and monopoly. We also indorse the course of Indiana's ten Democratic Representatives in Congress.

A Family Cold Storage and Ice Maker.

The world must be ready to use an invention before it can be made of any immediate value. When Reis invented the telephone in 1859, the world was not ready for it and he died in want. A dozen other men improved the instrument and reached results by varying methods, but Bell gets the thing on the market just in time to reap the commercial rewards from its use, although he is no more the inventor of that useful instrument than he is of the doctrine of infant baptism. The time has come, we believe, when the world needs another invention in the shape of an ice-making machine for families. Power can so easily be transmitted now by wire that in city houses a refrigerating machine for families might be run in every well-regulated household. We could then have pure ice and cold storage. Even if the cost is double, or triple, what it now is for refrigerators, people would gladly adopt and buy the new device, and it would be built into all new houses.—Pullman (Ill.) Journal.

THE Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has successfully experimented with an apparatus which consists of an electric circuit formed by a single iron rod, which is laid between the tracks and a wire brush attached to each engine, in connection with an electric gong and telephone. Two engines approaching each other on the same track come into circuit at the distance of a mile or two, according to the strength of the battery, and at once the telephone begins to ring. This is a signal for the trains to stop, and the engineers may talk with each other by means of the telephone and discover the trouble, whatever it is. In this way a collision is prevented.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—Gist of the Business.

IN the Senate the proposition offered on the previous day fixing a day for taking the vote on the tariff bill was agreed to on the 26th. The conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill was agreed to. The tariff bill was then taken up, the question being on the lead paragraph, to which Mr. Coke had offered an amendment to make the lead extracted from silver ores free of duty, and Mr. Plumb had offered one reducing the duty on lead ore and lead dross from one and one-half cents to three-quarters of a cent. Before proceeding with that paragraph Mr. Plumb gave notice of an amendment to the bill, which he would offer at the appropriate time. The amendment was read. It is, with some few modifications, the bill for reciprocity with Canada, introduced by Mr. Butterworth in the House of Representatives. Senator Plumb proposes to restrict the operation of the reciprocal arrangement to manufactured articles and minerals. In the House the entire day was spent in wrangling over parliamentary questions. The delay was caused by the opponents of the compound-lard bill, who resorted to dilatory tactics to keep the bill from coming to a vote

THE feature of the tariff debate in the Senate on the 27th was the speech of Senator Cush Davis, of Minnesota, in favor of reciprocity with South American countries. He spoke of the general impression that the country was entering upon an era of unexampled material prosperity, and said that the renewal of prosperity was largely the result of wise legislation enacted (the silver bill) and to be enacted (the tariff bill). He thought that the tariff bill should be amended in the direction of reciprocity so as to secure American farmers' trade with foreign nations, especially with South America, Central America, Mexico, and the West India Islands. But there was one item in the bill of extraordinary importance to the people of Minnesota: that was the item of binding twine. In his opinion that article should go on the free list and should be subject to no duty or tax whatever. The matter affected the farmers of every State in the Union. It affected the people of Minnesota to the amount of nearly a million dollars a year. The entire business, including the sources from which that commodity was supplied, was governed by a combination of all, or substantially all, the manufacturers of cordage and binding twine. They were in no need of protection. They were amply able to protect themselves and to spoliate the world. They were amenable to the law against trusts, and certainly the Senate should not legislate in favor of men under the ban of outlawry. The House spent the entire day again in wrangling over parliamentary points.

THE long-expected reciprocity amendments to the tariff bill were introduced in the Senate on the 28th by Senator Aldrich. The vital one relates to sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides. It is set forth in the declaratory statement that the object is reciprocity. The President is not given any wide discretionary powers, for he simply carries out the direction of Congress in imposing certain duties on specified articles at a given time—July 1, 1891—if countries having the benefit of the United States markets do not reciprocate. The only thing left to his judgment is the time of this suspension, and that is a necessary discretion. The sugar duties are set forth in detail in the amendment in order to prevent any ambiguity. The time given the various countries to open up their markets is shorter than has been heretofore talked about. Assuming that the tariff bill will be in effect Oct. 1, it would be nine months. The relation of sugar to reciprocity is still to be determined. The second amendment in relation to fish is purely retaliatory and is aimed at Canada. In the House, after four days of filibustering, the bill regulating the manufacture and sale of compound lard was passed, 126 to 31. The House also passed the bill establishing the eight-hour day on all Government works.

MR. BLAIR presented in the Senate on the 29th, a memorial of the Women's National Industrial League for the suppression and punishment of the "armed assassins known as the Pinkerton detectives." Referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Edmunds offered the following concurrent resolution, which went over for the present: Resolved, That when the two houses adjourn the 29th of September, 1890, it be to meet the 19th of November, 1890. House bill authorizing the erection of a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River, between the City of St. Charles and the County of St. Louis, in Missouri, was reported by Mr. Vest, and passed without amendment. In the House, the first bill considered was that which has been pending for the last sixteen weeks—the omnibus Southern war-claims bill. Mr. Thomas (Wis.), who had objected to its passage on the ground that some of the claimants were disloyal, offered a substitute, striking out the objectionable features, and by unanimous consent it was agreed to. The bill carries about $530,000.

WHEN the tariff bill was taken up in the Senate on the 30th, the pending question was on Mr. Carlisle's motion to strike out the wool paragraphs (357 to 369), so as to place wool on the free list. Mr. Daniel addressed the Senate in support of the amendment. Mr. Hawley replied to some of Mr. Daniel's allusions to Connecticut agriculture, and reminded him that the tendency of populations toward towns and cities was common in all states and nations. The effects of that tendency were modified by keeping up the manufactures, without which the population of Connecticut would be reduced. He was convinced that there were more landholders in Connecticut now than there used to be. The land was increasing in value, and the population of the State had grown since the census of 1880 by 118,000. The money in savings banks (a fair indication) was growing year by year. The vote was then taken and Mr. Carlisle's motion to strike out all the wool paragraphs was rejected—yeas, 17; nays, 27—a strict party vote, although Mr. Payne, if present, would have voted, Mr. Sherman said, in the negative. The bill introduced last June by Judge Gest, providing for the adjustment of accounts of workingmen, laborers, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, was passed by the House. The intention of the bill is to secure to employes of the Government pay for time they have been required to work in excess of eight hours a day since the passage of the eight-hour law, June 25, 1868.

COME.

BY EMILIE CLARE.

Come when the twilight has gems in her hair,
And the pale crescent shines on her brow—
When the hawthorn has shadows surpassingly fair,
And the roses and lilies impregnate the air
That speeds on your passionate vow.

Come when the fire-fly's lamp is aglow,
And the wood-pigeon wooes in the grove,
When the apple-tree blossoms a carpet of snow
Shall make for our feet a pathway to go,
As we whisper the sweet words of love.
